If my position be right in regard to the design of the Sabbath; that is, that it was a "sign" to "the children of Israel" "throughout their generations"; then the origin of the Sabbath has nothing to do with the particular point now under consideration, and we need not multiply words about the question whether it had its origin at the creation, or at the time of the Israelites coming out of Egypt. For be it remembered, that my point is this;—that the seventh-day Sabbath being a sign, or type, it was only to be observed by a people under types and shadows; and the Gentiles not being a typical people, they are not required to keep the typical Sabbath; although it is their duty, as the duty of all christians, to keep a Sabbath, as I have already stated. Before I close I intend fully to prove that the day for us to observe is "the first day of the week."

"MINISTRATION OF DEATH WRITTEN AND ENGRAVEN IN STONES"—"DONE AWAY."

Can there be any law without a penalty? If, then, the penalty be changed, then is the law abrogated, or "done away." But those who contend for the seventh-day Sabbath, are obliged to take the position, that the moral law as contained in the decalogue, or "ten commandments," which was written on tables of stone, is now in full force.

Death was the penalty for violating the law of the Sabbath. As we said—

"Six days may work be done; but in the seventh day is the Sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work on the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death."—Ex. 31: 15; and again;—"Six days shall work be done; but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a Sabbath of rest to the Lord: whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death. Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the Sabbath day."—Ex. 35: 2, 3.

Is this penalty now in force? No one dare say it is. If they do, then let them go without "FIRE"! (?) on the Sabbath, or else let them be put to "DEATH" on Sunday, the first day of the week! If, then, the penalty is "done away," or abrogated; then the law is also "done away," or abrogated, which required the penalty. But those who contend for observing the Sabbath according to "the letter" of the law, advocate "death," even until now. If they ask why? I answer, "The letter killeth." Shall we advocate "life"? or "death"? Life, certainly, says the advocate for the seventh-day Sabbath. Then be consistent, and yield to the "able ministers of the New Testament," and follow the spirit, and not the letter; "for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life"; as the apostle says:—"God" "hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away; how shall not the ministration of the spirit be rather glorious? For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth. For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious."—2 Cor. 3: 6-11.

What distraction and "division" those are guilty of, who "preach another gospel," as those certainly do who advocate the following of the "letter" as "written and engraven on stones"; instead of advocating the following of the "spirit." "For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious. Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech" (2 Cor. 3: 11, 12); and say with the apostle:—

"But there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."—Gal. 1: 7, 9.

And why will not men take heed, and follow the "spirit" instead of the "letter"? For if any one follow the "letter," he will surely "be ACCURSED," for the "LETTER KILLETH"!! And the apostle would even denounce "an angel from heaven" with a curse, if he should "preach another gospel"! My "great plainness of speech" must be continued so as to say:—"Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them."—Rom. 16: 17.

Did the apostle ever advocate the "doctrine" of "the seventh-day Sabbath"? Never. Then those who do advocate it, do so "contrary to the doctrine" which the apostle preached; and therefore, if man, or "an angel from heaven," "cause divisions" contrary to the apostle's "doctrine," let them "be accursed"! Thus saith the Scriptures.

MIDDLE WALL OF PARTITION BROKEN DOWN!

Are christians, under the gospel dispensation, required to go back to the law by which "the commonwealth of Israel" were once to be governed? Or are they to come forward; and thus, by reason of Christ, who "is our peace," be "made both one"? Or in other words,—was "the middle wall of partition" "broken down" that the Gentiles might go in where the Jews had been! (?) or were the Jews to come out where the Gentiles were? May all give audience, and let the apostle Paul once more speak:—

Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands; that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world: but now, in Christ Jesus, ye who sometime were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby: and came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit."—Eph. 2: 11-22.

Yes! thank the Lord Jesus, "we are builded together for an habitation of God THROUGH THE SPIRIT," (verse 22), and not through the "letter," or the law. For "the law worketh wrath," or "death," but the "Spirit" worketh "peace," or "life." And thus we greatly rejoice, that Christ Jesus hath "abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, SO MAKING PEACE." (Eph. 2: 15.)

In my next, I propose to treat upon the subject of the "Moral Law!"

For the World's Crisis.

AN AGED PILGRIM.

BRO. GRANT:—I take this opportunity to announce to you, and the readers of the Crisis, that in my travels a few days since, I called on a widowed lady whose faith and acts show that she is worthy of the above caption; about a century old, and retains her reason well,—is now a devoted disciple of Jesus, and remembers distinctly the "dark day" of May 19th, 1780, and believes that phenomenon was a sign of the final dissolution of all things earthly. She reads many religious books, and wishes she could have the Crisis (after learning that there was such a paper in being), and accordingly I send you her name and P. O. address. Now will some one, who has an abundance of this world's goods, send a dollar or two to the Crisis office, and have the paper sent without delay.

Your Bro. in Christ, A. W. SIBLEY.

[We will send it.—ED.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, February 23, 1864.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are very much encouraged and cheered by the rapid increase of our subscription list. It is evident that many of our readers are at work with a will to obtain new subscribers. We received nearly one hundred last week, and many very encouraging letters, which afford us much comfort, and which we should be pleased to publish, that our friends might share in our consolation; but we forbear, lest some should think they were put in the paper to gratify a love of praise. Allow us to say to those who write such encouraging epistles, that they are to us, in our toilsome labors, like good oil upon machinery,—we "run easier."

THE TRACT FUND.

Dear brethren and sisters, we are thankful to see such an increase of interest in raising the two-thousand-dollar Tract Fund." Come, let us push this matter worthy of its importance. There is a great call for tracts. Shall the hungry poor be supplied? Let us not "sow sparingly." We have reason to thank the Lord for the anxiety that is awakened in the minds of the people to read. Shall they be supplied? We think we hear a most hearty response from north, south, east, and west, saying, "The means shall not be wanting." Come, then, let us fill up the measure at once,—fill it full. Let us give liberally, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

WAR BEGUN IN EUROPE.

War has commenced in Europe, and who can tell the result? It has opened between Denmark and Germany, Russia and Austria are opposed to Denmark, and England feels under obligation to help the Danes. Napoleon is looking on with deep interest, watching each movement, as a cat would a company of rats and mice, that she soon intends to devour.

Affairs are so complicated in European politics, that we may expect the whole Eastern Continent will become involved before the termination of the war; indeed, it may continue till the coming of Jesus. Events are ripening fast. All things are converging to the grand focal point, where earth's future King will commence his everlasting reign. Let us be ready for his appearing.

QUESTIONS.

BRO. GRANT:—1. If soul means "the whole being" or "person," what disposition do you make of 1 Thess. 5: 23, where three elements of man are distinctly stated?

2. Is there not a distinction made between soul and body in Matt. 10: 28? How do you reconcile this?

3. When Abraham died, "He gave up the ghost and died, and was gathered unto his people." "Was gathered to his people." Can this be true if the whole man went down to the grave, as he was not buried with his people by natural descent? See Isaac's death, Gen. 35: 29, and Jacob's death, Gen. 49: 32, described about the same as Abraham's. How do we reconcile this in the light of the unconscious state of the dead?

4. In Matt. 4: 4, are not two natures in man taught by implication?

5. How are we to reconcile phrases, "Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched," in Mark 9: 44, etc., with the soul-destruction doctrine?

Please answer. We want light.

Upper Sandusky, O., Jan. 13th, 1864.

ANSWERS.

1. The word soul is used in three senses in the Bible. Firstly, to represent the entire man, or any living creature upon the earth, in the air, or sea. The word nephesh, rendered soul in the Old Testament, is applied to beasts in the first chapter of Genesis, before the creation of man, and used to represent the entire animal. See Gen. 1: 21, 24, where the word translated creature is nephesh.

The first time the word is applied to man is in Gen. 2: 7, where it is rendered soul, and signifies the whole man. This is a common use of the word. We read in 1 Peter 3: 20, "That . . . eight souls were saved by water;" that is, eight persons were saved in Noah's ark. In Rev. 16: 3, we read, "Every living soul died in the sea." Here we find in the last revelation to man, as in the first, that the animals in the sea are called living souls."

Secondly. The term soul is used to represent life. The word nephesh is thus rendered one hundred and twenty times in the Old Testament, and is thus applied to both man and beast. It is first applied to beasts in this sense, in Gen. 1: 20, 31. The corresponding Greek word (psukee) is rendered life forty times out of the one hundred and five where the original word occurs in the New Testament.

Thirdly. The words rendered soul are used to represent a state of mind. When thus employed, they are rendered, "desire," "lust," "appetite," &c.

With these facts before us, we proceed to examine the texts proposed in the foregoing questions. The first is in 1 Thess. 5: 23.—"I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless." It should be remarked that soul and spirit are not used interchangeably, in the Bible to represent the same thing. But what does soul mean in this passage? It is not used in its primary sense to represent the whole man. Then it must be used in the second or third sense.

Wakefield, an able translator, renders it, —"may your spirit and life and body be kept entire and blameless." Mace renders it, "May every part of you" be thus kept. We understand the text to teach that not only the physical powers, but the mental and passional; all our desires, appetites and feelings, should be consecrated to the Lord.

2. We say yes, in answer to the second inquiry. The "Emphatic Diaglott," a valuable translation, renders the word life, which we think gives the true idea. The "soul and body" of the wicked are not destroyed in the gehenna fire till after the judgment, which is "in the world to come;" consequently, the psukee or life, that men cannot kill, is the one given to the saints at the resurrection from the dead, in the world to come.

3. We see no difficulty in the third inquiry. One point is clear,—the one that "DIED in a good old age" was the real Abraham, and the one that "was gathered to his people." The expression "gave up the ghost," signifies literally he "expired," or died.

When men die and are laid away in their graves, they are said to be in sheol, which signifies the common receptacle of all the dead; hence he was gathered to his people who had died before him, and were lying in sheol. We do not see it necessary that he should be buried in the same grave, or the same lot, or even the same country, to fulfill that Scripture.

The Septuagint reads, "And Abram failing died in a good old age, an old man and full of days, and was added to his people. And Isaac and Ishmael his sons buried him in the double cave." At his death, he was added to the rest of the dead of his people, who were resting in sheol, the grave,

4. We do not see it. The passage reads as follows:—"Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." But suppose "two natures" were implied, or even clearly expressed, that would not prove that each man was composed of two men. The nature of a man is not a being, any more than is pain, love or joy. When we say a man has a evil nature, we do not mean a man in him, but a characteristic of the man. There is nothing said in the Bible about two natures," rather than one, or three, or four.

5. In answer to the fifth inquiry, we would say the fact that the fire is "unquenchable," and the worm undying, is very positive proof that whatever is cast into such a fire, must of necessity be burnt up, or else not at all affected by the fire. But the Scriptures affirm the wicked shall "BURN UP," and they shall be left, "neither root nor branch;" hence they must become "extinct," as declared in the Bible.

OUR COUNTRY; WHAT IS TO BECOME OF IT?

Under the above heading, we find one of the most sensible articles we have seen on the subject. It is in the Western Recorder, of Feb. 13th, 1864, published at Louisville, Ky. We take the following extract from the article. He says:—

"It is a pet notion with many to set this country forward as the true Israel. This ingenious perversion of the Holy Scriptures is for the purpose of flattering our people with the hopes and promises made to Israel. But there is another side to the appropriation. If we are Israel, we must expect Israel's judgments and desolations. And, whether we will or not, God seems to have taken us at our word, and to be be resolved to deal with us accordingly."

He then goes on to speak of the political corruptions of our country, and when referring to our moral basis, says:—

"The religious aspects of the Declaration of Independence are essentially deistic. It was written by a sceptic; it knows nothing of Christ, under whose supreme rule every thing must come in order to be abiding; and it acknowledges no relations to God which Jews, Turks, and infidels may not alike subscribe. The Constitution of the United States, lauded as our sublimest earthly hope, knows absolutely nothing of God, or Christ, or Providence. It is entirely atheistic. The spirit which the pilgrim fathers brought with them was about as intolerant as that from which they fled. The enlargement of our territory, in whose vastness and wealth our orators so much glory, has been effected, in a considerable measure, by the butchery or forcible ejectment of its former proprietors. The deepest principle upon which the whole machinery of our Government is built is a theological falsehood,—a Pelagian heresy. It assumes that the majority of men are pure, intelligent, right-minded, virtuous, and governed by reason and truth; which is contrary to all Scripture, experience, and fact. And the framework of our institutions, in general, is subversive of the divine order, and embraces all the elements of apostasy from God, and ultimate self-destruction.

That man must be blind indeed, or have radically erroneous ways of estimating political and national virtue, not to perceive what corruption and decay have been going on for the last twenty years in every department of our government, executive, judicial, and popular. There is not a single stability of virtue which our politicians, or their adherents, will not sacrifice, the moment they believe they can thereby secure their selfish ends unpunished. The most positive promises, the most unequivocal professions, and all the binding solemnities of an oath, are as nothing upon the consciences of the great mass of our public men. Their highest aims are distinction, power, and plunder. Even the churches, and the so-called Benevolent Societies themselves, are not free from the workings of this unholy spirit; and the activity of many of them has no other spring than that which animates the common demagogue. "We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen." The whole moral stamina of the nation, public and private, political, commercial, social, and ecclesiastical, is fearfully diseased and weakened.

The ministry and churches are powerless against the incoming tide of evil and defection; whilst too many, who should be serving as watchmen, are sleeping at their stations, eating and drinking with the drunken, or expending their energies in augmenting the ills which require to be expelled. Vain is the help of man in such a state of things as this. Nor have we any promise of a favorable change whilst the present dispensation lasts. On the contrary, inspiration assures us that "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." (2 Tim. 3: 13.) For what, then, can we hope but continued decay, judgment, and ruin?

We tremble, therefore, for our country, and are filled with sorrow at the convictions which force themselves upon us and cry for utterance. It is no joy to us to contemplate the end to which this land, in which our fathers lived and died, is inevitably drifting. But we are persuaded, and this we would have all our people ponder well, that it is not in the nature of our government, nor in accordance with the established movements of God's administrations among men, nor agreeable to the true philosophy of Providence, nor conformable to the plainly revealed nature and course of the present pregnant times, for our country to have the outcome from the disturbances, depressions, and moral defections that have seized upon it, which our leaders and misguided divines so fondly predict. God help us! We can hear no other testimony.

Still, we are not comfortless. We have hopes and consolations far higher than any which may seem to lie in the path of mere human progress and development. They are not built upon our country, the excellence of its Constitution, the integrity of its Union, the strength of its resources, the piety of its people, the reform of its adminstrations, or upon any thing that can come out of it. "The governments and kingdoms of this world are but the organized dominion of human apostasy from God;" and nothing fit to be reposed in is to be expected from them. God will overrule them, and so shape their course as not to be without important effects in filling out the great plans of his providence and the ultimate glories of his elect; but they that put their trust in them shall be utterly confounded. Our fondest anticipations all connect with a course of things in the affairs of this world, the very idea of which many would refuse to dwell on, even though compelled to admit its truth. Our hope is in Chaist Jesus, and his speedy coming to set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed or left, but which shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and shall stand forever.—Dan. 2: 44."

We have not seen an article more truthful in relation to our country, than the foregoing. The Lord has borne long, but the nation is weighed and found wanting.

THINGS IN EUROPE.

The political and moral aspect of Europe, and indeed of the whole world, is becoming "worse and worse," with no signs of a change for the better. It seems to us that every careful student of prophecy, and observer of the signs of the times, must see that we are very near the end of the age. "A few more rising and setting suns," and the pilgrims' lonely journey ends. Praise the Lord for the bright light now shining on the prophetic page.

The clouds are lowering everywhere else in Europe. Rapid reference need only be made to mangled Poland, Russian dissensions, Danish complications, and incomplete Italy. The worst, however, is to be apprehended from France, and the agitation which stirs the empire of that wonderful man who holds in hand a well disciplined army of 800,000 men. The sound of discontent in France forebodes foreign wars, and the summons of a Congress was but the artifice of a far-sighted, but not very scrupulous ruler to arouse his subjects to gain time.

This diversion will not long endure, and whilst a heavily taxed people chafe beneath financial embarassments and difficulties connected with Mexico, it is not at all improbable that Napoleon will avail himself of any opportunity that may seem to require him to throw his sword in the scale, hoping thereby to extend his own Mediterranean frontier from Mentone to Genoa.

The most alarming sign of the times, so far as Britain is concerned, has a religious aspect. We refer to the new and attractive forms in which ancient and exploded infidelity is now exhibited in high places. The Essays and Reviews ran their brief career of popularity, and are well nigh forgotten. Even the hardihood of Bishop Colenso's more ill-mannered and audacious attacks on Moses and the Prophets have ceased to interest, and his more recent productions have "dropped stillborn from the press." But they have left behind them the trail of the serpent, and helped to make more dangerous the insidious and sentimental skepticism of Dr. Stanley and his abettors.

It is impossible not to feel that we live in 'perilous times' when unbelief scarcely masked stalks forth in our seats of religion and of learning, and boasts that it insinuates its poison into royal palaces. It is also feared that the Colleges of the Independent denomination have been tainted, and that some of their most eminent teachers are promulgating dangerous errors. Professors Davidson and Godwin have already been ejected from their Colleges, but in each case a considerable minority of the committee gave proof of unmistakable sympathy with the deposed men."

No fact is more apparent than that infidelity is rapidly advancing in all civilized countries. Several years since, the New York Independent stated that four-fifths of our earnest-minded young men were decidedly sceptical; and since that time, infidelity has advanced more rapidly than ever, till we now find but few, comparatively, who fully believe the Bible.

"SPEEDY COMING OF CHRIST."

The above heading is the title of a new book of about three hundred octavo pages, by J. C. Waller, Louisville, Kentucky. Price $1.25, postage paid. We are glad to see this work, which is so well adapted to the wants of the times. It is cheering to know that the Lord is waking up many minds to the great truth that Jesus is soon coming to set up his everlasting kingdom. We are rapidly approaching the great event. All efforts to awaken a sleeping church from her deathly slumbers should be hailed with joy by all the friends of Jesus.

Mr. Waller takes the position that the prophetic periods, which run to the end of the present dispensation, or to the coming of Christ, will terminate within four or five years. He argues that the six thousand years from creation will close between the present and 1868; also the 1335 days of Dan. 12: 12, at the end of which Daniel and all the saints will stand in their lot. The following is an extract from the work:—

"We have now distress of nations, with perplexity; men's hearts begin to fail for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. May it not be that coming events are now casting their shadows before? Do not all who carefully observe the stirring restlessness and wild recklessness of the spirit of the age, feel that some mighty crisis is coming on the earth? Up to a few years past all men seemed to think and feel, that the world was approaching its period of millennial rest, by the moral progressive influence displayed in the spirit of reform, and growing good will among men. So firmly seated was this feeling, that men seemed to realize that henceforth all was well; that there would be no more use for war and strife. Henceforth navies were considered as useless, and ships of war were rotting in their harbors. Cannons as weapons of warfare were thrown aside, or were being cast into railroad iron, and turned into all manner of machinery by the workers of art. Guns were considered antiquated, and no longer of use to any but the hunter and the sportsmen. Soldiers were looked upon as fossilated remains of by-gone days of barbarism, no more to be heard of only as things of the past, and a wonder to all coming generations that such things should have existed. The art of war was being forgotten, and the minds were being turned to the pursuits of peace and social order. Peace societies, and associations of reform for the amelioration of the social and moral condition of the race, were the order of the day. And many benevolent minds were vainly looking for a reign of universal happiness and peace on the earth, as the result of the moral progression of the times, in the absence of the Prince of Peace; seeming to forget that the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience, was yet the god of this world. The church was ready to receive the bait cast to her by Satan, her enemy and cunning deceiver, that the world was to be converted from the evil of its way, and reach the goal of universal happiness and peace by the preaching of the gospel, the spread of religious knowledge, and the progress of social reforms; and thus the millennium or time of rest, be established on the earth, by the force of moral influence; and that too in the absence of the sun of millennial glory, and the Prince of Peace. And thus did Satan—the deceiver—delude the church, with hopes of happiness on the earth, no more to be disturbed by strife and discord. But while the deceiver lulled the church into fancied security, and amused the world with dreams of quiet and peace and moral regeneration, as the fruit of progressive reforms, he planted deep in the schemes of men the seeds of every evil device, knowing that with such depth of root, when fully matured, they would yield an abundance of the fruits of moral evil and physical strife. Suddenly these moral reformers and the church have been aroused from their dreams of happiness and peace, to behold the realities of a world in arms; and also to realize their own delusion in their fancied security. All the genius and skill of evil men, with all the powers of the depraved human mind, seem now vitalized and energized to their highest tension in the discovery and construction of instruments of warfare for the destruction of their fellow men. All the skill and ingenuity of the minds of men, aided by the arts and sciences matured in schools of learning, with all the viler passions of the depraved human heart, are pressed into the service of Satan to carry out his nefarious schemes for the destruction of mankind and the ruin of the race. We hear of nothing now scarcely but "rumors of war," the invention and improvement of fire-arms, with iron-clad war vessels, and infernal machines; the movements of armies, schemes of strategy, and reports of battles; the cry of revenge, the call for recruits, and the massing of armies, for the maddened conflict of arms. Brother is now arrayed against brother, with malice and deadly intent; father against his son, and the son against his father, each in the madness of his frenzy seeking the other's destruction. Then comes the cry of the distress of the people, and of nations, the perplexity of councils and cabinets, with the failing of hearts for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. What people feel secure while the world is preparing for war, and each nation striving for the mastery? Why such immense preparation for war among the nations, by the increase of armies and navies, if there are no conflicts anticipated?

What mean all these things, if the world is not, though it may not know it, preparing under influences, both visible and invisible, for the last great conflict of arms? There is but one answer, we think, and that is, that Satan is mustering his hosts, and massing his mighty army, for his last struggle for the dominion of the earth. He seems to be aware that his time is short, and his cause requires desperate means. In his last vain attempt to hold his long usurped dominion as the god of this world, and prevent the setting up of the coming kingdom of the Son of man on the earth, he will produce all the distress and ruin in the world possible, as he has already commenced to do.

And there shall be "upon earth distress of nations, with perplexity;" "men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

These signs are, we think, now being fulfilled with an increased momentum on the whole earth, and all around us. . . . And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. "As the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered the ark, and knew not, until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." The scriptures inform us how it was in the days of Noah. "The earth also was corrupt before God; and the earth was filled with violence. And God looked upon the earth, and, behold it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth." "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually."

Here we are informed that every conceivable kind of evil, corruption and wickedness, prevailed on the earth in the days of Noah, before the flood; and our Lord said, as it was in the days of Noah before the flood, so should also the coming of the Son of man be. And when we see, as we now do, the earth corrupt, and all nations becoming filled with violence, we are reminded that so shall it be at the coming of the Son of man. When we see such vast preparations among the nations of earth for war, strife, and carnage, and human hearts burning with revenge, and man thirsting for the blood of his fellow men; we look for distress of nations with perplexity, and the failing of hearts for fear of the things coming on the earth. And we look not in vain; for we have it now around us, and in the midst of us, in demonstrations too saddening to behold; in the lamentations of bereaved parents and children, widows and orphans, the sad havoc of war. . . .

The time we think when Satan shall cease to have dominion over the earth, and to control and direct the evil passions of men, and when he, as the prince of the power of the air, shall cease to work, as he is now doing, in the children of disobedience, is now near at hand. The fruits of his working in the children of disobedience, now so manifest to all, in the corruption, violence, and wickedness of men, shows, that in his desperation, from the knowledge that his time is short, he will, as a roaring lion, seek whom he may devour. He is now plying all his skill, through the powers of his, to us invisible, hosts of evil agencies that hover around our world, and madden the brains, and energize the vile passions of men, to produce all the destruction and carnage possible, in the limited time allotted to him, before he shall be bound and cast out of the earth. For soon the angel with the key of the abyss will come with a great chain in his hand, and lay hold of him and bind him, and cast him out of the earth, and shut him up in the bottomless pit, and set a seal upon it that he shall deceive the nations no more for a thousand years. Then will be fulfilled the prophetic annunciation of the heavenly hosts, who at the birth of Christ sang, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, and good will towards men." The kingdoms of this world shall then become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he will have dominion from the river unto the ends of the earth; and all people, nations and languages shall serve him.

What a great, wonderful, and glorious deliverance that will be! when this once fair earth, which for nearly six thousand years has been the theatre upon which wickedness, corruption and violence have rioted, and have wrought destruction and ruin, shall again emerge from its ruins, and the spoiler's work of corruption and violence, as from chaos at first, and again be clothed in its Eden grandeur, beauty, and loveliness. There shall no more be a scene of woe, sufferings, and sorrows; of plagues, pestilence, and corruption; of earthquakes, storms and commotions; but it shall again exhibit the beauty and grandeur of Paradise regained; and every hill and vale be clad in Eden's vernal green, with forests, fruits, and flowers; while each gentle brook, and rippling stream, and leaping cascade, to every murmuring forest breeze, will add its enchanting musical harmonies. Then, the child in sport will feed the lion, and the lamb and the wolf will lie down together; and the kid may feed in the leopard's jungle. And man the while, relieved from Satan's influence, with his evil inclinations restrained, will dwell in peace; and all nations will serve and obey our reigning Lord, the King of kings, and Prince of peace; and every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father.

TRACTS.

Does it benefit any body to print tracts, and thus scatter them everywhere? Go ask the records of the American Tract Society. Go ask H. L. H., who has been a whole tract society himself for a number of years. Go ask the hundreds of souls converted or reclaimed by reading a single tract. Go ask that President of a college brought into the Advent faith by means of a tract. Go ask the thousands (the writer among them) led to see that the good only will have immortality by reading a small pamphlet by Elder Storrs; viz., "Are the wicked immortal?" It is too late in the day to ask, "Will it do any good?" Our society, formed to publish tracts, pamphlets, papers, and books—when we get to them—has a great and glorious mission. That mission is to enlighten mankind on the most beautiful, grand, golden, harmonious system of doctrine ever presented to the world since the times of the apostles. And the christians who have the money must furnish the means, doing it from principle, from the love of God, from the love of truth, and from the love of souls. And I devoutly pray you not to wait till some one of the society, compelled to turn into a long-winded beggar for this good cause, comes to jog your memory, pound away at your acquisitiveness, and pull away at your purse-strings. Alms-giving keeps alive our benevolence. We milk the cows to keep them from drying up,—try the principle as related to your sympathies, your benevolence and your——port-monnie. Do it. D. T. T.

ABOUT TRACTS.

BRO. GRANT:—Seeing a notice in the Crisis of Feb. 9th, '64, by D. T. T., that there are fifteen hundred dollars yet to be raised to make up the proposed two-thousand-dollar Tract Fund; and a statement that if every subscriber would send in twenty-five cents, the desired sum could be raised; I have concluded to send my portion. I also enclose enough for some other one that may be poorer than I am. So this will make the number two less at least. Yours, trying to be good,

Concord, N. H. T. B. T.

From Isaac M. Moulton.

BRO. GRANT:—My heart responds to the appeal put forth by Bro. Taylor in last week's Crisis. I think it a feasible (I trust a timely) suggestion. Brothers and sisters, subscribers to the Crisis, we who are expecting soon to behold the Son of man coming with power and great glory; we who as pilgrims and sojourners profess faith in Jesus, let us rally with our mites, and send on our "twenty-five cents" for the Tract Fund, as little pledges of our affection for our blessed Lord and Master. I feel, for one, that time is short, and that it is high time that we awake out of our sleep. Let us arouse to more activity, and, in the name of Jesus, go to work with more earnestness in the salvation of sinners, by announcing as with trumpet blast that the kingdom of God is nigh, even at the doors.

Finally, brethren, let us as one man see to it that we replenish the Tract Fund, by subscribing our mites, and thereby enable the Christian Publication Society to send forth, on the wings of the wind, pages laden with words of truth and warning to a careless and wicked world. I herewith remit my twenty-five cents, which please apply as designed.

Your Bro., in hope of eternal life,

Hammonton, N. J. I. S. MOULTON.

From Bro. G. A. Barker.

BRO. GRANT:—On opening my welcomed weekly visitor, The World's Crisis, I saw a word from Bro. Taylor, on the Tract Fund. I think he has hit on the right nail, at last, to raise the money wanted. Tracts! tracts! O, could any who live in abundance have been with me last Lord's day, and have seen how eager strangers to our views on the state of the dead and soon coming of the Lord were to get something to read on the great cardinal truth which we hold, they would be willing to lay aside their tea and tobacco until the money was raised for the Tract Fund. O Lord, stir up the church.

I said to my companion, on reading Bro. T. on the Tract question, If the Lord prosper me, I will give them a dollar. I am poor; and when I say poor, I mean poor; and unless the Lord had returned to me good health, and opened a way for me to get work, we must have suffered or begged. So I went a begging, and found Father standing with a cordial for my lungs, and an order for ties by the R. R. Co. People who thought they had no timber to spare have made up their minds to cut it off, and will not let any one but me get them out, until I am crowded with work. Gain is not godliness; yet the Lord knoweth them that trust him. Well, after reading Bro. T.'s thoughts, I went to work the next morning, and at noon I had one dollar and forty cents. I had earned almost double what any day laborer would get for all day, in these parts, in the summer. So the Lord did prosper, and here is the dollar for the Tract Fund. Your Bro. in hope,

Chappaqua. GEO. A. BARKER.

From Bro. D. Coggswell.

BRO. GRANT:—Bro. D. T. Taylor suggests that two thousand of the poorest christians that read the Crisis at once send Miles Grant twenty-five cents each, on the Tract Fund. Now, they can every one do that, even the poorest; and the two thousand, at twenty-five cents each, would amount to five hundred dollars. Now it does seem to me that the two-thousand-dollar Tract Fund ought to be raised at once. Brethren and sisters, let every one of us say, we will do something for that Tract Fund, and remember that God is looking on and sees and knows what is in our hearts. Have we a heart to help in this matter? I trust we have, every one of us. I will say, for one, I will help one dollar. Now don't wait until you forget it, but at once enclose the amount that God has in your hands for that purpose, and the amount will be raised at once. May the Lord help us to see that what we do must be done now, for the Lord is coming very soon. D. COGGSWELL.

From Bro. J. M. Weston.

BRO. GRANT:—After reading Bro. D. T. T.'s article in regard to raising subscriptions for the Tract Fund, I thought his hints very appropriate, and I also think it a very small amount for each reader of the Crisis to raise, with perhaps few exceptions. As I understand the matter, he has called upon the subscribers of the Crisis, and also the readers. Now, as a subscriber send you enclosed one dollar for the Tract Fund, and also fifty cents, making twenty-five cents each for two readers of the Crisis,—Mrs. Olive Weston and Miss Elizabeth Taylor. Yours for the truth,

Keesville, N. Y. JAMES M. WESTON.

THE CELESTA CONSCRIPT CASE.

BRO. GRANT:—Please give the following correspondence with the War Department a place in the Crisis, for the encouragement of the meek children of faith scattered abroad, who are troubled (if need be through manifold temptations) about the coming draft; for we feel we can assure them that there is at least one course they can pursue, and be exempted, without cost or violation of their faith, if they have faith enough to pursue it.

Celesta, Sullivan Co., Pa., Dec. 21, '63.

HONORED SIR:—Whereas, it hath pleased Almighty God, the great Disposer of events, to exalt you to be the Chief Magistrate of these United States; a sense of duty impels me to ask your clemency and grant of pardon, for the offence of desertion, towards a servant of Christ, named Giles Russell, who has been living with me now nearly two years. He is of "like precious faith" with myself, and is looking for the speedy, literal coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, to overturn all earthly governments, and to break in pieces all oppressors, and establish a reign of peace over all the earth. This being our faith, we could as soon think of blaspheming the name of the Just One, and violate the plainest precept of our Lord, by imbruing our hands in the blood of any fellow creature, be he friend or foe, as to betray our faith in taking up carnal weapons to sustain a government which, we believe, must soon cease to exist.

I will now briefly state Bro. Russell's case. He formerly lived and was raised in Cortland Co., N. Y., and became acquainted with me by reading sundry articles I have written for the edification of the Advent church, and published in the "World's Crisis," of Boston, Mass. . . . I have taken the liberty to forward you two copies of the Crisis (of Feb. 17th and May 19th, 1663), in which you will find an article on the first page of each from my pen. I have confidence you have charity enough to read them. You will now naturally ask, If our whole dependence for protection is in God, why do I appeal to you? I answer, we have no reason to expect that God will work a miracle for our deliverance, as he did in destroying the captains with their fifties who were sent to take Elijah, while our rights are guarantied to us in the constitution of laws, of which he has made you the oath-bound Executive. Now let me be fully understood here. I am not asking redress for any grievance or wrong committed, for there has been none.

If I understand the constitution of our government, it guaranties us the blessed privilege of worshiping our God according to the dictates of our conscience; and I feel much assurance that, after maturely considering our case, you will grant us that exemption from the war service which God and justice demand for us; as there are a number of others here who will be liable.

You might again ask, If Cæsar's laws protect us in life and property, is it not right to fight, or at least in some way render physical assistance, or money, to sustain those laws? I answer, no, not in our case. We recognize no such protection. I have been frequently defrauded, and never went to law in my life. I never carried, nor kept in my house, a weapon for self-defense; and if I were robbed of all I possess, I give the world to understand I will employ no human law to recover it; and Bro. Russell, and all who remain, will practise this law of non-resistance to all mankind, until our Deliverer comes. Now, I admit that those who claim such protection, and yet have conscientious scruples, should not refuse to serve the government in its time of peril; and, if they cannot fight conscientiously, they should not deny the commutation money demanded, if they have it; and if not, be willing to lend their service in the construction of places of defense, hospital duty, or any position where they are not compelled to use weapons of death.

I am also aware of the difficulty Congress would labor under in giving a broadcast exemption, on conscientious scruples; no doubt the consciences of many would become exceedingly tender on the life-taking question.

The foregoing we prayerfully submit for your kind consideration, praying also that God will give you wisdom and understanding in your trying position, and preserve you blameless unto the appearing and kingdom of his Son. Very humbly yours,

P. E. ARMSTONG.

BE IT KNOWN TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN, That the petitioner to Executive clemency, Peter E. Armstrong, has been known to us for the last eleven years; and from the time he first came into our county and broke ground, surveyed, laid out, and recorded a town plot, bearing the significant name of

CELESTA, in what we have esteemed a barren, uncultivated, mountain wilderness; prompted as (he has stated) he believed to be by a Divine presentiment, and resulting in the gathering together of a people of tried and precious faith, and become a place of security against desolating judgments coming on the land, which he believes is now beginning to come to pass; to which we frankly reply, that while we have nothing in sympathy with him pertaining to his views of scripture prophecy, we must admit that he has succeeded in subduing a considerable tract of very stony and unprofitable heavy hemlock land, without an access to market; and truly erected improvements with no apparent object in view, unless it be that which he has stated; and it would also appear, from his general knowledge of things, and his business capacity, that nothing but a stern, unyielding faith in some great ultimate object, would ever have brought him to such a wilderness, from the city of Philadelphia, leaving a profitable business, with social and kindred ties, with ample opportunity to have returned, and kept him toiling here so many years through so many discouragements.

We believe, also, this petitioner is of sound mind, and unites strong fixedness of purpose with strict conscientious integrity; and we have never known in his character, or those associated with him, any thing to conflict with the strict non-resistant principles which they profess. They have never, to our knowledge, had a suit at law, either sueing or being sued, nor asked legal redress for any grievance; but have lived at peace, and merited the good feeling and respect of the whole surrounding country; and while they cherish and carry out such radical principles of non-resistance, and abstain from all legal redress of grievances, we cheerfully recommend them as fit subjects for exemption from all war service.

SIGNED,

JAMES DEEGAN, Associate Judge of Sullivan Co., Pa.
WALTER SPENCER, County Treasurer.
CHAS. C. FINCH, Register and Recorder.
JOHN SIMMONS, Sheriff.
THOS. J. INGHAM,* Dist. Attorney.
B. L. CHEENEY,* Co. Surveyor and P. M. of Laporte, Sullivan Co.

* I subscribe to the above facts, and recommend Mr. Russell for exemption, if "conscientious scruples" should exempt in any case. THOS. J. INGHAM. B. L. CHEENEY.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, Dec. 31st, 1863.

SIR:—Your communication of the 21st instant, addressed to the President of the United States, asking that Giles Russell might be exempted from the draft, by reason of conscientious scruples, has been referred to the Secretary of War, who directs me to inform you that, as soon as Mr. Russell has reported to the Provost Marshal of your district, (and this Department has been so officially informed,) the case will receive consideration.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
ED. MCAULY, Brig. Genl. A. A. G.
To Mr. P. E. Armstrong, Celesta, Sullivan Co., Pa.

NUMBER THREE.

We now come, in conclusion, to the testimony of Peter upon the subject of the "Seen and unseen things" of Paul in 2 Cor. 4: 18. Whoever will take the trouble to examine the subject thoroughly, will perceive that Peter's two letters are addressed to the same church organization that Paul addressed when he wrote to "the Hebrews;" hence he says in epistle 2, 3: 15, that Paul had written them an epistle, and in that letter, as in all his epistles to other churches, Paul had written upon the same subjects that he (Peter) had been writing to them about in his present epistle; but in Paul's letters to the other churches where he had written of "these things," he had said some things that the unlearned (in the "oracles of God") and unstable (unsettled) in the truth (word of God) did wrest (turned or twisted, spiritualized) as they did also the remaining portions of God's word, to their own destruction.

Now, having found that the two witnesses are testifying of the "same things," let us take KEY OF PETER and unlock Paul's mysteries of the kingdom of the Deity." Beginning with Peter where we left off with Paul, we will briefly as possible synthetize by the one that we analyzed by the other, and if the parts when brought together produce the same structure that we took down, it will constitute a prima facie evidence in the case that we have been correct in our explication of Paul's "seen and unseen things." 2 Cor. 4: 18.

Peter, in speaking of the "shaking of the earth," (Heb. 12: 26), uses the following language (2 Peter 3: 5)—"For this they"—the scoffers concerning Christ's coming, of verse 4,—willingly are ignorant of, "that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water, whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water perished." Of the promised "once yet more," he says (3: 7), "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word, (THAT is, Paul's "hath he promised," of Heb. 12: 26,) are kept on store, reserved unto fire against (at or in) the day of judgment and the perdition of ungodly men." Of the dissolving earthly house of this tabernacle (2 Cor. 5: 1), he speaks in this wise, (3: 10),—"But the day of the Lord will come, as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the WORKS that are therein shall be burned up." Not earth only, but also heaven. Heb. 12: 26 "Seeing then that all these things shall be DISSOLVED" (here he uses the very same word that Paul did in 2 Cor. 5: 1), "what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, (now he defines what he meant by the words, "all these things"), and the elements shall melt with fervent heat."

Of the kingdom fixed and immovable, that the saints are to receive, (Heb. 12: 28), the building of God, the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, (2 Cor. 5: 1), with which we earnestly desire to be clothed upon (5: 2), that mortality might be swallowed up, 1 Cor. 15: 54; Isa. 25: 8, of life, 5: 4, "the things that are not seen" (4: 18), for which we look by faith, Peter uses the following, which would be called pretty plain talk in our day;—"Nevertheless WE (Peter, Paul and the 'strangers and pilgrims'), according to his promise (in Isa. 65: 17–24), look for new heavens and a new earth (that was the hope of Christ's church in the apostolic times), wherein dwelleth righteousness;" or, as Wakefield says, "the righteous." This plain, positive declaration of Peter's elicited the following admission from Dr. Adam Clarke.

"It does appear from these promises, (Isa. 65; 17), and what the apostle says here, and what is said in Rev. 21: 27; 22: 14, 15, that the present earth, though destined to be burned up [Peter does not say so,] will not be destroyed, but be renewed and refined, purged from all moral and natural imperfection, and made the endless abode of blessed spirits." The italics are his own, and I only differ from him in believing that it will be the endless abode of blessed men instead of spirits, the resurrected men of God having spiritual bodies incorruptible, and souls made immortal.

A perfect parallel may be found between Paul and Peter's writings in all their parts, if sought for; but having gone back to the seen and unseen, our starting point, we leave here these two witnesses under the New Testament and see what the prophets have said upon this subject, to whom, Peter says we would do well to "take heed."

First, Isa. 33: 20,—"Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities; thine eyes shall behold Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords be broken." This agrees with Paul in Heb. 12: 22, before quoted. Ps. 15: 1–3,—"Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? (Zion). He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. . . . He that doeth these things shall never be moved;" corresponds with the righteous of 2 Peter 3: 13, and Heb. 12: 22, 23, 28. So Ps. 24: 3–10—"Who shall ascend," etc. Please turn and read both, Psalms and Isa. 33: 15–17. The last verse reads, "Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty; they shall behold the land that is very far off."

This corresponds with 2 Peter 1: 16,—"We were eye-witnesses of his majesty" (kingly glory). And 1 Tim. 6: 15,—"Who, in his times, shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords." Ps. 27: 4,—"One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord and to inquire in his temple, for in the time of trouble shall he hide me in his pavilion; in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me up upon a rock. And now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me; therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices of shouting (margin); I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the Lord." Isa. 66: 22,—"For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain." Rev. 21: 1,—"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth." "And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven prepared as a bride adorned for her husband, and I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them and they shall be his people, and God HIMSELF shall be with them and be their God, and he shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. And there shall be no more death." Amen, even so, come Lord Jesus.

Oh, that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! "When the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad." Ps. 14: 7. Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen. G. W. STETSON.

From Bro. Samuel Kail.

BRO. GRANT:—Dear Sir, two years ago this winter, Bro. Clark and Bro. McCullock came and preached in our neighborhood, out of curiosity I went to hear them. Bro. McCullock preached on the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecies, and as I had been a daily reader of the Bible, I saw it was completely done. He showed that we are living in the last days, near the close of the present dispensation, and that the kingdom of God is about to be ushered in. On the night after, the two Advent preachers and two Methodists had a discussion on the immortality of the soul, and I, somewhat filled with prejudice, went to hear them discuss the question, hoping the Methodist might give the Adventists a complete whipping; because I looked on the doctrine of the non-immortality of the soul as a false one; but thanks be to God, my eyes that night began to be opened; and for one year I read and searched the Bible day and night to find if these things were so. When I was done searching the Bible for myself, and the definition of every Bible word, I was as strong an Adventist as ever lived; and received such joy as I never felt before. Never before did I see such a harmony in the Bible. In fact, the Bible appears to me a new book; although for twelve years I had been a daily reader of the Bible, yet never did the light of God's truth look so bright to me as it has since. Yours in faith of the soon coming kingdom, SAMUEL KAIL.

From Bro. Wm. Sweet.

I arrived here last evening. This is a young, thriving, business town, of about one hundred and fifty inhabitants. I am to commence a series of meetings here this evening. Sunday evening last, I closed my labors at Ottawa. I have preached there some twenty-eight sermons in all. Although at first we had but few hearers, cold and stormy weather some of the time, many cold hearts, and but few to back up the word with fervent prayers and feeling exhortations; yet thanks to the Lord of the great harvest, he has heard prayer, blessed his word in stirring up some old professors to humble themselves before God, covenant anew with him and his saints to live more in future to his glory, and to help to advance the Spirit of reformation. We have seen backsliders weep, and mourn, and confess their sins; and a number of sinners weep in the crowd, leave their seats, press their way to me and others, give me their hand, and pledge their hearts and lives to the Savior, fall on their knees and ask us to pray for them; and God to save a trembling, dying sinner whose hopes still hang on his word; then light on some sweet promise there, some sure support against despair; find peace and pardon through a Savior's cleansing blood, and obedience to the holy word of God through the Spirit, to unfeigned love of the brethren. I have baptized nine happy converts in all. More, I think, will yet go forward.

We organized a church of some twenty-four names. They made choice of a clerk, and two deacons; and Eld. Scott, a good man, for their ruling elder and pastor. I see nothing to hinder them from holding meetings and enjoying the word and ordinances. Monday evening, Jan. 11th, I preached on communion. We administered the ordinance for the first time. All that loved the Savior's second appearing were invited to partake with us. I think nearly all of the Methodist brethren present partook, and some of other churches. We had a good time. Brethren and sisters, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may run, and his name be glorified.

Yours in the "blessed hope,"
WILLIAM SWEET.

CHRIST'S TEACHING, AND MAN'S TEACHING.

The gospel of Christ teaches us to repent and forsake our sins, and love God with all our hearts; and above all at the present time his glorious appearing. He does not teach us to kill and slay by thousands, and lay waste and desolate the lands of others. Christ says, Matt. 7: 12,—"Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is thelaw and the prophets." God teaches us, also, that "Vengeance is mine; I will repay." And what else has he taught us? "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy. Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God. Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God." Matt. 3: 5, 7, 8, 9. The child of God is known. Luke 6: 45,—"A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil; for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh." Now if a man speaketh the gospel of Christ, teacheth as Jesus has directed; then we know that he is of Christ; if otherwise, then he is not of Christ.

Can it be possible that a true minister can preach any thing but the gospel of Christ? The fact is, and there is no getting round it, political matters have taken the place of true piety. Thanks be to God, all ministers have not fallen. There are some who stand by the faith once delivered to the saints, "Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep" ourselves "unspotted from the world." But the religion of this age pronounces its blessings upon the hosts who go forth that they may make a thousand children fatherless; ten thousand wives widows; while they themselves are defiled by every sin which spots and besmears the world. God help us to come out from the world and do those things which are pleasing in his sight. C. H. SMITH.

For the World's Crisis.

MY SISTER JANE.

I have a sister Jane here in Canada. She was adopted into father's family about two years ago. She seated herself beside me the other Sunday, while I sat by my little class in Sunday school, and said:

"I have no learning, and can help you none in this school by way of teaching, but I have health and can earn money. You say you want to get some books and papers for the school. Now if I use the money I earn to help the cause in this way will my service not be acceptable?"

Yes, sister Jane, your money is as important as the books and tracts of our ablest writers. They might write and heap up manuscript, six feet high, but unless we have Sr. Janes' and Bro. Johns' working and giving us of their wages to pay the paper-maker and printer, I do not know how our moneyless authors could benefit us. The fact is, we must serve each other. We are all members of the same body. Now the body is not all brains. The body needs but one head. Then the body must have hands and feet. So we need to work in harmony, keeping active. Each member must perform its own proper office. The head must do the thinking, the feet the walking, the tongue the talking, the hands the working, each remembring the story of the "Discontented Pendulum," which wearied in its swinging and ticking through the whole clock-work depended on its motion.

Now if there are any more sister Janes' in the church, let them feel their importance. If you cannot write books, you can help publish those that are written. If you cannot preach, you can purchase tracts that teach the truth, and can give them to those who are unable to buy. Thus you can serve God, using the health he has given you to glorify the Giver by advancing his cause.

I hope Sr. Jane and all the sisters will be careful how they spend their money. God has given them health—a rare gift in these days—and while they are receiving gold, let them remember to give to God a portion.

Dear sisters, the Lord is coming soon. Work for him in the days that remain. Look about you and find something to do that shall bless others. Do not live for SELF. He who gives but a "cup of cold water" shall not lose his reward. Peace be with you now and evermore. Amen. M. MATHEWS.

HOW TO SAVE YOUR COAL.

Now that coal has reached a price which is almost unprecedented, and that the dealers propose to raise it, if possible, during the present winter, there are thousands of families where the members will thank us heartily for the following directions, which, if followed, will give them a good fire during the whole winter on a quantity of coal so small that it will cause some to marvel greatly.

The directions are as follows:—

"The ashes or cinders are not to be thrown away, but dampened to a kind of mortar, and and again placed on the fire. They burn readily, and by so doing there is the economy of having a hot fire with one-tenth of the fuel, besides not being troubled to convey the ashes to a receptacle. We do not know of a stove that cannot make ashes enough to supply itself, only a few nuggets of coal being used. First make a fire in the usual way, and when it begins to burn freely, place a lump of coal near the stove door or front of the grate; then heap on the wet ashes or cinders, and pack them down, the vent below being unobstructed. The process is simple, and a few trials will satisfy the unbelievers. Dust coal may be used in the same way, and [illegible] of wealth in the refuse of former years. While coal is so scarce and costly, should not economy prompt a trial of this plan?—Ex.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool, Feb. 6th, Queenstown 7th.

An engagement lasting six hours, between the Germans and Danes, took place at Missurde. The Danish outposts were driven in, but the assaults on the place were repulsed.

It is confirmed that the ship Martaban was destroyed by the Alabama. She was formerly the American barque Texan Star.

Great anxiety is felt in England for the meeting of Parliament to learn the policy of the Government on the Danish question.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times thus gives the position of Louis Napoleon on this absorbing question:

"His Majesty feels no deep regret at what has come to pass. England had her own way in Greek affairs, and she must now manage the best way she can with Danish. He considers it a just retribution for refusing to join the general Congress which he proposed. He will content himself with watching the course of affairs, and will act according to circumstances. It is hoped that the English Cabinet will, after all, revert to the idea of a Congress."

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Lords the Earl of Derby reviewed at length the foreign policy of the government, contending that it was injurious and humiliating to England. The rejection of the Congress proposed by Napoleon and his invitation to recognize the Confederates, the fruitless negotiations with Russia respecting Poland, and interference in the Dano-German dispute, were severely referred to, and although he (Derby) did not oppose the address, he severely censured Earl Russell's foreign policy.

Earl Russell, in reply, explained the Dano-German question, and showed that England was quite unfettered in the matter, never having given the slightest promise of assistance to Denmark.

Mr. Gladstone explained that the promise of England to stand by Denmark was given under circumstances different from those which control the present war.

Telegrams from India report that the steamer Alabama on the 5th of January was fifty miles south of Rangoon, on the Arracan coast, watching the rice ports, and in a position also threatening to American vessels at Calcutta.

THE WAR IN SCHLESWIG.

Additional details of the attack on Missurde put the Danish loss at from 150 to 200, and the Prussian loss is variously estimated at from 150 to 300 in killed and wounded—some accounts say much more. The Prussian force numbered 9000, and the Danish about 2000. Two stormings were attempted and repulsed, the Danes maintaining a heavy fire against the storming party. According to one account one Prussian regiment was totally destroyed. The Prussians retired to Ekernford.

On the afternoon of the 3d the Austrians attacked Bistorff, one mile south of Schleswig. There was sharp firing until after dark, but the Danes held their own. The Danes lost one field piece and had a few wounded. An attack was expected on the 4th.

An attack on Frederickstadt was also expected on the 4th.

A Hamburg telegram of the 4th says Prince Frederick Carl is reported wounded in the arm. An attack on the whole line from Missurde to Jagel was expected on the 4th.

The Prussian headquarters were at Kropp.

The war had already caused a suspension of shipping operations between England and the Baltic.

Marshall Wrangle's proclamation to the Schleswigers says the civil Commissioners of Austria and Prussia will assume the adminstration of the Duchy of Schleswig, and not, as was stated, of Schleswig and Holstein.

The attack was continued on the 4th without making much impression on the Danish lines. One grenade fell into the town of Schleswig. The town is barricaded against a coup de main.

The loss of the Austrians in storming Jagel is stated at 400, including many officers. A false guide conducted the Prussians against the Austrians, and they fired upon each other.

On the 5th a fall of snow prevented much activity, but there was random firing in the vicinity of Schleswig.

The Danes had altogether about 1000 horse du combat at Schleswig, viz: 300 killed and wounded, and 700 ill from the inclement weather. The loss of the Austrians to the latest date was 30 officers and 519 men.

It is asserted that the Danes have sent cruisers out after Prussian vessels.

FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says that at a ball on the 3d inst., Napoleon said to a group of Marshals and Generals: "It appears they have been exchanging cannon shots in the North. Let them go on, it is no affair of ours. Our policy should be non-intervention." Those whom he addressed seemed to agree with him.

ITALY AND AUSTRIA.

It is reported that Austria is making arrangements on the Mincio. It is also rumored that the Italian Government has protested against fortifications being erected by Austria near Peschiera in contravention of the treaty of 1859.

EMANCIPATION IN RUSSIA.—An English missionary has recently sketched the results of his observations made during a tour of five months in Russia, mainly devoted to studying the progress of serf emancipation. He says that within two years no less than twenty-three millions of intelligent, active peasantry have been raised from the state of chattels to the condition of insuring their own independence and comfort. One million have already bought the land on which they were formerly located, borrowing the money from the government. More than eight thousand new schools have sprung into existence through individual efforts among the peasantry, and they are rapidly on the increase. The general results of this vast change are beyond estimate. Property is everywhere rising in value, municipal institutions are springing up, and a constitutional government must be the ultimate result. The Emperor Nicholas foresaw this and hesitated to enter upon the work of emancipation, but it was no objection in the mind of Alexander. Prince Gortschakoff gives it as his opinion that the development of Russia during the next two years will astonish the world.—Journal.

Colenso, Bishop of Natal, has been deposed from his office, and prohibited from ministering in any part of the province of Cape Town, unless he retracts his heresies before the 16th of April.

DOMESTIC.

San Francisco, Feb. 17th. Arrived barque Rogers, Kanagawa, Japan, Jan. 7th. The Tycoon's Palace at Yeddo was burned on Christmas. The next day the custom house was closed, the officials declaring themselves so grieved at the Tycoon's misfortune that they were wholly unable to transact business. It is reported that the fire originated in a gunpowder plot to blow up the palace for the purpose of killing the Tycoon.

Yeddo was again ravaged by fire on New Year's day. Eleven large streets in a wealthy business quarter, besides numerous adjoining back streets and alleys, were destroyed. It is estimated that five thousand houses of the better class were destroyed.

News had reached Kanagawa that on the 31st of October nearly all of Hakodadi was burned by incendiary fires.

New York, Feb. 19th. The Herald's Washington dispatch says there will be no change in the command of the Army of the Potomac. It is understood that Meade will retain the position for the next campaign.

There was something of a sensation to-day in the Senate by the statement of Mr. Conness relative to the imperative necessity of sending a fleet of war steamers to the Pacific coast without delay. The authorities have positive information that rebel steamers left Asia for that coast, and it is feared San Francisco will be menaced before the navy can afford the requisite protection.

PEACE RESTORED IN VENEZUELA.—After five years of civil war, the People's party have completely triumphed in Venezuela, and by their moderate and generous treatment of their opponents, as well as by the enlightened policy which they have proclaimed, they offer to the world strong guarantees for the future. Gen. Falcon has been elected Provisional President.

Probably Venezuela will soon join with New Granada and Equador in establishing the "United States of Columbia," on the plan proposed by Gen. Mosquera, well devised to secure peace and prosperity in those extensive and fertile countries.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—

Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive one third the value of the money sent, in any of our books and tracts they may select. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollars' worth; for twelve dollars, four dollars' worth, etc.

Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

CELESTA, in what we have esteemed a barren, uncultivated, mountain wilderness; prompted as (he has stated) he believed to be by a Divine presentiment, and resulting in the gathering together of a people of tried and precious faith, and become a place of security against desolating judgments coming on the land, which he believes is now beginning to come to pass; to which we frankly reply, that while we have nothing in sympathy with him pertaining to his views of scripture prophecy, we must admit that he has succeeded in subduing a considerable tract of very stony and unprofitable heavy hemlock land, without an access to market; and truly erected improvements with no apparent object in view, unless it be that which he has stated; and it would also appear, from his general knowledge of things, and his business capacity, that nothing but a stern, unyielding faith in some great ultimate object, would ever have brought him to such a wilderness, from the city of Philadelphia, leaving a profitable business, with social and kindred ties, with ample opportunity to have returned, and kept him toiling here so many years through so many discouragements.

We believe, also, this petitioner is of sound mind, and unites strong fixedness of purpose with strict conscientious integrity; and we have never known in his character, or those associated with him, any thing to conflict with the strict non-resistant principles which they profess. They have never, to our knowledge, had a suit at law, either sueing or being sued, nor asked legal redress for any grievance; but have lived at peace, and merited the good feeling and respect of the whole surrounding country; and while they cherish and carry out such radical principles of non-resistance, and abstain from all legal redress of grievances, we cheerfully recommend them as fit subjects for exemption from all war service.

NUMBER THREE.

We now come, in conclusion, to the testimony of Peter upon the subject of the "Seen and unseen things" of Paul in 2 Cor. 4: 18. Whoever will take the trouble to examine the subject thoroughly, will perceive that Peter's two letters are addressed to the same church organization that Paul addressed when he wrote to "the Hebrews;" hence he says in epistle 2, 3: 15, that Paul had written them an epistle, and in that letter, as in all his epistles to other churches, Paul had written upon the same subjects that he (Peter) had been writing to them about in his second epistle; but in Paul's letters to the other churches where he had written of "these things," he had said some things that the unlearned (in the "oracles of God") and unstable (unsettled) in the truth found difficult to apprehend, and wrested (turned or twisted, spiritualized) as they did also the remaining portions of God's word, to their own destruction.

Now, having found that the two witnesses are testifying of the "same things," let us take KEY OF PETER and unlock Paul's mysteries of the kingdom of the Deity." Beginning with Peter where we left off with Paul, we will briefly as possible synthetize by the one what we analyzed by the other, and if the parts when brought together produce the same structure that we took down, it will constitute a prima facie evidence in the case that we have not gone amiss in our explication of Paul's "seen and unseen things." 2 Cor. 4: 18.

Peter, in speaking of the "shaking of the earth," (Heb. 12: 26), uses the following language (2 Peter 3: 5),—"For this they—the scoffers concerning Christ's coming, of verse 4,—willingly are ignorant of, "that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water, whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water perished." Of the promised "once yet more," he says (3: 7), "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word, (THAT is, Paul's "hath he promised," of Heb. 12: 26,) are kept on store, reserved unto fire against (at or in) the day of judgment and the perdition of ungodly men." Of the dissolving earthly house of this tabernacle (2 Cor. 5: 1), he speaks in this wise, (3: 10),—"But the day of the Lord will come, as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the WORKS that are therein shall be burned up." Not earth only, but also heaven. Heb. 12: 26 "Seeing then that all these things shall be DISSOLVED" (here he uses the very same word that Paul did in 2 Cor. 5: 1), "what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, (now he defines what he meant by the words, "all these things"), and the elements shall melt with fervent heat."

Of the kingdom fixed and immovable, that the saints are to receive, (Heb. 12: 28), the building of God, the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, (2 Cor. 5: 1), with which we earnestly desire to be clothed upon (5: 2), that mortality might be swallowed up, 1 Cor. 15: 54; Isa, 25: 8, of life, 5: 4, "the things that are not seen" (4: 18), for which we look by faith, Peter uses the following, which would be called pretty plain talk in our day;—"Nevertheless WE (Peter, Paul and the 'strangers and pilgrims'), according to his promise (in Isa. 65: 17–24), look for new heavens and a new earth (that was the hope of Christ's church in the apostolic times), wherein dwelleth righteousness;" or, as Wakefield says, "the righteous." This plain, positive declaration of Peter's elicited the following admission from Dr. Adam Clarke.

"It does appear from these promises, (Isa. 65; 17), and what the apostle says here, and what is said in Rev. 21: 27; 22: 14, 15, that the present earth, though destined to be burned up [Peter does not say so,] will not be destroyed, but be renewed and refined, purged from all moral and natural imperfection, and made the endless abode of blessed spirits." The italics are his own, and I only differ from him in believing that it will be the endless abode of blessed men instead of spirits, the resurrected men of God having spiritual bodies incorruptible, and souls made immortal.

A perfect parallel may be found between Paul and Peter's writings in all their parts, if sought for; but having gone back to the seen and unseen, our starting point, we leave here these two witnesses under the New Testament and see what the prophets have said upon this subject, to whom, Peter says we would do well to "take heed."

First, Isa. 33: 20,—"Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities; thine eyes shall behold Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords be broken." This agrees with Paul in Heb. 12: 22, before quoted. Ps. 15: 1–3,—"Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shalll dwell in thy holy hill? (Zion). He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. . . . He that doeth these things shall never be moved;" corresponds with the righteous of 2 Peter 3: 13, and Heb. 12: 22, 28. So Ps. 24: 3–10—"Who shall ascend," etc. Please turn and read both, Psalms and Isa. 33: 15–17. The last verse reads, "Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty; they shall behold the land that is very far off."

This corresponds with 2 Peter 1: 16,—"We were eye-witnesses of his majesty" (kingly glory). And 1 Tim. 6: 15,—"Who, in his times, shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords." Ps. 27: 4,—"One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord and to inquire in his temple, for in the time of trouble shall he hide me in his pavilion; in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me upon a rock. And now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me; therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices of shouting (margin); I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the Lord." Isa. 66: 22,—"For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain." Rev. 21: 1,—"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth." "And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven prepared as a bride adorned for her husband, and I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them and they shall be his people, and God HIMSELF shall be with them and be their God, and he shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. And there shall be no more death." Amen, even so, come Lord Jesus.

Oh, that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! "When the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad." Ps. 14: 7. Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen. G. W. STETSON.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Samuel Kail.

BRO. GRANT:—Dear sir, two years ago this winter, Bro. Clark and Bro. McCullock came and preached in our neighborhood, out of curiosity I went to hear them. Bro. McCullock preached on the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecies, and as I had been a daily reader of the Bible, I saw it was completely done. He showed that we are living in the last days, near the close of the present dispensation, and that the kingdom of God is about to be ushered in. On the night after, the two Advent preachers and two Methodists had a discussion on the immortality of the soul, and I, somewhat filled with prejudice, went to hear them discuss the question, hoping the Methodist might give the Adventists a complete whipping; because I looked on the doctrine of the non-immortality of the soul as a false one; but thanks be to God, my eyes that night began to be opened; and for one year I read and searched the Bible day and night to find if these things were so. When I was done searching the Bible for myself, and the definition of every Bible word, I was as strong an Adventist as ever lived; and received such joy as I never felt before. Never before did I see such a harmony in the Bible. In fact, the Bible appears to me a new book; although for twelve years I had been a daily reader of the Bible, yet never did the light of God's truth look so bright to me as it has since. Yours in faith of the soon coming kingdom, SAMUEL KAIL.

From Bro. Wm. Sweet.

I arrived here last evening. This is a young, thriving, business town, of about one hundred and fifty inhabitants. I am to commence a series of meetings here this evening. Sunday evening last, I closed my labors at Ottawa. I have preached there some twenty-eight sermons in all. Although at first we had but few hearers, cold and stormy weather some of the time, many cold hearts, and but few to back up the word with fervent prayers and feeling exhortations; yet thanks to the Lord of the great harvest, he has heard prayer, blessed his word in stirring up some old professors to humble themselves before God, covenant anew with him and his saints to live more in future to his glory, and to help to advance the Spirit of reformation. We have seen backsliders weep, and mourn, and confess their sins; and a number of sinners weep in the crowd, leave their seats, press their way to me and others, give me their hand, and pledge their hearts and lives to the Savior, fall on their knees and ask us to pray for them; and God to save a trembling, dying sinner whose hopes still hang on his word; then light on some sweet promise there, some sure support against despair; find peace and pardon through a Savior's cleansing blood, and obedience to the holy word of God through the Spirit, to unfeigned love of the brethren. I have baptized nine happy converts in all. More, I think, will yet go forward.

We organized a church of some twenty-four names. They made choice of a clerk, and two deacons; and Eld. Scott, a good man, for their ruling elder and pastor. I see nothing to hinder them from holding meetings and enjoying the word and ordinances. Monday evening, Jan. 11th, I preached on communion. We administered the ordinance for the first time. All that loved the Savior's second appearing were invited to partake with us. I think nearly all of the Methodist brethren present partook, and some of other churches. We had a good time. Brethren and sisters, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may run, and his name be glorified.

Yours in the "blessed hope,"
WILLIAM SWEET.

For the World's Crisis.

CHRIST'S TEACHING, AND MAN'S TEACHING.

The gospel of Christ teaches us to repent and forsake our sins, and love God with all our hearts; and above all at the present time his glorious appearing. He does not teach us to kill and slay by thousands, and lay waste and desolate the lands of others. Christ says, Matt. 7: 12,—"Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." God teaches us, also, that "Vengeance is mine; I will repay." And what else has he taught us? "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy. Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God. Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God." Matt. 3: 5, 7, 8, 9. The child of God is known. Luke 6: 45,—"A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil; for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh." Now if a man speaketh the gospel of Christ, teacheth as Jesus has directed; then we know that he is of Christ; if otherwise, then he is not of Christ.

Can it be possible that a true minister can preach any thing but the gospel of Christ? The fact is, and there is no getting round it, political matters have taken the place of true piety. Thanks be to God, all ministers have not fallen. There are some who stand by the faith once delivered to the saints, "Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep" ourselves "unspotted from the world." But the religion of this age pronounces its blessings upon the hosts who go forth that they may make a thousand children fatherless; ten thousand wives widows; while they themselves are defiled by every sin which spots and besmears the world. God help us to come out from the world and do those things which are pleasing in his sight. C. H. SMITH.

MY SISTER JANE.

I have a sister Jane here in Canada. She was adopted into father's family about two years ago. She seated herself beside me the other Sunday, while I sat by my little class in Sunday school, and said:

"I have no learning, and can help you none in this school by way of teaching, but I have health and can earn money. You say you want to get some books and papers for the school. Now if I use the money I earn to help the cause in this way will my service not be acceptable?"

Yes, sister Jane, your money is as important as the books and tracts of our ablest writers. They might write and heap up manuscript, six feet high, but unless we have Sr. Janes' and Bro. Johns' working and giving us of their wages to pay the paper-maker and printer, I do not know how our moneyless authors could benefit us. The fact is, we must serve each other. We are all members of the same body. Now the body is not all brains. The body needs but one head. Then the body must have hands and feet. So we need to work in harmony, keeping active. Each member must perform its own proper office. The head must do the thinking, the feet the walking, the tongue the talking, the hands the working, each remembring the story of the "Discontented Pendulum," which wearied in its swinging and ticking through the whole clock-work depended on its motion.

Now if there are any more sister Janes' in the church, let them feel their importance. If you cannot write books, you can help publish those that are written. If you cannot preach, you can purchase tracts that teach the truth, and can give them to those who are unable to buy. Thus you can serve God, using the health he has given you to glorify the Giver by advancing his cause.

I hope Sr. Jane and all the sisters will be careful how they spend their money. God has given them health—a rare gift in these days—and while they are receiving gold, let them remember to give to God a portion.

Dear sisters, the Lord is coming soon. Work for him in the days that remain. Look about you and find something to do that shall bless others. Do not live for SELF. He who gives but a "cup of cold water" shall not lose his reward. Peace be with you now and evermore. Amen. M. MATHEWS.

HOW TO SAVE YOUR COAL.

Now that coal has reached a price which is almost unprecedented, and that the dealers propose to raise it, if possible, during the present winter, there are thousands of families where the members will thank us heartily for the following directions, which, if followed, will give them a good fire during the whole winter on a quantity of coal so small that it will cause some to marvel greatly. The directions are as follows:—

"The ashes or cinders are not to be thrown away, but dampened to a kind of mortar, and and again placed on the fire. They burn readily, and by so doing there is the economy of having a hot fire with one-tenth of the fuel, besides not being troubled to convey the ashes to a receptacle. We do not know of a stove that cannot make ashes enough to supply itself, only a few nuggets of coal being used. First make a fire in the usual way, and when it begins to burn freely, place a lump of coal near the stove door or front of the grate; then heap on the wet ashes or cinders, and pack them down, the vent below being unobstructed. The process is simple, and a few trials will satisfy the unbelievers. Dust coal may be used in the same way, and we are assured that many cellars have mines of wealth in the refuse of former years. While coal is so scarce and costly, should not economy prompt a trial of this plan?—Ex.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool, Feb. 6th, Queenstown 7th.

An engagement lasting six hours, between the Germans and Danes, took place at Missurde. The Danish outposts were driven in, but the assaults on the place were repulsed.

It is confirmed that the ship Martaban was destroyed by the Alabama. She was formerly the American barque Texan Star.

Great anxiety is felt in England for the meeting of Parliament to learn the policy of the Government on the Danish question.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times thus gives the position of Louis Napoleon on this absorbing question:

"His Majesty feels no deep regret at what has come to pass. England had her own way in Greek affairs, and she must now manage the best way she can with Danish. He considers it a just retribution for refusing to join the general Congress which he proposed. He will content himself with watching the course of affairs, and will act according to circumstances. It is hoped that the English Cabinet will, after all, revert to the idea of a Congress."

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Lords the Earl of Derby reviewed at length the foreign policy of the government, contending that it was injurious and humiliating to England. The rejection of the Congress proposed by Napoleon and his invitation to recognize the Confederates, the fruitless negotiations with Russia respecting Poland, and interference in the Dano-German dispute, were severely referred to, and although he (Derby) did not oppose the address, he severely censured Earl Russell's foreign policy.

Earl Russell, in reply, explained the Dano-German question, and showed that England was quite unfettered in the matter, never having given the slightest promise of assistance to Denmark.

Mr. Gladstone explained that the promise of England to stand by Denmark was given under circumstances different from those which control the present war.

Telegrams from India report that the stramer Alabama on the 5th of January was fifty miles south of Rangoon, on the Arracan coast, watching the rice ports, and in a position also threatening to American vessels at Calcutta.

THE WAR IN SCHLESWIG.

Additional details of the attack on Missurde put the Danish loss at from 150 to 200, and the Prussian loss is variously estimated at from 150 to 300 in killed and wounded—some accounts say much more. The Prussian force numbered 9000, and the Danish about 2000. Two stormings were attempted and repulsed, the Danes maintaining a heavy fire against the storming party. According to one account one Prussian regiment was totally destroyed. The Prussians retired to Ekernford.

On the afternoon of the 3d the Austrians attacked Bistorff, one mile south of Schleswig. There was sharp firing until after dark, but the Danes held their own. The Danes lost one field piece and had a few wounded. An attack was expected on the 4th.

An attack on Frederickstadt was also expected on the 4th.

A Hamburg telegram of the 4th says Prince Frederick Carl is reported wounded in the arm. An attack on the whole line from Missurde to Jagel was expected on the 4th.

The Prussian headquarters were at Kropp.

The war had already caused a suspension of shipping operations between England and the Baltic.

Marshall Wrangle's proclamation to the Schleswigers says the civil Commissioners of Austria and Prussia will assume the adminstration of the Duchy of Schleswig, and not, as was stated, of Schleswig and Holstein.

The loss of the Austrians in storming Jagel is stated at 400, including many officers. A false guide conducted the Prussians against the Austrians, and they fired upon each other.

On the 5th a fall of snow prevented much activity, but there was random firing in the vicinity of Schleswig.

The Danes had altogether about 1000 horse du combat at Schleswig, viz: 300 killed and wounded, and 700 ill from the inclement weather. The loss of the Austrians to the latest date was 30 officers and 519 men.

It is asserted that the Danes have sent cruisers out after Prussian vessels.

FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says that at a ball on the 3d inst., Napoleon said to a group of Marshals and Generals: "It appears they have been exchanging cannon shots in the North. Let them go on, it is no affair of ours. Our policy should be non-intervention." Those whom he addressed seemed to agree with him.

ITALY AND AUSTRIA.

It is reported that Austria is making arrangements on the Mincio. It is also rumored that the Italian Government has protested against fortifications being erected by Austria near Peschiera in contravention of the treaty of 1859.

EMANCIPATION IN RUSSIA.—An English missionary has recently sketched the results of his observations made during a tour of five months in Russia, mainly devoted to studying the progress of serf emancipation. He says that within two years no less than twenty-three millions of intelligent, active peasantry have been raised from the state of chattels to the condition of insuring their own independence and comfort. One million have already bought the land on which they were formerly located, borrowing the money from the government. More than eight thousand new schools have sprung into existence through individual efforts among the peasantry, and they are rapidly on the increase. The general results of this vast change are beyond estimate. Property is everywhere rising in value, municipal institutions are springing up, and a constitutional government must be the ultimate result. The Emperor Nicholas foresaw this and hesitated to enter upon the work of emancipation, but it was no objection in the mind of Alexander. Prince Gortschakoff gives it as his opinion that the development of Russia during the next two years will astonish the world.—Journal.

Colenso, Bishop of Natal, has been deposed from his office, and prohibited from ministering in any part of the province of Cape Town, unless he retracts his heresies before the 16th of April.

DOMESTIC.

San Francisco, Feb. 17th. Arrived barque Rogers, Kanagawa, Japan, Jan. 7th. The Tycoon's Palace at Yeddo was burned on Christmas. The next day the custom house was closed, the officials declaring themselves so grieved at the Tycoon's misfortune that they were wholly unable to transact business. It is reported that the fire originated in a gunpowder plot to blow up the palace for the purpose of killing the Tycoon.

Yeddo was again ravaged by fire on New Year's day. Eleven large streets in a wealthy business quarter, besides numerous adjoining back streets and alleys, were destroyed. It is estimated that five thousand houses of the better class were destroyed.

News had reached Kanagawa that on the 31st of October nearly all of Hakodadi was burned by incendiary fires.

New York. Feb. 19th. The Herald's Washington dispatch says there will be no change in the command of the Army of the Potomac. It is understood that Meade will retain the position for the next campaign.

There was something of a sensation to-day in the Senate by the statement of Mr. Conness relative to the imperative necessity of sending a fleet of war steamers to the Pacific coast without delay. The authorities have positive information that rebel steamers left Asia for that coast, and it is feared San Francisco will be menaced before the navy can afford the requisite protection.

PEACE RESTORED IN VENEZUELA.—After five years of civil war, the People's party have completely triumphed in Venezuela, and by their moderate and generous treatment of their opponents, as well as by the enlightened policy which they have proclaimed, they offer to the world strong guarantees for the future. Gen. Falcon has been elected Provisional President.

Probably Venezuela will soon join with New Granada and Equador in establishing the "United States of Columbia," on the plan proposed by Gen. Mosquera, well devised to secure peace and prosperity in those extensive and fertile countries.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—

Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive one third the value of the money sent, in any of our books and tracts they may select. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollars' worth; for twelve dollars, four dollars' worth, etc.

Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

MILES GRANT, per order of Publishing Committee.

TO-NIGHT!

I stand, to-night, by my lattice bars,
And outward gaze on the gleaming stars,
As they onward wheel in their restless flight
To deck with glory the brow of night;
I love from the scenes of earth to turn
To the golden lights that gleam and burn.

As I gaze on the midnight's flaming brow;
And the cares of earth are nought to me,
As my thoughts go up, unchained and free,
To roam the boundless fields of air,
'Mid scenes all bright beyond compare.

And yet, ofttimes, as I gaze along
The heavenly dome, with its starry throng,
My hand to my throbbing brow I press,
And sink into utter nothingness;
As I think of the mighty power that made
The night, in its glorious robe arrayed.

Can He who filleth immensity,
Have ever a thought or a care for me?
Ah! yes, I KNOW from His written word,
That the faintest cry on earth is heard;
That the secret thoughts of low or high,
Are never hid from his piercing eye.

When the golden light of the stars shall pale,
That the hand that made and guides the spheres,
From every eye shall wipe all tears;
And I pray, as I look on the starry dome,
That the promised time may quickly come.

MY JOURNAL.

Boston—New Bedford—Wickford, R. I.—Portsmouth, N. H.

Tuesday, Nov. 24th. As noticed in my last, I asked for my dismission from the Advent church in Boston, of which I have had the care so many years; with whom I have suffered in all its changes and misfortunes, and rejoiced in all its prosperity and success. This step was taken with deliberation, with a view of duty to the great western field. It was hard indeed to part with so many of my old fellow laborers in the Lord, yet it was manifestly God's will, and his will is always acceptable to his humble children. "Not my will but thine be done." I shall never find a more true and faithful church. They have known all my trials and cares, and my manner of life, and have stood by me in all the changes that have taken place, and sustained me always in the right. I leave this important chapter of my life to be unfolded by Him whose right it is both to judge and reward.

I have spent the most of this week in visiting christian friends, and preparing for the removal of my office effects to the West. A busy and exciting week. I have not met one, as yet, who does not fill my ears with sad words of regret at my proposed removal westward. And yet, under all the circumstances, they say, Go, and God be with you.

Saturday, Nov. 28th. Took the cars for New Bedford, Mass. Put up with Capt. C. F. Howland, who married my oldest sister. Received a hearty greeting from all the family. Called in the evening on my sister Mary, the wife of Dr. B. F. Howland, and had the kindest reception. Found them all in health. Also called on Bro. Walter Handy (a brother of Mrs. Himes), by whom I was joyfully received. These relations are all among the professed people of God, and enjoy the hope of the gospel; and I hope to meet them in the kingdom when Jesus comes.

Sabbath, Nov. 29th. Have preached all day and evening to the Advent church in this place, and have had a good day in unfolding the riches of the covenant of God's grace to his waiting people. The church have enjoyed the labors of Eld. W. Pratt the last year, till his health failed. They now want a pastor. But Bro. H. V. Davis and a few faithful souls keep the meeting up, and will do so, with or without a minister. Bro. Pratt has turned his attention to the study of the healing art, not being able longer to preach.

Monday, Nov. 30th. Returned to Boston to finish up my work. I have had a busy week in visiting and labor.

Saturday, Dec. 5th. Returned again to New Bedford, visited my youngest sister, Elizabeth Crapo. She, with her kind husband, Charles Crapo, were greatly afflicted by sickness. A beautiful and promising son of about fourteen years is down with diphtheria, with little hope of life. So I gave them my sympathy, and prayers for God's blessing. They both hope in God, and look for the better land where sickness and sorrow can never come.

Sabbath, Dec. 6th. Preached all day and evening with the Advent church. We had a good day, and a kind of farewell with the church and my numerous friends here. It is now forty-three years since I came to New Bedford to reside. My father took me there in April, 1821, and put me to trade with Wm. Knights, a cabinet maker. The year following I was converted in a revival under the labors of Eld. Simon Clough, in the First Christian church. I commenced to speak in public the same year, and held meetings in school houses in the vicinity, and continued till 1827. Here I was married, and most of my relatives reside here, so that New Bedford has been a sort of home to me for more than forty years.

I left New Bedford in 1827 for Plymouth, Mass., and labored with the Christian church there over one year; removed thence to Fall River, Mass., and remained till 1830, and removed thence to Boston, Mass., in August of that year, where I have been located till now. So that New Bedford has been a kind of home to me for long years. And my greetings and partings have been touching.

A Bro. Brown, from So. Middleboro, called upon me to-day to inquire about the West. We had a long conversation, and I hope he may find it his duty to go west. He can do better there with his means and gifts than in the East, both for himself and the cause of Christ.

At the close of the service this evening took the parting hand, and bade brethren and friends adieu for the present. We shall soon meet in the kingdom.

Monday, Dec. 7th. Took the cars from New Bedford to Providence, R. I. While here I visited my brother, A. S. Himes, who had just buried his wife. His family is broken up. How sad to lose those who have been the light of our dwellings and the dearest companions of life's joys and sorrows! But God sustains my dear brother, and has sanctified this sore affliction to him. Elder Oaley and wife kindly ministered to him in the hour of his affliction. He has the "blessed hope" also to sustain him.

In the afternoon went on to Rocky Brook, R. I. Arrived at six P. M., and put up with Bro. C. F. Dixon. Preached at seven P. M. to a large audience from the town and vicinity. I enjoyed a blessed season in proclaiming the coming kingdom near. At the close I received a most hearty greeting from large numbers of the saints. My heart was much cheered by their words and deeds. The Adventists have a large chapel and good congregation here. It is the only chapel in the village. May God sustain and prosper them in the truth.

Tuesday, Dec. 8th. Came to Wickford, R. I., my native place, five miles from Rocky Brook, and twenty from Providence. I had not been here for thirty years; so I took the day to visit the scenes of my childhood, and the graves of my ancestors. Wickford is the place of my birth. I was born in 1805, in this village located on the shore of the Narragansett Bay, in the town of North Kingston. Here I was brought up to the age of thirteen years. I went to the house where I was born, and the old school-house where I received the first elements of an education, and the old church where I received my first religious impressions under the labors of Priest Burge, and the late Bishop Griswold, of the Protestant Episcopal church. These buildings all remain, though old, and some of them in a dilapidated state. No one can tell with what intense interest I looked upon these old structures, while the incidents and memories of youth crowded upon my mind. I also went out to the old homestead, or farm, where we removed to reside when I was at the age of thirteen years, with my two brothers and four sisters. Thirty years had made a great change. But still the old house remained, and was as natural as life. This I viewed in every part. Then the graveyard of my ancestors. Among the stones that interested me most was that of my grandfather, after whom I was named.

"In memory of
JOSHUA VAUGHN, WHO DIED AUG. 30, 1798,
Aged 47 years and 10 months.
This stone stands here to show the place
Where his dust lies, not what he was;
When saints shall rise, that day will show
The part he acted here below."

Mary Vaughn, his wife, lies by his side, who died in 1833. I hope to meet these, with others who slumber here, "in the resurrection of the just."

I then visited the fields and orchards where I used to labor, and recalled many incidents of early life; drew water from the old well, and drank again out of the "old oaken bucket," and never did water taste so sweet. The beautiful young pippin orchard had so decayed that I hardly recognized it. I myself had turned gray, and gave signs of age; but this beautiful orchard of thirty years ago had suffered in appearance more than I. Some good old trees, from which I used to gather fruit, were gone, and the green sward covered the places where their trunks once stood, with their wide spread branches. Such is the change of thirty years. All here is under the curse, decaying and dying. But how glorious the prospect of that world soon to come, where we shall live,

I dined in the old kitchen, with the present occupant of the old homestead, a genial, christian man; after which I left for my meeting in the evening, at Lafayette, about two miles, on the old "ten rod road," towards Wickford. I visited Sr. Taylor, and others in the neighborhood of the church, and preached in the evening to a full house, many of whom were my playmates in childhood, but now blossomed with age. I had much freedom in speaking on the duty and privilege of the church to read and understand the prophetic word; and by this word I showed that the kingdom was nigh at hand. We had a refreshing season, and were warmly greeted by many, after which I bade them adieu, perhaps till the last trump shall sound.

At the close, I walked five miles to the Kingston station, to get the A. M. train, with a view of being in Providence in season to go to New Bedford to attend the funeral of my sister Crapo's son. At 7 A. M., with my sister, Martha Kinyon, and her son, took the cars for New Bedford, and attended the funeral of the boy of whom I spoke before as having the diphtheria. This is a heavy loss to my sister and her husband, also to the school, of which he was the best scholar, and to the Sabbath School, of which he was an interesting member. But he died in the Lord, and will come forth in the first resurrection. We have hope—a glorious hope—of which I spoke on the occasion, in connection with Eld. Coe.

By this sad event I was very unexpectedly placed in the midst of my relatives and friends again, to weep with them, and again take the parting hand, which I had done but a few days before. Soon we shall meet to part—never. The Lord hasten the day!

This evening I called upon Capt. Ichabod Hardy, a brother-in-law, who has just returned from the Arctic Ocean, on a whaling voyage. His vessel was crushed in the ice in July last, and he and his twenty-seven men had to take to their boats. One boat was lost, with all on board. The other two survived fifty-nine days, in open boats. At length they were carried into St. Johns, N. B., in safety. They were all in good health and good cheer. And the Capt. thinks to go again next spring. There is something enchanting about the Arctic regions.

Thursday, Dec. 10th. Returned to Boston in the A. M., and took the cars for Portsmouth, N. H. in the P. M. Called on Robinson Berry, with whom I made my home, and was very cordially greeted by the family. Preached in the Advent chapel at half-past seven, P. M., to a good audience, on the blessedness of the study of God's word. The sweetness of the promises of the coming kingdom were enjoyed by us all. Praise the Lord. I bade this dear church farewell for the present. There are many precious souls here that I shall no doubt meet in the kingdom.

Friday, Dec. 11th. At an early hour took passage with some brethren over to the Navy Yard in Kittery, Me. There is a goodly company of our brethren at work here for the Government. My object in going over was to call upon Sr. H. Spinney, and friends, old acquaintances, and members for long years of the church in Boston. My visit was a pleasant one. On my return, called upon a number of other families, whom I may not see again in this life; but I shall see Srs. Huntress, Moses, Foster, and many other of these dear and tried saints, in the kingdom when Jesus comes. Bidding all farewell, I took the cars for Boston at noon, and arrived at 4 P. M.

Saturday, Dec. 12th. Finished the last number of Vol. 4 of the "Voice of the Prophets," preparatory to the publication of the "Voice of the West, and Advent Pioneer," at Buchanan, Mich. In the P. M. took the cars for Westboro, Mass., to preach on the Sabbath. Met kind and sympathizing brethren here, who understand my mission and appreciate my motives. It is good to meet such and get a word of good cheer.

Sunday, Dec. 13th. Spoke three times today, and but for weariness should have visited the Reform School in the A. M. Bro. Geo. H. Child, of the Advent church, is the superintendent of the Sabbath School, which he informs me is very interesting. They have some four hundred boys now in the institution. The church here is low, and needs help. But they are firm in faith, and will hold on and keep up the cause. I had a good day with them, and one long to be remembered.

Monday, Dec. 14th. Returned to Boston at noon, and arranged to go South in the afternoon.

TELLING JESUS.

"They took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jesus."

"Go and tell Jesus when thy heart is full
Of keen and bitter agony and woe;
When the dear precious form of one beloved
Is parted from thee; in the grave laid low;
Go and tell Jesus,—He will soothe thy grief—
To thy poor suffering spirit bring relief."

Are you bereaved? Have you lost a husband, a wife, a mother, a son, or a daughter,—one dear as your life? "Go and tell Jesus"; he will bind up the broken heart, weep with you as he did with Martha and Mary at the grave of Lazarus.

Are you troubled on every side—tempest-tossed? Tell Jesus all about it; he will say to the raging billows, "Peace, be still," and there will be a great calm.

"When the clouds are gathering o'er thee,
And the path looks dark before thee;
When thy feet are worn and weary,
And thy way seems long and dreary,
Go to Jesus."

Are you tempted to pride, vain glorying, to think more highly of yourself than you ought? Take this serpent of serpents to Jesus, nail it to his cross. "I am the Lord; that is my name; and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images."—Isa. 42: 8. "Let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord."

Are you bowed down under manifold temptations? Go to Jesus with them; lay them at his feet,—"cast all your care upon him, for he careth for you."

"Look unto Jesus, when thine aching heart
Is with remembrance of its sin opprest:
He careth for thee: weary as thou art,
And heavy laden, he will give thee rest.
Look to thy Savior; he has ransomed thee,
And paid thy debt of sin on Calvary."

Are you joyful in God? Is your soul on fire with holy love?

"Go and tell Jesus, when thy heart is glad,
And hope, and joy, and friendship crowd thy way,
Ask for his sanctifying grace o'er all,
That naught may cause thy heart from them to stray;
Go and tell Jesus, making joy more bright,

"This going to Jesus, and telling him all that is in our hearts, little things and great things," says President A. Mahan, "is the secret of all holy living; the pre-eminent piety of Paul and the primitive christians. It is explained in one single expression of the sacred writer, 'looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith.' They were 'determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified.' They literally counted all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord.' He was their 'wisdom,' their 'righteousness,' their 'sanctification,' and 'redemption.' He was their consolation in affliction. He was their pattern, their leader, and guide. He was their victory in every conflict with 'the world, the flesh, and the devil.' He was their joy, their hope, their inheritance, their shield, and their 'exceeding great reward.' He was their 'bright and morning star,' the magnet of their souls, which held all the powers of their being in a blissful fixedness to one changeless centre.

"Now, christian, if you will believe it, Christ will be to you all that he was to them. 'He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever'; and you may share as they did in the infinite fulness of the love and grace of Christ. But if you would enjoy this full redemption, the powers of your being must be brought under the influence of this one principle, 'Looking unto Jesus.'

"Do your sins rise up before you, and fill you with apprehensions of coming retribution? 'Look to Jesus.' Do you desire to be freed from the power of sin, and be presented to God 'without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing'? 'Look to Jesus.' Are you burdened with care, or do the storms of affliction gather around you? 'Look to Jesus.' Is your temper unsubdued? do your appetites and propensities rebel, and call for unhallowed gratification? 'Look to Jesus.' Do you need wisdom and grace for any exigency whatever? 'Look to Jesus.' Whatever your condition or necessities may be, hear his gracious voice, 'Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and you shall find rest unto your souls.'

"There is not a want in the sinner, but there is a corresponding fulness in Christ; for 'it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell.' Is the sinner hungry? Let him come to Christ, and he shall be made to partake of the bread of life. Is he thirsty? Let him come to Christ, and he shall be permitted to drink of the wells of salvation. Is the sinner sick? Let him come to Christ, and he shall have life and vigor infused into his soul. Is he naked? Let him come to Christ, and he shall receive a beauteous robe. Is he blind? Let him come to Christ, and he shall have his eyes opened to see wondrous things. Is he deaf? Let him come to Christ, and he shall hear the voice of uncreated harmony, speaking peace to his happy soul. Is the sinner burdened? Let him come to Christ, and his burden shall be taken away. Does he long for rest? Let him come to Christ, and he shall have sweet repose. Yes, no matter what may be the sinner's wants or woes, only let him come to Christ, and he shall be made rich and happy, throughout all time, and throughout all eternity."

"Christ is the way, the truth, the life divine;
Seek thou on earth to take this Christ as thine;
For he that lives in Christ, in Christ shall die,
And dwell with Christ in heaven eternally."

Author of "Home Thrusts."

THE TRUE MILLENNIUM.—A perfect church! What joy! what peace! We only need this, we sometimes think, to make a millennium. But, indeed, it would not make a millennium. It would make an aceldama. For the world would be in arms to put to death the perfect ones as they did Christ. It is only Christ's coming that can make a millennium. And when he shall come with power as well as purity, with reigning sovereignty as well as with wooing love, then shall the church have her Sabbath, and it shall be said, "Hallelujah! the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ!"—C. Spurgeon.

HUMAN CREEDS.

We will suppose that now for the first time the gospel is preached in a city. A great turning to God takes place, and hundreds are gathered into Christ's fold. They are of one heart and of one soul. They all love one another, and thus give full evidence they are Christ's disciples. These true souls constitute the church of God in that city, without any of that human arrangement called "gathering into the church." Their only creed is the Bible; their only bond of union is the love of God. We think the position apostolic, and a plain one.

These persons all continue in this loving communion and fellowship till there comes in a Baptist, a Methodist, a Presbyterian, etc. What is the work of these different sects? Not to kindle the flame of love higher. Is it not to gather converts into their own church? First, out of kindness to be sure, each sect sets itself to work to show its CREED, or what is the same thing, to prove their peculiar views are right and all the rest are wrong. Each party salutes the young converts' ears in this way, and is careful to keep up an impression that they are not yet in the visible church, but that they ought to join somewhere.

Soon the revival stops. What's the matter? The minds of the converts have been diverted from the unity of love, to contemplate the discordant doctrines or creeds, that have been presented for their consideration in order to their uniting with some church. They lose sight of the fact that they all belong to the church of God. Now is the question, Where shall we join? with the Methodists, Baptists, or with what church? At first they think they cannot be separated. They have no fear of quarreling because they do not think just alike on doctrine; they feel nothing must separate them from each other. But these different sects keep presenting arguments to prove the necessity of joining their church. So this new-born church of God separate; one goes one way, another that way. Soon their love grows cold. They become proud and stupid, and continue ignorant in the things of God. Instead of growing in grace, they grow in pride and forgetfulness of the truth. Their love is even turned into hatred. They partake of the same spirit with those who first taught them to depart from Christ and his gospel.

Man made creeds, human creeds. Oceans of blood have been shed, and millions of dollars have been spent to sustain them, and millions of souls will be finally lost in consequence of them. It is a noted fact that there are some persons belonging to one of the sects who manifest such hatred to those of another denomination, that they will not speak to them when they meet; all because their creeds differ; and they have expressed doubt whether any one not subscribing to their creed will be saved.

Human creeds have blinded the minds of thousands; and this is the result of separating the children of God by such tests. Alas for that creed or religion that must divide what God has joined together!

QUERIES FOR TRUTH-SEEKERS.

1st. If we are witnessing the predicted mission of the "Spirits of devils working miracles," are we not living under the sixth vial?

2nd. If we are living under the sixth vial, inasmuch as men had "the mark of the beast," and "worshiped his IMAGE" under the first vial, (Rev. 16: 2) is not the development of the "Image of the beast" in the past?

3rd. If the "Image" of the beast existed as far back as the pouring out of the first vial, inasmuch as the two-horned beast was to exist early enough to command them to "make this "Image to the beast (Rev. 13: 14, 15) is not the rise of the two-horned beast also in the past?

W. SHELDON.

P. S. If the two-horned beast is to rise in the future, and his rise being before the formation of the Image to the beast, as the "Image" is located under the first vial, must not the first vial be poured out in the future? and also the sixth vial under which we believe we are living? If we wait for the future rise of the two-horned beast, must we not subsequently wait for the pouring out of the vials before the Savior comes?

One of the two of these great principles reigns in and rules every child of Adam. If we have sought salvation we have found peace and entered into life and partaken of the divine nature, which God originally gave to us. If on the other hand we have violated that nature by plunging into sin, sorrow and shame are our companions,—we have hardened our hearts, and unfitted ourselves either for happiness or heaven.

Righteousness and sin are two powerful antagonisms. They have eternally been at war. They are dissimilar in character and design, and seek for nothing in common but occupancy. No one single heart is large enough to contain them both. If Christ be in us the hope of glory, the devil is ruled out.

The strife is sometimes tremendous between these two combatants. "Not I, but sin which dwelleth in me." Again, "When I would do good evil is present with me." The experience of Paul is that of every man. Show us the man who has dared to do right to enter into the higher life, to trample the tempter under his feet; and I will cite you to one whose battles have been as numerous as his victories successful.

Life is a conflict. No man gains the victory till the last battle is fought. Desertion is as difficult and dangerous then as at any time in the warfare. Patriotism is a noble principle, but holiness to God is as much superior as the character of God is to the country he has made. The true soldier reposes confidence in the skill of his commander, and fights most powerfully when the enemy presses the hardest. So when christians are assailed they need to hang hold of the weapon of prayer, and buckle on the whole armor of God.

Holiness is the product of right action. Sin is the result of wrong action. Both depend upon the voluntary choice. Righteousness is all around us. Wickedness is just beneath us. It is easier, cheaper and better to be good than it is to be bad. Goodness is the love of all nature. Vice is opposed to the constitution of man. Ministers tell us how much more natural it is to swear than to pray, to do wrong than to do right. But what kind of nature do they mean? That which a man makes for himself or which God made for him? This habitual nature pitched and plastered on to a man is hardly worthy the name of nature, while that God gave has stability, and will endure as long as life.

Holiness is the real vital power that sets the whole machinery of nature to whirling. Holiness is a sort of regulator to man's nature. As the dial measures time, so does holiness measure man, giving us a key to his character. Now if any lady, black or white, rich or poor, high or low, young or old, would be happy, safe and useful, let him just seek holiness, conform to the divine law, choose the right and pursue it, live a life of simplicity and sincere devotion, let gratitude grow up in your heart, let thanksgiving ascend to the Giver of the blessings so bountifully bestowed upon you; and, in a word, live to honor God and praise him forever.

TRUSTING IN GOD.

Thank the Lord that I have learned the great lesson of trusting in God. Dear brethren and sisters, have you learned it? Methinks I hear you say, "I learned to trust in him when he forgave my sins." Well, I thought I knew what it was to trust in God some fifteen years ago; but I did not know any thing about it till about four years since, when I had a sick husband and two little children, without any thing to eat. Then I learned to ask my heavenly Father for my daily bread. I got it, for he is more willing to give good gifts to his children than earthly parents are to theirs. How often we hear those that are worth their hundreds and thousands say they trust in God. They do not know any thing about it. Their money prevents them. How can we trust in God for our daily bread, when we have got five or ten dollars to buy bread, or how can we ask for our daily bread, when we have got it in the house? It is very easy to say we trust in God, with our hundreds; but it is another thing to trust in him without a cent. Praise the Lord. Yes, praise the Lord, that he has got some that really know what it is to trust in him, and when they ask him for this daily bread, they know they will get it; know not because they are worthy, but because He is faithful that has promised, and they need it.

O how good the Lord is! He has promised never to leave nor forsake those that trust in him. When we have learned to trust in him, how much better we love him, for we know he careth for us. Thank the Lord. I am just simple-hearted enough to believe God means what he says, and trust in him. Yes, I have been a fool in the eyes of the world for Christ's sake. Praise God.

Dear brethren and sisters, I should like to tell you some of God's dealings with me for some time past, if it would strengthen your faith. How the Lord has led me in a way I know not, and I have learned to walk by faith and not by sight. I have asked the Lord for things I really needed, and had them sent to me before night. I believe in asking in secret, and he will reward openly! If I am needing any thing, I have no right to go and get trusted, or borrow of my neighbors; for the word says, "Owe no man any thing." Then what can I do, but go to my heavenly Father? I know he is sick, and he is more willing to give good gifts to his children, than earthly parents are to theirs; so with confidence I go to him.

I truly feel that all I have is the Lord's. Praise the Lord, O my soul. I desire an interest in your prayers that my faith fail not; for without faith it is impossible to please God. May God bless you with living faith, that will take God at his word. Amen.

Your sister in the faith that was one delivered to the saints.

MARY R. HOOK.

POOR RICHARD'S ALMANAC.

Every one speaks of Poor Richard, but few ever read him. Below we give the cream of the whole of his wisdom—that is to say of Franklin's wisdom—though they were selected, not written by him.

An egg to-day is better than a hen to-morrow.

God heals and the doctors take the fees.

Mary's mouth costs her nothing, for she never opens it but to another's expense.

He that would live at peace and at ease, must not speak all he knows, nor judge all he sees.

He that can travel well afoot, keeps a good horse.

He that falls in love with himself will have no rivals.

Tart words make no friends; a spoonful of honey will catch more flies than a gallon of vinegar.

Keep thy shop, and thy shop will keep thee.

A ploughman on his legs is higher than a gentleman on his knees.

Mad kings and mad bulls are not to be held by treaties and pack thread.

What maintains one vice will bring up two children.

He that has a trade has an office of profit and honor.

Plow deep while sluggards sleep, and you will have corn to seel and to keep.

NOT PREPARED.

Seldom have I heard a more affecting incident than that related by a country physician. He was called to see a lady who had been sick but three days. Her husband took him into the next room, and asked what he thought of her case. He said it must terminate fatally. When they come back to her bedside, she saw something in their countenances which led her to say:

"Doctor, what have you been telling my husband? Did you say I could not live?"

The doctor, with great reluctance, felt obliged to say, "Yes." Instantly she threw out her arms towards him, and setting her anxious glazed eye upon him, exclaimed,

"Oh, doctor, you must not let me die. You must keep me a little longer in the world, for I have made no preparation."

He carried the story no farther, except to say that it made an impression on him which he hoped would never be effaced.

I remember a case much like it; that of a bright, attractive young lady, amiable and much esteemed; to all appearance "gay and happy," and without the least inclination to religion. She was healthy and of a good constitution; but sickness came, and ere she was aware the hand of death was upon her. Feeling very strangely, she cried to the lady who sat by her, "Is this death? Oh, I cannot die, I cannot die!" and immediately expired.

I ask myself, Shall I be in this awful condition when my hour comes? Oh, God forbid. And that I may not, let me be prayerful and careful now while death is not quite in sight.—American Messenger.

A HEART-RENDING REPROOF.

A short time since, a lady who had been remarkable for her thoughtlessness, requested a professedly pious lady to accompany her that day to visit another lady, who was also professedly pious.

The afternoon passed away, and the subject of religion was not mentioned—probably for fear of offending the gay friend who proposed the visit. As the two neighbors walked towards home, the first-mentioned remarked that she had lost the afternoon, for nothing would have induced her to leave home, but the expectation of hearing something about religion; but she added, "I came to the conclusion that there is nothing in religion, or that my neighbors do not possess it, for if they did, would speak to me about my soul." She said she had been greatly alarmed about herself for several days, but had concluded that afternoon, that if religion is not worth talking about, it was not worth thinking of.

"Never," said that pious neighbor, "shall I forget that look of despair and reproach. I felt that I had murdered a soul by my neglect."—American Messenger.

PRUNING MANUSCRIPTS.—The most grievous fault with unpractised writers, particularly with those who write for the papers, is that they do not take time to make their pieces shorter. If, when you have dashed off an article that would fill a column, you will go over it with a pruning knife, and with laborious patience trim it down to the space of one-half, or one-third of a column, you will be much more likely to gain readers, to say nothing of gladdening the heart of the editor.

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

THE HONEST BOY.

A boy went into his uncle's shop, and found his uncle counting out the silver from his money box on the counter. Presently he picked out a quarter and threw it one side. "That's counterfeit," said he. "Somebody passed it off on you; why should not you pass it off on somebody, uncle?" asked George.

"Counterfeiting is a great sin," answered uncle. "When counterfeiters are caught in this country, they are put in prison. In England the law is more severe than with us. There they used to be hung, but now they are transported out of the country to work as felons in some of her colonies. And those who pass counterfeit money, George, if they know it, are as bad as those who make it."

"You took it for good money, said George;" "so have not you as good right to pass it again?"

"If I passed it away before I knew it was bad, I should not of course be to blame," said uncle George, "but knowing it is bad, if I passed it, I should not only break the laws of the country, but the law of God, 'Thou shalt not steal.'"

"There are a great many other things that can be counterfeited besides money; pedlers who make wooden nutmes and sell them for real ones—that is counterfeiting; it is stealing, or breaking the eighth commandment by cunning; and everybody who gets up an imitation of any thing real and valuable, and sells it for the genuine article, is a thief."

"May I have this?" asked George, taking up the quarter and looking at it; "I'll keep it as a pocket-piece."

"Yes," said his uncle, "you may have it."

On his way home, for he was on an errand for his master, he compared it with some real quarters of his master's money, and thought it pretty difficult to tell which was which. That afternoon he showed it to the boys, and Gus Dow declared he'd pass it. There was a small candy shop kept by an old lady at the corner, and the boys tried to persuade him one afternoon to pass it there between daylight and dark, and "treat." "He would do no such thing," he said. But a week or so after that, as he was passing a store, he saw a lantern hanging up, just such a one as his mother wanted. He went in and asked the price. "Twenty-five cents." Then, if ever, he was tempted to pass his counterfeit; nobody would know it; the boy who tended was a "green horn," and he would take it for good.

George was tempted; he forgot, for a moment, "Thou shalt not do evil that good may come." But he was a Sabbath school scholar, and the words of a faithful teacher came in full force to his conscience. The thought that God saw him; that doing it would break God's law, whether he was found out or not, took strong hold of his mind, and he prayed God while he was going out of the shop, to keep him from the temptation.

George went home, dug a hole in the ground, and buried the counterfeit quarter. "You shall never tempt me or anybody else again," said he, covering it up, and stamping the earth with his heel.—Child's Paper.

LOVING GOD.

"John, do you love God?" a teacher asked a bright little boy of six years old.

"Oh, yes, missus, I love God a heap."

"What makes you love him?"

"Mammy says he gives me breath every day, and he helped us run off from old massa. He give me good strong legs," looking down at the stout little limbs, appearing at some length beneath the ragged covering which scarcely deserved the name of pantaloons.

"Yes, John, you ought to love God since he has been so kind to you, and has made you a free child. And now he has sent you books and teachers that you may learn about him, you must love him more and more every day."

"Yes, missus, that I will."

"Well, John, how are you going to show your love to God?"

Then the little fellow was puzzled. He put his finger in his mouth, and cast his eyes down to the ground, and stood still to think. At last he raised his head with a very cunning look.

"I bring you flowers and eggs, and I'se going to give you some sweet 'taters when they's grown; but I can't give sich to God, can I?"

"No, my little boy. We have to show our love to him in another way. I will tell you how. By trying to please him in all we do."

"Please him? How?"

"By doing just what he tells us to do, and by not doing what he forbids."

"Oh, well, I'd do that, if I only knowed."

"He says you must never tell a lie. Will you mind that?"

"But I telled a lie to-day. I tore the book; but I was afeared you'd whip, so I telled you no."

"Oh, that was very wicked, John; God was not pleased then."

"I'se sorry, but I didn't know. I'll never do so no more,—never."

"And God says you must not steal. You must never take the least thing that belongs to another."

"Not a red cent?"

"I won't then, never no more."

"And God says you must obey your parents. You must mind them the minute they speak; and never do what they tell you not to."

"Hi! reckon that's hard."

"No matter if it is hard. You must do it to please that good God who has been so kind to you. Will you try?"

"I'll try, right smart."

And John did try, and it was really wonderful to see the change in him. He prayed every day that God would help him to do right; for you know we can do nothing without God's help. And the good Spirit was sent into his heart to teach him the right way. And he was a very happy boy, for God always makes those happy who try to please him and do his will. He says, "I love them that love me, and those that seek me early shall find me."—The Freedman.

HIRING CHILDREN.

"I can't get Frank to do a thing without hiring him," said a mother to me one day. "He seems very avaricious for such a boy. There he is now," she said, looking out of the parlor window and smiling, "working away with all his might. I shall have to pay him a dime for that. He is saving up his money for a trip to the city."

There were plenty of dimes and dollars in mother's portemonnie, so the hiring system was no great inconvenience to her, but the influence on the mind of her child was very hurtful. A child who is hired to do whatever he is told, can never be an obedient one. Even a single instance of it resorted to, as some mothers will, in an emergency, will do much to undermine a parent's authority.

A captain once in a storm offered his men extra pay if they would make extra efforts for the ship's safety. It succeeded well, but ever afterward they looked for the same promise before they could be induced to do their duty in a storm. Instead of a cheerful promptness, in doing whatever a parent desires, a paid child goes grudgingly to every task, and quickly learns to strike for higher wages when it can be safely done.

It is very well to have children early taught habits of industry, and they should be early encouraged to earn money for specific uses, but a wise discrimination is needed in such matters, or more harm than good will be the result. First of all, a child should be taught instant obedience to a parent's wish; little hands and hearts should be taught to be ready and cheerful in performing all manner of work that a child may. After that lesson is thoroughly learned, it may be well to enter at times into a distinctly specified agreement with the child, paying him a certain fixed sum, for some particular piece of work, not in the exact line of his every duties. It should be left to his choice whether to accept the proposal or not, but once commenced, a parent should impress on his mind the importance of perseverance until it is completed. These childish lessons we think so little of, have often a lifelong bearing.

"After we were six years old," said a Vermonter, "we all earned our living." I cannot imagine how it was done, but I never knew a more upright, industrious, clock-work family. The daughters were educated at the first young ladies' seminary in the land, and one at least, is now an earnest laborer in a foreign mission field. Good habits formed in childhood are the richest legacy you can leave your children. Without them they are poor even with richest stores of silver and gold. However lowly your lot may be, it is in your power to leave them this priceless inheritance.—Chronicle.

SIMPLICITY OF FAITH.—The Savior said that one must become as a little child in order to enter the kingdom of heaven. Here is a beautiful record of childhood's faith.

"What do you do without a mother to tell all your troubles to?" asked a child who had a mother of one who had not; her mother was dead.

"Mother told me whom to go to before she died," answered the little orphan. "I go to the Lord Jesus. He was mother's Friend, and he's mine."

"Jesus Christ is up in the sky. He is away off and has a great many things to attend to in heaven. It is not likely he can stop to mind you."

"I do not know anything about that," said the orphan; "all I know is, he says he will, and that's enough for me."

WHERE IS YOUR BOY?—We saw him last evening, in the company of very bad boys, and they each had a cigar; and now and then, some of them used very profane language. As we looked at your son we wondered if you knew where he was, and with whom he associates. Dear friend, do not be so closely confined to your shop, office, or ledger, as to neglect that boy. He will bring sorrow into your household if you do not bring proper parental restraint to bear upon him—and that very soon. Sabbath and public school teachers can help you, but you must do most.—British Workman.

FOLLOW JESUS.

They cast him out, my blessed Lord,
They mocked him when he wept,
He had not where to lay his head,
On mountains lone he slept.
He wandered weary, faint and cold,
Deep suffering was his lot;
He came to visit those he loved,
But they received him not.
I'll follow Jesus.

The gay of earth refused to hear
The Lord of glory speak;
The church, with boasted piety
And power, though sadly weak,
Cast forth the King they waited for,
And would not own his right.
Ah! since that hour the church has seen
A dark and bitter night.
I'll follow Jesus.

The rulers scorned his acts of love;
The world refused its King,
And would not have the happiness
The Savior came to bring.
There was no place for him to live,
No rest for him till dead,
No home when living, and in death
Nought but a borrowed bed.
I'll follow Jesus.

They cast him out from hall and court,
Proud people and blind priests,
And rather than "the Nazarene,"
A murderer released!
No room for him when gay ones met,
The poor received him best;
The lame and blind, the sad, the sick,
Alone pronounced him blest.
I'll follow Jesus.

So now the world rejects its King,
Earth's nobles claim the throne;
And when the Lord again shall come,
The poor will be his own.
Ah! world, he comes his saints to bless,
To reign from shore to shore;
He comes our everlasting King,
To suffer shame no more!
I'll follow Jesus.

JUSTIFICATION BY GRACE.

BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON, OF LONDON.

(Concluded.)

"Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus."—ROM. 3: 24.

Here I stand, the sinner. I mention myself as a representative of you all. I am condemned to die. God says, "I will condemn that man; I must, I will—I will punish him." Christ comes in, puts me aside, and stands himself in my stead. When the plea is demanded, Christ says, "Guilty;" takes my guilt to be his own guilt. When the punishment is to be executed, forth comes Christ. "Punish me," he says, "I have put my righteousness on that man, and I have taken that man's sins on me. Father, punish me, and consider that man to have been me. Let him reign in heaven; let me suffer misery. Let me endure his curse, and let him receive my blessing." This marvellous doctrine of the changing of places of Christ with poor sinners, is a doctrine of revelation, for it never could have been conceived by nature. Let me, lest I should have made a mistake, explain myself again. The way whereby God saves a sinner is not, as some say, by passing over the penalty. No; the penalty has been all paid. It is the putting of another person in the rebel's place. The rebel must die; God says he must. Christ says, "I will be substitute for the rebel. The rebel shall take my place; I will take his." God consents to it. No earthly monarch could have power to consent to such a change. But the God of heaven had a right to do as he pleased. In his infinite mercy he consented to the arrangement. "Son of my love," said he, "you must stand in the sinner's place; you must suffer what he ought to have suffered; you must be accounted guilty, just as he was accounted guilty; and then I will look upon the sinner in another light. I will look at him as if he were Christ; I will accept him as if he were my only begotten Son, full of grace and truth. I will give him a crown in heaven, and I will take him to my heart for ever and ever. "Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus."

And now, let me further go on to explain some of the characteristics of this justification. As soon as a repenting sinner is justified, remember, he is justified for all his sins. Here stands a man all guilty. The moment he believes in Christ, his pardon at once he receives, and his sins are no longer his; they are cast into the depths of the sea. They were laid up on the shoulders of Christ, and they are gone. The man stands a guiltless man in the sight of God, accepted in the Beloved. "What!" say you, "do you mean that literally?" Yes, I do, that is the doctrine of justification by faith. Man ceases to be regarded by divine justice as a guilty being; the moment he believes in Christ his guilt is all taken away. But I am going a step further. The moment the man believes in Christ he ceases to be guilty in God's esteem; but what is more, he becomes righteous, and meritorious; for, in the moment when Christ takes his sins he takes Christ's righteousness; so that, when God looks upon the sinner who but an hour ago was dead in sins, he looks on him with as much love and affection as he ever looked upon his Son. He himself has said it—"As the Father loved me, so have I loved you." He loves us as much as his Father loved him. Can you believe such a doctrine as that? Does it not pass all thought?

3. And now I close up with the third point, upon which I shall be brief, and I hope very earnest: THE MANNER OF GIVING THE JUSTIFICATION. John Bunyan would have it, that there are some whose mouths are set a watering for this great gift of justification. Are there not some here who are saying, "O! if I could be justified! But, sir, can I be justified? I have been a drunkard, a swearer, and every thing that is vile. Can I be justified?" Yes, poor soul, if thou desirest it. "Well, but how is it to be obtained?" says one; "must I be a holy man for many years, and then get?" Listen! "Freely by his grace;" "freely," because there is no price to be paid for it; "by his grace," because it is not of our deservings. "But, O sir, I have been praying, and do not think God will forgive me, unless I do something to deserve it." I tell you, sir, if you bring in any of your deservings, you shall never have it. God gives away his justification freely; and if you bring any thing to pay for it, he will throw it in your face, and will not give his justification to you. He gives it away freely. Old Rowland Hill once went preaching at a fair; he noticed the chapmen selling their wares by auction; so Rowland said, "I am going to hold an auction too, to sell wine and milk, without money and without price. My friends over there," said he, "find a great difficulty to get you up to their price; my difficulty is to bring you down to mine." So it is with men. If I could preach justification to you at a sovereign a piece, who would go out of the place without being justified? If I could preach justification to you by walking a hundred miles, would we not be pilgrims to-morrow morning, every one of us? If I were to preach justification which would consist in whippings and torture, there are very few here who would not whip themselves, and that severely, too. But when it is freely, freely, freely, men turn away. "What; am I to have it for nothing at all, without doing any thing?" Yes, sir, you are to have it for nothing, or else not at all; it is "freely." "Whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely." But if you cleave to your own notions, and say, "No, sir, I mean to do a great many good things, and then I will believe in Christ." Sir, you will be damned if you hold by such delusions. I earnestly warn you. You cannot be saved so. "Well, but are we not to do good works?" Certainly you are, but you are not to trust in them. You must trust in Christ wholly, and then do good works afterward. "But," says one, "I think if I were to do a few good works, it would be a little recommendation when I came." It would not, sir; they would be no recommendation at all. Let a beggar come to your house in white kid gloves, and say he is very badly off, and wants some charity; would the white kid gloves recommend him to your charity? "No," you would say, "you are a miserable impostor; you do not want any thing, and you shall not have any thing either! Out with you!"

The best livery for a beggar is rags, and the best livery for a sinner to go to Christ in, is for him to go just as he is, with nothing but sin about him. "But no," say you, "I must be a little better, and then I think Christ will save me." You cannot get any better, try as long as you please. And besides—to use a paradox—if you were to get better, you would be all the worse; for the worse you are, the better to come to Christ. If you are all unholy, come to Christ; if you feel your sin, and renounce it, come to Christ; though you have been the most debased and abandoned soul, come to Christ; if you feel yourself to have nothing about you to recommend you, come to Christ.

Let no other trust intrude."

I do not say this to urge any man to continue in sin. God forbid! If you continue in sin you must not come to Christ; you cannot; your sins will hamper you. You cannot be chained to your galley-oar—the oar of your sins—yet come to Christ, and be a free man. No, sir, it is repentance; it is the immediate leaving off the sin. But mark thee, neither repentance, nor leaving off thy sin, can save thee. It is Christ, Christ, Christ,—Christ only.

But I know you will go away, many of you, and try to build up your own Babel-tower, to go to heaven. Some of you will go one way to work, and some another. One says, "I will go and study the Bible, and believe right doctrine; and I have no doubt I shall be saved. Indeed you will not! You can be no more saved by believing right doctrine than you can by doing right actions. "There," says another, "I like that; I shall go and believe in Christ, and like as I like." Indeed you will not! For if you believe in Christ he will not let you live as your flesh liketh; by his Spirit he will constrain you to mortify its affections and lusts. If he gives you the grace to make you believe, he will give you the grace to live a holy life afterward. If he gives you faith, he gives you good works afterward. You cannot believe in Christ, unless you renounce every fault, and resolve to serve him with full purpose of heart. Methinks at last I hear a sinner say, "Is that the only door? And may I venture through it? Then I will."

Faith is something like this. There is a story told of a captain of a man-of-war, whose son—a young lad—was very fond of running up the rigging of the ship; and one time, running after a monkey, he ran up the mast, till at last he got on the main-truck. Now, the main-truck, you are aware, is like a large round table put on the mast, so that when the boy was on the main-truck there was plenty of room for him; but the difficulty was—to use the best explanation I can—that he could not reach the mast that was under the table; he was not tall enough to get down from this main-truck; he managed to get there, somehow or other, but down he never could get. His father saw that, and looked up in horror; what was he to do? In a few moments his son would fall down, and be dashed to pieces. He was clinging to the main-truck with all his might, but in a little time he would fall down on the deck, and there he would be a mangled corpse. The captain called for a speaking trumpet; he put it to his mouth, and shouted, "Boy, the next time the ship lurches, throw yourself into the sea." It was, in truth, the only way of escape; he might be picked up out of the sea, but he could not be rescued if he fell on the deck. The poor boy looked down on the sea; it was a long way; he could not bear the idea of throwing himself into the roaring current beneath him; he thought it looked dangerous. How could he cast himself down into it? So he clung to the main-truck with all his might, though there was no doubt he must soon let go and perish. The father called for a gun, and pointing it up to him, said, "Boy, the next time the ship lurches, throw yourself into the sea, or I will shoot you!" He knew his father would keep his word; the ship lurched on one side, over went the boy splash into the sea, and out went brawny arms after him; the sailors rescued him, and brought him on deck. Now, we, like the boy, are in a position of extraordinary danger, by nature, which neither you nor I can possibly escape of ourselves. Unfortunately, we have got some good works of our own, like that main-truck, and we cling to them so fondly that we never will give them up. Christ knows that unless we do give them up, we shall be dashed to pieces at last, for that rotten trust must ruin us. He, therefore, says, "Sinner, let go thine own trust, and drop into the sea of my love." We look down, and say, "Can I be saved by trusting in God? 'He looks as if he were angry with me, and I could not trust him." Ah! will not mercy's tender cry persuade you?—"He that believeth shall be saved." Must the weapon of destruction be pointed directly at you? Must you hear the dreadful threat—"He that believeth not shall be damned!" It is with you now as with that boy; your position is one of imminent peril in itself, and your slighting the Father's counsel is a matter of more terrible alarm, it makes peril more perilous. You must do it, or else you perish! Let go your hold! That is faith when the poor sinner lets go his hold, drops down, and so is saved; and the very thing which looks as if it would destroy him, is the means of his being saved. O! believe on Christ, poor sinners; believe on Christ. Ye who know your misery and guilt come, cast yourselves upon him; come, and trust my Master, and as he lives, before whom I stand, ye shall never trust him in vain; but ye shall yourselves be forgiven, and go your way rejoicing in Christ Jesus.

For the World's Crisis.

"THE SLAYING OF THE WITNESSES."

BY I. P. LABAGH.

(Concluded.)

SEVENTH. Before we proceed further, it is necessary to give our opinion concerning the Two Witnesses. We consider them to be the Old and New Testaments. In this opinion we are sustained by many of the ablest expositors, both dead and living.

1st. John, recording the words of Jesus, (v. 39,) saith, "Search the Scriptures, for . . . they are they which testify of me." Acts 10: 43,—"TO HIM GAVE ALL THE PROPHETS WITNESS."

2nd. Jesus is the speaker, and he refers invariably to the first WITNESS concerning his mission. See John 5: 46, 47; Luke 24: 25–28. The first Witness testified of his birth, humiliation, suffering, etc.

3d. And the second Witness, the New Testament, testifieth of his miracles, death, resurrection, and second coming; concerning which he saith, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a WITNESS unto all nations, and then shall the end come."

Now, dear reader, we have seen the utter impossibility of taking the two olive trees, two candlesticks, two prophets, in a literal sense; and by a small degree of common sense we think this subject can be made simple and plain.

EIGHTH. In what sense did the old Witness smite the earth with plagues? Turn and read Deut. 28. There is a fearful catalogue. After you have carefully read that, notice the 61st verse:—"Also every sickness and every plague, which is not written in the book of the law, them will the Lord bring upon thee, until thou be destroyed." Also 2 Chron. 21; 14; Num. 11: 33. Thus we see how the old witness smote the earth with plagues.

NINTH. In what manner are we to understand that the second Witness would smite the earth with plagues? It is written in Rev. 22: 18,—"If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book." Jesus said, "My sheep hear my voice." How? In his word; consequently his word is his mouth, his Witness. The plagues written in his word, that proceeded out of his mouth, will be visited upon all that reject, pervert, or hurt his word (his Witnesses).

TENTH. Some of those plagues were inflicted by the Saracenic myriads of horsemen seen in vision by the Revelator in 9th chapter, when the Four Sultanies of Aleppo, Bagdad, Syria and Damascus, were loosed, and under Otheman, who formed the Ottoman Empire. In chapter 9, verse 20th, he speaks of "these plagues."

ELEVENTH. In chapter 15, the Revelator speaks of "seven last plagues." The term last is to be understood in the same sense as in Hebel: 2, where he calls the gospel dispensation "these last days." They are the seven last plagues, for the reason they are symbolized as being inflicted under the pouring out of seven vials—in these last days.

TWELFTH. Under this head, I shall avail myself of the testimony of some of my brethren in the ministry, who have taught that the three unclean spirits have gone forth unto the kings of the earth and the whole world; and indeed it seems impossible to doubt this; to me it is a fact; but I will confine myself to their candid admission. If their admission be correct, it most certainly follows that the "sixth plague" has been inflicted. See chap. 15: 1. Also chap. 16. This admission also proves that the "beast and his image" were in existence when the "first vial" was poured out. See verse 2nd, which reads thus:—"And the first went and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men, which HAD THE MARK OF THE BEAST, and upon them which WORSHIPED HIS IMAGE."

Upon the above admission every one must see that six plagues have been inflicted, and if they will maintain their own premises, the beast and his image were most certainly in existence when the first vial was poured out, or that plague could not in any sense have produced the effect above described. This is not the time, neither is it the writer's object, to give an exposition of the seven plagues; should the Lord in mercy spare my life, and afford me strength, time, and means, I may publish a work upon the subject.

Concerning the Witnesses turning the waters into blood (the rivers and fountains of waters, the nations or kindred and people and tongues, as explained in chap. 17: 15), I will refer those that are interested to my tracts on Rev. 13, pp. 13, 14, and The Slaying of the Witnesses, pp. 10, 11.

"Regarding the whole of Rev. 11, as an unfulfilled prophecy), of which we think there is sufficient internal evidence), the Beast there spoken of is also a power (we think) yet to arise, which shall be more wicked and oppressive than any that has ever yet wasted the church of Christ."

To this opinion I have my candid scriptural objections. Dan. 7: 21, 22, most certainly presents the Papacy, the same horn that plucked up three others, making war until the Ancient of Days came. Furthermore, in Matt. 24, the Savior, in speaking of that same power, 15th to 23d verses, declares,—"For there shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." This, dear reader, must be true, and that tribulation ended before the darkening of the sun, that the Savior declared should forever put heaven's broad and sacred seal thereon. Read verse 29th.

FOURTEENTH. Concerning the dead bodies of the two olive trees, two candlesticks, two prophets, two Witnesses, as they are called, emphatically the Old and New Testaments lying in the streets of the great city, etc., see my tract, pp. 14–18.

"'And they heard a great voice from heaven, saying unto them, Come up hither; and they ascended up to heaven in a cloud, and their enemies beheld them.' How this applies exactly to the Testaments, we are not informed. We hope, however, they will never become 'dead bodies,' in any possible sense, nor depart out of this world in a cloud."

The above writer would not contend that the fallen star, of Rev. 9: 1, was from the literal heaven, nor the flight of the angel in chap. 14: 6, a literal heaven, nor the great red dragon was in the literal heaven, nor the woman of the 12th travailing in the literal heaven. I now inquire, is there any reason to suppose, of necessity, that the above language must be taken in a literal sense? I answer, nay, verily, not a particle, no more than to contend that the two olive trees, or two candlesticks, are to be taken in a literal sense.

Again, the language does not convey the idea that they departed "out of the world," but that they "ascended up to heaven in a cloud," which was a matter of fact concerning the Holy Scriptures after the Reign of Terror in France. Please see the tract upon the "Slaying of the Witnesses," pp. 18, 19.

SIXTEENTH. It is said on page 25:

"We hope, however, they never will become 'dead bodies,' in any possible sense."

The Scriptures did become dead bodies in the precise sense of the metaphor, during the three days and a half (which the above author, departing from the literal, admits to be years) of the Reign of Terror in France. Those demons incarnate blasphemed God, denied his existence, swore they would exterminate the fisherman's Bible, etc.

SEVENTEENTH. The above event is set forth under the metaphor of a "great earthquake," when one tenth part of the city fell, and there were slain of men (margin—"names of men") seven thousand. It is an historical fact that in the great political earthquake termed the "Reign of Terror" in France, from 1793 to 1797, all the honorary titles, names of the nobility, clergy, archbishops, bishops, priests, various orders of the monkhood, and nuns, etc., were abolished,—in the metaphoric language of the Revelator, slain.

EIGHTEENTH. It is stated one tenth part of the city fell. France was one of the ten original sub-divisions of the Roman Empire, and one that supported the great city that John speaks of in chap. 17: 18. In that political earthquake it fell from the trammels of Papacy, and wreaked its vengeance and fury upon papacy as described in the tract upon the Slaying of the Witnesses, pp. 19 and 20.

"Why, then, should three and a half years, or 1260 literal days, be deemed too short a period for Moses and Elias to fulfill their important embassy of witness-bearing, and at the close of the present dispensation, to sound the 'midnight cry,' 'Behold the Bridegroom cometh!'?"

To the above idea I now interpose the positive testimony of the Lord Jesus, as recorded in Matt. 24: 14;—"And this GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM shall be preached in all the world as a WITNESS unto all nations, and then shall the end come." Here is positive testimony that the gospel of the kingdom is THE WITNESS to ALL NATIONS, embracing JEW and Gentile in the term ALL NATIONS. By no possible argument can this definite language of Him who spake as man never spake be evaded. JEWS and Gentiles are embraced in the mission of the gospel of the Son of God, not one left out.

The idea of such a mission as the above writer's is not intimated in a single instance in the testimony of either of Christ's witnesses, the Old and New Testaments. In Mal. 4: 5, it is written: "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." Jesus declares in Matt. 11: 13, "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John; and if ye will receive it, this is Elias, which was for to come. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." You cannot fail to see the plain fulfillment of that prediction—"The prophets were until John." Their mission hath ended.

In verse 6th, Malachi declares,—"And he (John) shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." Luke, speaking of John in the first chapter, from the 13th to the 18th verse, says, "And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God." A literal accomplishment, never to be repeated. To this testifies and agrees the testimony of Paul, a Hebrew of the Hebrews, a Jew, Acts 10: 36,—"The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ; he is Lord of all." "They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God, but the children of promise are counted for the seed."—Rom. 9: 8. "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise, but God gave it to Abraham by promise."—Gal. 3: 18. "And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." "For there is no difference between the Jew and Greek."—Rom. 10: 12.

The disciples inquired of our Lord what should be the sign of his coming "and the end of the world." He gave them all necessary information in the Gospels and the Revelation that God gave to him, and he did not in a single instance give them to understand that the seed of Abraham should inherit any other kingdom than that spoken of in Matt. 25: 31, 32. And it is the one "prepared from the FOUNDATION OF THE WORLD," not a restituted mingling of mortals and immortals. His decision in the forty-sixth verse settles it forever,—only two classes: tares and wheat, sheep and goats, good and bad, saints and sinners. Those that are ready, and those that know not God and obey not the gospel. Hear the decision of the Lord Jesus: "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." Here is the end. Amen. Thy Bro., S. S. BREWER.

For the World's Crisis.

THE SEVENTH DAY SABBATH—THE LAW.

THE OLD "DEAD SCHOOLMASTER"!
THE LIVING JESUS.

NUMBER TWO.

THE MORAL LAW.

What shall we understand by the term, "moral law"? That "law of God which prescribes the moral and social duties, and prohibits the transgression of them." We shall all agree, then, that the moral law is distinct or separate from the ceremonial or ritual law. Then the question arises, "Is the old moral law, as contained in the Old Testament, now in force, or is it dead? That law is "dead," or, in other words, it is "fulfilled"; as I shall presently show. But as it is my only object at this time to speak of the moral law as bearing upon the seventh-day Sabbath; and as the law which enjoins the observance of this day is embraced in the fourth commandment; I will first prove that that law is abrogated, or "dead," as was alluded to in my last; from the fact that the penalty is "done away," and of course the law must also be "done away" which enforced the penalty, which penalty was "death"; for death was the penalty for the violation of the Sabbath surely. (See Ex. 31: 15; 35: 2, 3.)

But, says the objector, is there no law then now in force which relates to the moral and social duties of man with man, and also our duty to God? Certainly, there is THE "MORAL LAW" OF THE NEW TESTAMENT; but that of the Old is "done away," as will more clearly appear as we proceed. In Rom. 3: 20–22, we read:—

"Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin. But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference."

What law is this here spoken of by the apostle? Not the ceremonial or ritual, but the moral law. Then let us start fairly, and always bear in mind that "by the deeds" or works "of the law there shall no" person living be justified in God's sight. We then inquire with the apostle: "Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay; but by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law. Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also: seeing it is one God, which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith. Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law."—Rom. 3: 27–31.

But let us remember, that we do not "establish the law" by keeping the old law of works, "but by the" new "law of FAITH." If we observe the old law of works, "faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect." "For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect: because the law worketh wrath: for where no law is, there is no transgression. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all."—Rom. 4: 13–16. Thus we see, that the promise made to Abraham that he should be "the heir of the WORLD" (Greek, kosmos—habitable globe), was not through the works of the law; "but through the righteousness of faith." "Therefore, it is of faith, that it might be of grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed." Amen.

"For what saith the Scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness. Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt. But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness."—Rom. 4: 3–5. "For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace. What then? Shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid."—Rom. 6: 14, 15. "For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law. Nevertheless, death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come." "Moreover the law entered, that the offence might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound: that as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life BY JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD."—Rom. 5: 13, 14, 20, 21. "Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him that is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God. For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter."—Rom. 7: 4–6.

Here we reach a point of much interest. Two things in this last quotation require special attention. And first, here we prove positively that the law here spoken of is not the ceremonial, but the "moral law"; for we see by referring to verse 3, of this same chapter, that the law referred to is that which speaks of "adultery," and this sin is the one mentioned in the "seventh commandment" of the decalogue; and this is what gives us the positive proof that the "moral law" is the one referred to. And second, we also prove positively, that this moral law is DEAD, as we find in the 6th verse of the last quotation:—"But now we are delivered from the law, THAT BEING DEAD wherein we were held; that we should serve in NEWNESS OF SPIRIT, and not in the oldness of the LETTER"! Amen and Amen.

"There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."—Rom. 8: 1–4. "What shall we say then? that the Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness, have attained to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith; but Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness. Wherefore? Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law: for they stumbled at that stumbling-stone." Rom. 9: 30-32.

Yes, "they stumbled at that stumbling-stone"! Would to God, the stumbling had all been confined to the old Jews! But, alas! too many are still stumbling in the same way, and for the same cause! They love the old law of works better than the new "law of faith"! And it appears to me that the language of the apostle to the Hebrews will most strikingly apply to such:—

"He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?"—Heb. 10: 28, 29.

But alas, alas! how many are still to be justified by the "law of works," instead of the "law of faith," through our Lord Jesus Christ. It is a fearful thing for men to trample "under foot the Son of God"! as they verily do, who turn aside from his "law of faith"—the law of the "Spirit"—the law of "GRACE"! to follow the old law of works! In the fourth verse I have above quoted from Rom 8, the apostle says: "The righteousness of the law" is "FULFILLED in us, who walk not after the flesh"—or the law—"but after the SPIRIT." Amen.

So much on the subject of the moral law, from Paul's letter to the Romans. Now let us turn to his letter to the Galatians, and see what we can find there. In the first place, I wish to quote again, as applicable to the "law," what I have once already quoted as applicable to the Sabbath:—"But there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."—Gal. 1: 7–9.

One more passage I will quote from Paul's letter to the Galatians, which I think applicable to our times, in regard to the "law," as well as to the apostle's times:—

"But when I saw that they walked not uprightly according to the truth of the gospel, I said unto Peter before them all, If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews? We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles, knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified."—Gal. 2: 14–16.

UNDER THE CURSE!

"For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse: for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, The just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith: but, The man that doeth them shall live in them. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree: That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith."—Gal. 3: 10–14.

How important this testimony of the apostle. And we solemnly warn all those who are trying to "be justified by the deeds of the law," to make their escape as soon as possible, and

GET OUT FROM "UNDER THE CURSE"!

But the apostle continues:—"For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator."—Then the apostle inquires, "Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. But the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe. But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed."—Gal. 3: 18, 19, 21–23.

Thus we see that, although faith is come, yet many keep themselves "under the law—SHUT UP"! And while they are thus "shut up" in the old prison-house of the "law," yet they still try to teach others who have come out into the broad daylight of the gospel! Take heed, ye teachers of the "law," for you "ARE UNDER THE CURSE"! (Gal. 3: 10.)

But now let us seriously inquire,

WHAT WAS THE "LAW" FOR?

Let us all give audience, and the apostle Paul shall answer:—"Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster."

May the Lord be praised, we have at last reached the grave of

THE OLD DEAD "SCHOOLMASTER"!

Now let us take heed, and follow no more the teachings of an old dead "SCHOOLMASTER"! For we are "no longer under a schoolmaster," but under CHRIST JESUS—the SON OF GOD. For "when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father."—Gal. 4: 4–6. "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." For "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace."—Gal. 5: 1, 4. Therefore, whoever shall follow that old dead "SCHOOLMASTER"—the "law"—instead of following Christ; we will say of them as the apostle said of the Galatians:

"YE ARE FALLEN FROM GRACE"!

The Lord forgive me for the error of my head which led me to fall "from grace," and thus go back and try for three years to be "justified by the deeds of the law" by keeping the seventh-day Sabbath! Let us take heed, and attend to the warning the apostle gave to the Philippians:—

"Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision. For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and no confidence in the flesh."—Phil. 3: 2, 3.

Why, Paul, "no confidence in the flesh," or in the "law"! "No confidence" whatever, although he had tried it thoroughly, as he continues and says:—

"Though I might also have confidence in the flesh. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more: Circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee; concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law blameless."—Verses 4–6.

Now, for a few moments, let us attend to the apostle's rule of working out

"LOSS" AND "GAIN."

"But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ. And be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith: that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."—Phil. 3: 7–11.

Let us now attend to

of this whole matter; for he says:—"Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded: and if any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you. Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing. Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an ensample."—Phil. 3: 15–17.

Here I must repeat: "Let us therefore, as many as be PERFECT, be THUS MINDED"; and "let us walk by the SAME RULE, let us MIND THE SAME THING"; and let us "mark them which walk so," as we have the apostle "for an ENSAMPLE." But did Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles, ever teach them to observe "the seventh-day Sabbath"? Never! Did he ever shun to declare to them "all the counsel of God"? Never! Did he ever keep back any thing "that was profitable" for the people to hear? Never! But he surely did keep back the seventh-day Sabbath! Therefore, it was not "profitable" for him to teach it: and as we have him for an ensample, we had better "mind the same thing, and walk by the same rule." Amen. But those who choose to follow the teachings of the OLD DEAD "SCHOOLMASTER," instead of following Christ and the apostles, will probably teach the seventh-day Sabbath.

WHEN, OR AT WHAT POINT OF THE WORLD'S HISTORY DID THE OLD "SCHOOLMASTER" DIE? To answer this question, I will begin with a few words of the closing part of the Old Testament:—

"Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments. Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."—Mal. 4: 4–6.

What law is here spoken of? The one the Lord commanded unto Moses in "Horeb." For whom was this law given? "For all Israel," Will this law come to an end when "Elijah" comes? Let us now pass to the New Testament, and we shall see:—"For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John. And if ye will receive it, THIS IS ELIAS, which was for to come. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."—Matt. 11: 13–15. Hence, "if ye will receive it," "Elijah"—(Hebrew) or "Elias" (Greek) has come; and the law given to Moses "in Horeb" then, and there, in the time of "John" "deceased"! "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John." Here, then, is the place where the old "SCHOOLMASTER" died. "He that hath ears to hear, let him ear." But "Elijah," or "Elias," or "John," was only to "prepare" the way of the Lord Jesus; and thus it is said:—

"John bare witness of him, and cried, saying, This was he of whom I spake, He that cometh after me is preferred before me; for he was before me. And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace. For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."—John 1: 15-17.

Hence the apostle says:—

"For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, that the man which doeth those things shall live by them. But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, Say not in thine heart, who shall ascend into heaven? that is, to bring Christ down from above: or, who shall descend into the deep? that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead. But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."—Rom. 10: 4–9.

So we see that Christ is the end of the old law of works; but he is also the beginning of the new law of faith. And so it is written of Christ: "There ariseth another priest, who is made not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life."—Heb. 7: 15, 16. Praise God! "Not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the POWER of an ENDLESS LIFE." Amen.

Therefore, after the decease of the old "[sc]hoolmaster," it was necessary to have a new [illegible] commandments; and hence Christ [illegible] us one of in the [f]ollowing Scriptures: "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." "This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. These things I command you, that he love one another."—John 13: 34, 35; 15: 12, 17.

In this connection, we have an "example" given us by our Savior of the practical bearing of this "new commandment." It is found in the first part of John 13:

CHRIST WASHING THE DISCIPLES' FEET.

And as some contend that Jesus commanded his people to attend to the washing of feet, in connection with the ordinance of the Lord's supper, as a part of the ordinance itself, I am led here to say, this is a mistake! It is not so! There is no command or precept about it. The Greek word for command, or precept, as used by the Savior in this connection, is entolee; meaning, "precept, commandment, law," etc. But the original word, used by Christ in John 13: 15, when he says, "I have given you an example," is hupodigma; meaning "an example, proposed for imitation or admonition," etc. (Greenfield's Lexicon.) And in this case we shall find that the "example" of Christ was for "admonition," for the disciples deserved it. The case was this: The disciples had first been engaged in a "strife" among themselves, to see "which of them should be accounted the greatest," (Luke 22: 24), and the spirit of selfishness and rivalry was in direct violation of the true import of the "new commandment." Hence, "their Lord and Master" just set them an "example" of humility and "love" towards each other; they must be servants to each other, and never strive to see "which of them should be accounted the greatest." Thus we see that "love one to another" is the "fulfilling" of Christ's new law or comamndments; as we find in Rom. 13: 8–10:—

"Owe no man anything, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."

It appears that this "example" of Christ was enough for the disciples while they lived, for we never find them, after this, washing each other's feet in connection with the Lord's supper. They doubtless remembered this "example" of their "Lord and Master" to "love one another," as Christ had loved them; and so there was no more "strife" among them at the Lord's table to see "which of them" "strife" to see who shall "be accounted the greatest," just to wash one another's feet until they "have love one to another." But we need not wash each other's feet, as a part of the ordinance of the Lord's supper, because Christ commanded us to do it; for he never did any such thing. But under similar circumstances, we had better follow the "example" of "our Lord and Master"; and then, as he says—"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them"; yes; "happy" are we, if we only keep the "new commandment" to "love one another," for there is no unhappiness or fear in love." We shall be "happy" if we only follow Christ's "example;" for "perfect love casteth out fear."

"God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment: because as he is, so are we in this world. There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love."—1 John 4: 16-18.

WHAT IS THE NEW LAW CALLED?

It is called "The perfect law of liberty"—"The royal law"; as we find in James 1: 25, 2: 8, 12. We are sure that it is the new law of Christ that is here called "the perfect law of liberty"; for the apostle says: "The law"—that is, the old law—the old "schoolmaster"—"made nothing perfect"; but "it was the bringing in" (margin) "of a better hope"; as we learn from Heb. 7: 19: Acts 13: 39;—"For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God." "And by him all that believe are justified from all things from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses."

I know that there are those who contend for the seventh-day Sabbath, that say this "royal law," as in James 2: 8, is the old law of the Decalogue; and thus they try to enforce their theory in regard to the Sabbath. But they thus "pervert the gospel of Christ." For James says;—"If ye fulfill the royal law according to the Scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well." What law is this, then, which the apostle says is "according to the Scripture"? It is this: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." And where do we find this law? Where did it have its origin? With the old "schoolmaster," or with Christ? We will see:—

"Master, which is the great commandment in the law? Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."—Matt. 22: 36–40.

But again, "For this is the message (commandment margin) that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another." "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love. In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." "I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father. And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another. And this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, That, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it."—1 John 3: 11; 4: 7-11; and 2 John 4: 6.

Who would not choose to follow the LIVING JESUS, rather than the old dead "schoolmaster"?

LOVE YOUR WIVES.

"Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them."—COL. 3: 19.

Says the husband, I endeavor so to do, but my wife fails to answer my expectations! she does not always fall in with my views, and submit as I expected her to do. Perhaps not. You might have expected more of her than could reasonably be required of any human, erring mortal. Suppose you do not always see exactly alike, should that cause you bitterness? No, indeed. Agree to disagree. Our wills need crucifying. Remember, it is written, "Love your wives, and be not bitter against them." There may be individuals placed before the mind's eye, as being model submitters, just right, without fault. Remember, we are not expected to be angels, nor earth heaven. You would find on a perfect, thorough acquaintance none are without their imperfections. We need that charity that beareth all things, endureth all things, hopeth all things, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, etc. Do not meet your careworn, weary wife with a throbbing, aching head, with a frown upon your brow; it will cause it to throb more violently, and strike a dagger to her heart; whereas a smile and word of good cheer will ease her weariness, and be more profitable to yourself. She needs sympathy in this her time of need. It is right she should have it. It is written likewise, "Ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honor unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life, that your prayers be not hindered."

O! if individuals were to take the word of God as the man of their counsel, and be guided by it, what a heavenly country ours would be. It exhorts rulers to rule in the fear of God, their subjects to be subject to them, masters to rule mildly in the fear of God, forbearing threatening, knowing they have a master in heaven, who will call them to an account; servants to be obedient to them, children to honor their father and mother, and obey them; fathers, probably meaning both parents; not to provoke them to wrath, but to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Husbands to be kind to their wives, wives to submit to them, and all of us to love the Lord with all our hearts, and our neighbors as ourselves. We should really be in the kingdom of God, and the kingdom in us, which is righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

While we repent and are sorry, we have not at all times taken the word of God as our guide, and squared our lives by it; we are exhorted to forget the things that are behind, and reach forth to the things that are before, to double our diligence to make our calling and election sure. May we do so, lay aside the weights and sins that so easily beset us, be found of the Master without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, is the prayer of an unworthy sister, who is striving to be an overcomer. CHURCH LOTTERIES.

It is truly surprising and alarming to witness the extent to which church gambling is carried in these days. The motto seems to be, any way to get the money,—"the end justifies the means." People thirty years ago would not have believed it possible that the professed church of Christ could have so far departed from him, as to do as she is now doing. She seems intoxicated with the pleasures, manners and customs of this world. Every year this becomes more and more apparent. The time has come for the true children of the Lord to stand with boldness against all such departures from the way of holiness. It may be crossing, but we must do it if we would enjoy the smiles of the Lord.

"We believe that no small portion of the very lax morality, which prevails upon the subject of lotteries and gift enterprises, is attributable to the fact that articles are often disposed of at fairs or other gatherings for charitable or semi-religious purposes, by some mode partaking strongly of the lottery character. A lottery or a gift concert for the benefit of a benevolent association or a religious society, is infinitely more dangerous than any kind of gaming for purely selfish purposes. When Satan is patronized by blacklegs and courtesans, it is but a small portion of the community who will return his bow. But when he is invited by the pastor and the deacons, or by the ladies of a church, or the managers of a charity, to assist them by his presence at a gathering for some good purpose, people who make his acquaintance at such a place are very apt to think him not so bad a fellow elsewhere. A young man who, at a fair held by the ladies of his society for the benefit of its Sabbath school, pays a dime for the privilege of thrusting his hand into a 'grab-bag,' with the chance of drawing out of it a gold pen worth three dollars, may find the supposed harmlessness of this transaction too plausible an excuse for raffling for a turkey in a saloon. And one who pays two shillings at an orphan's fair, for a piece of cake which may have a gold ring in it, will be very likely to risk a dollar or two in tickets to a gift concert. Having gone thus far, it is but a short distance to the lottery proper; and from that point to the faro table, the distance is still less. The notions of no small number of professing christians upon this subject, are singularly loose and inconsistent. Card playing merely for amusement is looked upon by the majority as an abomination, because cards are often used by gamblers; and dancing, notwithstanding the example set by Miriam and David, is regarded as too much an institution of the devil to be tolerated even at private parties.

What would be thought by persons holding such views, of a proposition to give a ball for the benefit of their pastor, or a card party whose proceeds should be devoted to home missions? We apprehend that an invitation extended to the children of one of our Sabbath schools, to visit Lea's Melodeon in a body; or a polite note from our worthy Mayor to the members of a church, tendering them a free admittance to a 'trial of speed' on the Hamtramck Course between Harry Chappel's chesnut mare Jezebel, and M. E. Crofoot's brown horse, Elder Sniffles, would hardly produce a more profound sensation. And yet, hardly a fair takes place, for such purposes as we have mentioned, in which some kind of lottery scheme does not conspicuously figure!

We commend the careful consideration of the subject of lottery gambling in all its forms, to every one who has at heart the public good, and especially to every professing christian. It is idle to denounce gambling, or the lottery proper, or 'gift concerts,' so long as 'raffles,' 'grab-bags' and 'ring-cakes' are regarded as excellent modes of raising money for charitable and religious purposes. If it be wrong for a man to pay a dollar to a gift concert, in the hope of drawing a $500 piano for his wife, it is none the less so for him to pay a quarter for one of fifty pieces of cake, in the hope that it will be the one which contains some article worth five dollars, at a ladies' fair. We have never supposed that the casting lots for the Savior's raiment by his murderers, would have been rendered any the more a virtuous action, had it been added to the record, that each of those who did so, paid a denarius for his chance, to go to the benefit of a fund, which the Scribes and Pharisees were raising, for the purpose of re-roofing a synagogue."

A GENERAL WAR IN EUROPE.

The most careful observers of the signs of the times have been convinced that, if war should commence in Europe, it would continue to extend till the whole continent would become involved. The war has now begun, and will be watched with much interest by the student of prophecy.

"The uneasiness about the prospects of a general war is increasing. At present it seems impossible to avoid a collision in the north of Germany on the affair of Schleswig-Holstein, and in the opinion of all, if war is commenced at that point, the whole of Europe will soon be drawn into the conflict. M. Kossuth has added to the general alarm by issuing from Turin a proclamation establishing in Hungary a national government similar to that of Poland, whose edicts and orders, although anonymously and secretly published, are to be faithfully executed by the whole Hungarian people. This action of the former Governor of Hungary is understood here to be addressed as much to the Italian as to the Hungarian people, and as intended to aid first in the work of Italian unity and then in that of the independence of Hungary.

Thus, if the war commences in the North, the entire revolutionary element throughout Europe will be ready to take advantage of it for a general uprising, and then we will see a struggle for Venice, for Hungary, for Poland, for German unity, for Schleswig-Holstein, and probably for the Rhine. For there are many people who believe that Napoleon has an understanding with Kossuth; and that while Italy and Hungary attack Austria, and Denmark attacks Germany in the North, France will evacuate Rome and march to the conquest of the Rhine.

The Suez canal affair is also growing delicate. The projector of that enterprise, M. de Lesseps, had an interview with the Emperor this week, and His Majesty is said to have assured his visitor that if the Egyptians did not act properly in this matter, he would send the Toulon fleet to Alexandria to enforce a respect of the rights of France. And since in France it is believed that England prompts the Egyptian government in all the measures of obstruction she is offering to the execution of the canal, the gravity of this movement will be [illegible]. People indeed who believe that a war between England and France must inevitably grow out of the canal subject."

All things appear to be moving in harmony with the faith of those who are looking for the speedy coming of Jesus. Let all his children keep on "the whole armor of God that" they "may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil."

MONEY WELL LAID OUT.

A Bro. writes, Send the Crisis to Dea.——. This paper is to be used for "the benefit of about one hundred boarders, and they agree that not a single copy of the paper shall be destroyed, but shall be read and lent."

We are rejoiced to find many making an extra effort to get the truth before their friends, and the people generally. There is evidently a waking up to the importance of the work entrusted to those who see the light. If we put it under a bushel, we shall suffer loss. He "that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Dear Brn., let us renew our diligence. Can we not do more for Him whom we expect to come soon to raise the dead, and end earth's dreary night? Let none get weary "in well doing." The harvest is all ready for laborers. Do not be idle now. Be bold for the right.

A NEW PAPER.

We have just received the first No. of the "Voice of the West, and Second Advent Pioneer," edited and published by Bro. Himes, at Buchanan, Mich. This is designed to take the place of the "Voice of the Prophets," and to be issued weekly, if supported. It is a paper for the western field, into which Bro. Himes has entered with an earnest zeal to arouse the people to prepare for the coming of the Son of man. We think the paper will be sustained, and accomplish much good.

Price $2.00 a year. Address J. V. Himes, Buchanan, Mich.

GENERAL CONFERENCE.

We hope to see a large gathering at our General Conference in Boston, at the Lowell Street Chapel, commencing Tuesday evening, April 5th, to continue through the week and over the following Lord's day. Particulars next week.

"MORE LIGHT."

It is well known that Mrs. Cora L. V. Hatch is considered one of the most noted trance-speaking mediums in the world, and stands very high in the estimation of Spiritualists. Her lectures have been very extensive for some years, and, no doubt, have persuaded many to embrace Spiritualism. She left her husband, Dr. Hatch, some time since. The following is an account of a scene at a late meeting in Clinton Hall, New York:—

EXCITING SCENE AT A LECTURE.

On Sunday evening week, Mrs. Cora L. V. Scott (late Cora Hatch) lectured at Clinton Hall, New York, taking for her subject the question, "What is Deity and the Origin of the Earth?" The hall was crowded with an intelligent audience, quite a number of clergymen being dispersed among the congregation. The lady lecturer claimed that it was impossible for man, the finite, to comprehend the Deity, the infinite, and undertook to prove her position by logical analysis as deduced from the nature of the earth's organism. She claimed that all things—matter and intelligence, substance and motion—had existed forever, and that something (the earth) could not have been made from nothing.

At the conclusion of the lecture an invitation was extended to the audience by the speaker to ask her any questions growing out of which she had treated. A number of gentlemen, one of whom was an elderly clergyman, accepted this offer, and quite a lively discussion ensued. Among those who embraced this opportunity was a person in the rear of the hall. He desired to ask the gentleman who preceded him how he knew of the existence of intelligence except through the medium of materiality?

A young man at this point of the discussion arose and exclaimed—"Do not allow that man to speak; he is my father, and he has abandoned his wife and family."

The person who was interrupted, continued, however, and the young gentleman was obliged to subside for the time being. The interruption, however, caused great excitement among the audience, and at the close of the meeting, which took place a few moments later, the young gentleman approached the person whom he had interrupted, and addressing himself in part to the audience and to the person so offensive to him, said:

"I have come here to shame that old man. He is my father. He left his wife and children, and is now living with Cora Hatch, in East Broadway."

Young Man—"You may think I am doing wrong; but if you knew the facts of the case you would think I was doing right."

Several Voices—"Go on. Let us hear the story. Take the stand," etc.

Young Man—"I have done everything to get that man to do right by his family, but I have not been able to do so. I am his son, and am here to shame him in public. His name is William McKinley, and he keeps a store at the corner of Chatham and Pearl streets. He has beaten my mother and treated her most shamefully, and he has abandoned her to live with Cora Hatch."

The young man, Mr. McKinley, Jr., appeared to have the crowd with him, and was repeatedly applauded. Mr. McKinley, Sr., skedaddled in the middle of the controversy, while the fair lecturer, who appeared to be much excited, retired to the ante-room with some friends, one or two ladies among the number. The scene was decidedly sensational, and was quite a novel one in its way.—Advent Herald.

For the World's Crisis.

A CRITIC CRITICISED.

A preacher lately undertook to show that the original of the word order-tagmati (1 Cor. 15: 23) could not be rendered "band, regiment, cohort," and quoted the phrase, "every man in his own order,"—Christ the first fruits, —remarking that Christ was not a cohort. The force of the objection consists in the plural meaning of cohort, Christ being one. But he is called the "first fruits," which is also plural in form as well as meaning. Yet the objection is not well founded; for "every man in his own order" does not include Christ, but every man that is to be made alive in Christ; as the context shows. So "every man in his own order," does not teach that Christ is an "order," or a "cohort" either. He simply heads the order named as the first fruits; for "every man" refers to every dead man, but Christ was already alive and alive forevermore. Amen. WM. ELLIS.

TRACTS.

More tracts are wanted on various subjects. Who will write them? We need a good standard tract on Baptism; another on the Lord's Supper. One good one on the evils of Tobacco. One on "Will the world be all converted?" And finally, one or more on all our leading doctrines. The people want "Light, light, more light." Let these dying words of Goethe be our motto. O, could you have seen the avidity with which the people seized those eight hundred pages of tracts which I distributed in the meeting at H— last night! Every person who reads this can think of some relative, friend, neighbor, or enemy, to whom it might be profitable to send or hand a bundle of tracts, or some of our excellent pamphlets. Perhaps you live alone,—no Advent church or brethren near you. Perhaps you are waiting for Bro. Grant, Hastings, Taylor, or some other already overworked preacher, to come and sow in your community the good seed of the kingdom. "Can't come." Well, suppose you send for their brains in print, and scatter them all about. Try it. They (the brains on paper) will find their way into some homes where the men aforesaid would never meet a welcome.

P. S.—Did the 2000 poor subscribers read my call for an equal number of quarters to be sent M. Grant on the Tract Fund? Don't wait for the rich. I am waiting to see that column of names and donations elongate a little faster and heavier. D. T. T.

From Sr. L. A. Wheeler.

BRO. GRANT:—I saw in the Crisis a call for fifteen hundred dollars for the Tract Fund, to be raised within eight months; and a call on the poor readers of the Crisis to send in their mite to help make up the amount, and so prove the Lord, when he said, "Give, and it shall be given unto you." I respond to the call; for I have proved the Lord many times, and have never regretted it; not often by giving silver or gold, for it has been with me as it was with Peter, when he said, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee." If we really feel ourselves, and all that we have, to be the Lord's, I think we shall not be very often found wasting his goods in much tea, or tobacco, or even to clothe ourselves in black garments every time one of our relatives falls a prey to the enemy. He has told us to keep ourselves "unspotted from the world." And shall we be found guiltless if we take ten, fifteen, or twenty dollars of our Lord's money, and spend it for that which is but a spot of the world? In so doing, we not only waste his goods, but break his commandments. No, rather let us deny ourselves, and take up the cross, if it should make us appear a little odd. What if we should lose some of what the world calls honor, will not the love and esteem of our Father in heaven more than recompense us even here, to say nothing of that "eternal weight of glory"?

Remember, they that sow "sparingly, shall reap also sparingly." If we have no money to give, can we not do as much as to urge some poor soul to be reconciled to God? Christ could not stay here to carry the invitation himself to the weary and heavy laden, to come to the marriage supper; but has committed the work into the hands of men and women. We are to be his witnesses; and according as we understand the prophetic chart, our time of bearing witness is almost in the past. May God guide us into all truth, and enable those that feed the flock to give meat in due season.

Hawley, Ms. LAURA A. WHEELER.

For the World's Crisis.

COMING EVENTS.

We are commanded by the inspired writer to stir up each other's pure minds by way of remembrance, and to exhort one another daily, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. The condition of this world presents a war-like appearance. Says the Prophet, "Wake up the mighty men, let the men of war draw near, let the weak say, I am strong." Every thing is being converted into war material. The revolutionary spirit is abroad in the earth. Social law and order are being disturbed; fear is taking hold of men, and they begin to look with wonder at what is coming to pass.

As the days of Noah were so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. They feasted, and sinned on until the rain descended and swept them all away. So it will be. Men will feast, love money, and sin on until the sign of the Son of man appears in heaven. All signs will only tend to harden the men of this world, and cause them to grasp tighter their riches, waxing worse and worse, until they are lost to all concern about their salvation.

The present condition of this world is but the "beginning of sorrows." Our own land presents a fearful scene, and yet the professedly pious are engaged to take human life. War is the order of the day. The war spirit is spreading throughout the earth. The whole of continental Europe seems ready to burst into one general conflagration. Such is the fact. We have long looked for and are still looking for an agitation there such as will leave in the shade all the horrors Europe has ever witnessed. We believe the time is not far off, when all law and order will be disregarded, and blood-shed, disorder and confusion will reign universal over all the earth. We may look for stirring events among all the nations soon.

The battle of the great God is at hand, and the nations are arming for the mighty and deadly conflict. They have shed the blood of saints, and God will give them blood to drink in return. His dreadful judgments are soon to be poured out upon a wicked world. And as we see the day approaching we can lift up our hearts and rejoice, knowing our deliverance is at hand. Soon the wicked and bewildered nations of earth will pass away, and give place to the peaceful and everlasting kingdom of Jesus Christ. The restitution will soon follow the destruction of all earthly governments, and then the redeemed shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Hail, happy day!

Now is the time to watch and hold ourselves in readiness, for in "such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Let the war-clouds loom up, and the lightning flash, the thunder roar, and the earth quake; if our trust is in the Lord all is well; for he alone can deliver in that dreadful day.

My brethren, let us not be drawn into the great political whirlpool of the age in which we live. Let us pray for each other, that we may be sound in the faith of the gospel, and so live that we may be welcomed to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb, and to his embrace at his coming. J. E. CLARK.

STRANGE DOCTRINES.

BRO. GRANT:—The answer to the question proposed by Bro. I. K. Lombard, in reference to the person who, in defining God, said his "centre is every where, and his circumference no where," may be found in Addison's works. It is in a piece selected from the works of Addison, in Murray's English Reader, a book that was in our schools a number of years ago. It is in the third chapter, section 15, and is headed, "Omniscience and Omnipresence of the Deity, the source of consolation to good men." I will make a short extract:—

"If we consider him in his omnipresence, his being passes through, actuates, and supports the whole frame of nature. His creation, in every part of it, is full of him. There is nothing he has made, which is either so distant, so little, or so inconsiderable, that he does not essentially reside in it. His substance is within the substance of every being, whether material or immaterial, and as intimately present to it as that being is to itself. It would be an imperfection in him, were he able to move out of one place into another; or to withdraw himself from any thing that he has created, or from any part of that space which he diffused and spread abroad to infinity. In short, to speak of him in the language of the old philosopher, he is a being whose centre is every where, and his circumference no where."

Who the old philosopher is that Addison refers to I do not know, neither does he tell us. Respectfully yours,

A QUESTION.

In Heb. 2: 14, the apostle, speaking of Christ, says "that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil." Again in 1 John 3: 8, it is said, "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devils." Can any one doubt but that these two texts of Scripture mean that Christ will destroy the devil and his works? How can this be true, if sinners and the devil are to exist eternally, and continue their works?

ANTI-CHRIST.

Much is being said and written about the Anti-Christ of the last days, and all quote freely from the 13th, 17th, and 19th chapters of Revelation to prove that the two-horned beast, the scarlet-colored beast, or eighth head, and the false prophet, are all one and the same power, and is to be the real "antichrist of the last days." The argument thus far I cheerfully concede; but cannot admit that the power represented by these various symbols culminate in, and are to be fulfilled in one single individual as is claimed by some, and for these reasons:

1st. By comparing these symbols with the symbols of the 2nd and 7th chapters of Daniel, I find a harmonious agreement, and in them is to be found all that is embraced in the four divisions of the great metallic image, when it is broken without hands, and all that is included in the fourth wild beast, when the "body thereof is given to the burning flames," which certainly cannot be less than the prophetic earth. But where is the propriety of calling this power anti-christ? Answer—because from the symbols first referred to, it is evidently an apostate Christian power, separate and distinct from the papacy, yet sustaining and carrying it forth to the judgment. And secondly, because it is to stand up against, or in opposition to Christ at his second advent, and is to be by him destroyed.

The very important question now suggested is this,—has any power that will answer this description yet arisen, or are we to look for its rise and development in the future? By a reference to European history, it may be seen that such a power is now on the stage, and has been exercising dominion over the prophetic world for about fifty years, and is about to pass away; viz., "The Allied Powers." By a careful examination of the Holy Alliance compact, entered into in 1815, for the purpose of carrying out and perpetuating the Paris and Vienna treaties, the lamb-like indications of that power may readily be seen, as well as the reasons for assuming so sacred a name; viz., first of all, "they declared it to be their firm determination to take no other rule for their conduct, than the precepts of the Christian religion. They assumed the prerogative of being delegated by providence to govern the nations," and finally to receive into the same alliance all other powers who were willing to profess the same principles which had dictated that act," which compact was signed the same year by all the European sovereigns. Hence all the nations of the old world have assumed a UNITY of government under the assumed special providence of God, and have pledged themselves in the sight of high Heaven to govern according to the precepts of the christian religion.

These high declarations caused the historians of that day to refer to that treaty by the appellation of "Christian league," "Holy alliance," etc. This power did restore the papal beast after it was overthrown by the first Napoleon, and caused it "to live again," and by virtue of that restoration the papacy still exists as a sovereignty. It has also ruled the nations of Europe agreeably to those laws enacted at Vienna, and to a great extent the wide world over since that day. But how have they ruled? Not as promised according to the precepts of the christian religion (for this part was a dead letter from the beginning, and was only designed to deceive the dwellers upon the earth, and has well answered its purpose), but by acting and "speaking like a dragon." And now we are told by the high authority of the French Emperor, who has ever assumed to be a part of that compact, "that every nation of Europe has violated its promises." If this testimony is true, it follows that that power is an apostacy! and is equally guilty as is their apostate mother whom they carry, and of whose golden cup they have all so deeply drank as to become intoxicated with her sorceries! or, in other words, they are drunk, as the Revelator said they would be!

In this examination thus far, it appears clear to my mind that those Allies answer in every respect to the divine record, and may very justly be called the real "Anti-Christ of the last days." This conclusion is strengthened by the failure of the French emperor to assemble another European Congress to adjust existing and threatening evils, and everything indicates that the last thread in the cord that has hitherto held the now angry nations in check is about to be severed, and the angels to whom it is given to hurl the earth to be let loose. As the coming spring is looked to by careful observers of political events for the loosing the winds of war, which will more fully introduce that time of trouble spoken of by Daniel the prophet, are we not warranted in looking forward to that time for the long promised deliverance of all whose names are written in the book? PIONEERING.—No. 2.

BRO GRANT:—I went to Earlville Jan. 17, to preach a funeral sermon and continue a meeting. This place is on the R. R. west of Dubuque, having about one hundred inhabitants. On arriving, found that a minister had an appointment for that evening; so I went and heard him. At the close made myself known, then told him I had come to hold a meeting, and if he was to continue I would like to join in with him. "We can," said he, "if in doctrine we agreed; but as we do not, we can not. Some men I can work with, and with some I will not." Then I told him if his object was the same as mine, the salvation of sinners, we could join in the work.

On Monday morning I run out my sign, the wooden watch, and concluded to go to work at my trade, as I had my tools with me, and wait the result. He spoke three nights, and the last one over two hours. He found that I could stand it full as well as he, as I could tinker watches and wait. So he closed, giving all the counsel he could, to keep up prayer meetings, etc., etc.

I commenced, and continued to beat the fog and opposition, and work day times to pay my way, some of the time stopping at the hotel, but mostly with a brother who was not able to sustain such a meeting. Truly I can say these hands have administered to my necessities. Continued working thus for two weeks. The weather was quite unfavorable the last week, but I buried six with Christ in baptism, and others will soon follow; and I closed to let the leaven of truth work.

This was entirely a mission work. Hope the good seed that was sown in tears will bring forth fruit to the glory of God. There are a few other places I would like to break up, but I find I am somewhat worn out. Cannot tell what course I shall take. May the Lord open the way and direct to his glory.

SR. N. M. HENRY IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Sr. Henry has been in this vicinity for several weeks, and as I have been privileged to listen to her at the different places where she went, I thought a few lines from me might be of interest to the readers of the Crisis. She is rarely gifted as a speaker, interesting all classes. She rides no hobbies, but preaches the word. I found it true as she stated in her "Day's Experience," that she could reach a class of hearers that no man could. Curiosity draws them at first, then her calm, lady-like deportment, perfect self-possession, her clear reasoning, her eloquence combined with the kind christian manner in which she meets and overcomes prejudice and opposition, endeared her not only to the brethren and sisters, but to strangers in every place where she went. The divisions which have crept into the church here had a depressing effect upon her, but when I saw her among entire strangers and watched her manner of presenting the truths of the Bible, saw the eagerness with which they listened often with streaming eyes, and gathered about her and begged to have her go this way and that, I thought I could understand then, what she has told us in the paper, (when begging for help) that she had "more calls than she could fill."

At McKane, Erie county, she left word, while passing through the place, that she would return at a given time and lecture. She occupied the school-house the first evening, but before she had got through the introductory, one of the main members of the Methodist Episcopal church arose, and apologized for her not having the church. The apology was accepted in a graceful manner. Her sermon, which was a practical discourse, giving all their portion, was so well received they asked her to stay another evening, which she did, giving a discourse on prophecy and its fulfillment, to a full house of the most attentive listeners. The preacher in charge treated her with true christian courtesy, and was well pleased with both speaker and subject. After speaking one hour and twenty minutes, and closing, the call went from all parts of the house, "Do not stop. Tell us more! Tell us more!" the minister with the rest. She stepped down into the altar, and the applause shook the meeting-house. After quiet was restored, she took the minister's hat and passed through the congregation, taking up several dollars for the sick and wounded soldiers. She did the same thing at Edenboro', and other places. I mention these parts that the brethren and sisters that have not the privilege of hearing her may form some faint idea of her manner of preaching. I subjoin an extract from the Girard Union:

"Mrs. Henry, a lady connected with the Sanitary Committee of St. Louis, and agent of the Christian Tract Society, gave several interesting lectures in the Christian church at Fairview last week. On Sunday evening her subject was, 'The present war as foretold in the Scriptures.' Her text was from Jeremiah:

'Yet hear the word of the Lord, O ye women, and let your ear receive the word of his mouth, and teach your daughters wailing, and every one her neighbor lamentation. For death is come up into our windows, and is entered into our palaces, to cut off the children from without, and the young men from the streets.'

Her discourse was eloquent and impressive, and she treated the subject in a masterly manner. Her congregations listened with attention, and it is regretted that on account of bad roads many lost the opportunity of hearing her. At the close, she passed around among the audience and took up a collection for the benefit of the sick and wounded soldiers, amounting to about seven dollars, which was paid to Mr. T. Ryan for the Fairview Aid Society."

Brethren, it is our "duty to sustain our "women preachers" by our prayers and our countenance, as well as by our means. We are living in the "last days," and the prophet declares that in those days "your daughters shall prophecy;" they are our daughters, but his handmaids; and when our gifted women dare to meet all the opposition of the sectarian churches, all the prejudice and slander from their own sex, shall we be guilty by word or act of adding to their burden? No, no, we have more than one gifted and eloquent woman preacher in the field. Let us keep them there; and may God give us more of the same sort.

Sr. Henry has a delicate constitution, her lungs are already failing her; the "spare bed" has nearly cost her her life. She contemplates taking her "up river trip" to Iowa, Wisconsin and Canada as soon as the river opens. Brethren and sisters, hold up her hands, and take good care of her for our sakes in Pennsylvania, as we hope to hear her again next summer, on her way to Wilbraham. Through her influence I think it more than likely a Pennsyluania tent will be on the ground.

Yours in the blessed hope of eternal life,
WM. G. DAVISON.

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. B. Gard.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to say a few words through the columns of the Crisis in relation to the condition of things in this community. I have lived here since August '62, and during that period have heard three gospel sermons, preached by Bro. P. S. W. Deyo, of Strawberry Point. I have been a believer in the doctrines advocated by the Crisis, for the past three years, conceiving them to be the same taught by Christ and the apostles. My wife, and her brother, (M. C. Newcomb) and myself, finding (by reading our Bibles) that it was our duty to obey, as well as to believe the gospel, followed the example of our blessed Savior, and went down into the water and were baptized; and now we are endeavoring to walk in newness of life. By the grace of God we hope by taking the sword of the Spirit, (that, by the way, we believe to be the only sword with which christians have any right to fight) we will try to fight manfully the battles of the Lord, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith.

I sincerely hope that we may be permitted to hear the gospel of the kingdom preached more than Bro. Deyo was able in three short sermons. We are still hoping that he will return to this place and sow the good seed, rescuing some from the dominions of Satan. If any gospel preacher shall come this way, I would cordially invite him to the hospitalities of our home, so long as he will labor in the vineyard of our Lord; and although he will find us poor and despised by the world and popular theologians, yet we hope to continue rich in faith, and heirs according to the promises.

In conclusion, let me ask the prayers of our beloved brethren everywhere, that we may so live that when Christ who is our life shall appear, we may be like him, and our vile bodies fashioned like unto his glorious body, clothed with immortality and eternal life.

Your brother in search for truth,
Hopkinton, Iowa. E. B. GARD.

BRO. GRANT:—Feb. 7th. I am just recovering from sickness. I was taken down with what my physician pronounced inflammatory fever, about twenty-five miles from home; but was well cared for at the hospitable residence of Dea. Thomas, on Castle Prairie. Four Sundays have passed since my attack, and I am still feeble. Don't know how long before I shall be able to preach again; but hope to be fully restored before time to commence my grove meeting campaign. This overturns my winter arrangements. Love to all the friends of Jesus.

Feb. 19th. My health has been improving. Hope soon to be in my proper place, giving "meat in due season" to the household of faith. Having no appointment last Lord's day, I attended meeting at the Baptist meeting-house in this village; and not having met any of the clergymen of the place, and thinking that they did not know me, I fancied I should be free from either favorable notice or bigoted thrusts. However, the minister came to me and inquired if I was the "Rev. Mr. Sheldon," and took me into the pulpit with him, where I took part in the services. So bigotry does not bind all. How the other ministers of the place feel towards me I cannot tell. I have held no meetings in this village since moving here. Think the door will soon open for it. Love to all the saints.

From Bro. A. W. Fisk.

BRO. GRANT:—I am a young convert, about four months old. I came out, with many others, in a Methodist revival, under the labors of Rev. I. Smith, pastor of Asbury chapel, and being honest and earnest in the matter, I have been all the time searching for the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, which to know aright is life eternal. I have therefore been with Methodists, Baptists and Adventists. The Advent belief being the most consistent to my mind, and the most in harmony with the Bible, I have therefore honestly and sincerely embraced a portion of it, as far as I have investigated. By so doing, I receive opposition and some persecution from the brethren; but, if it is for righteousness sake, I bless God for it. If I know my own heart, I desire to know the truth as it is in God's word, to "prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good."

I listened to a sermon, yesterday, on the intermediate state of the dead, commencing with the text in John 5: 39,—"Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life." I wish our Methodist brother had read the very next verse: "Ye will not come to me, THAT YE MIGHT HAVE LIFE." But he had not time, I suppose, for I noticed he clipped many texts very short. I would like to have the sermon printed, and send one to you; "for your horrible doctrine," he said, "had awakened in him a sort of holy indignation to preach on the subject, so the converts might not imbibe an error." I felt that he had awakened in me something of the same feeling.

I believe there is a work for me to do here, and I pray that God will arm and equip me for it, that I may proclaim the truth with the boldness of a lion and the meekness of a dove. I desire to be an instrument in his hands of doing some good to those around me. Pray for me, brethren, that I may prove faithful, fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold of eternal life at the last great day!

Yours in haste, A. W. FISK.

TO MY FRIENDS:—The work of God is still going on in this vicinity. The influence has spread into the region "round about." I must not leave here at present. God is wonderfully blessing my labors this season. I am up at Schenectady now, preaching to crowds of solemn people in the Baptist house of worship. Sinners are flocking to Christ every day. Amen! Glory to God! I am full of comfort to see it go! EDWIN BURNHAM.

Obituaries.

PATTY M. CHURCHILL.

My beloved and affectionate companion fell asleep in Jesus on the 10th day of Feb., at 2 o'clock P. M., aged fifty-one years, five months, and twenty-five days.

After sharing with me the rugged toils of twenty-four years, as a pioneer minister in this new country, she having emigrated with her former husband, R. D. Crossett, to Illinois, as early as 1835. Two years after I followed, when I became acquainted with them. Some two years later, she buried her husband, and in 1840 we were joined in the solemn bands of matrimony.

About nine or ten years ago, Eld. Samuel Chapman came to Dekalb Co., Ill., lecturing upon the second coming of our Lord. We attended some of his lectures, and had considerable conversation with him. My wife and I became firmly established in the Advent doctrine, and she remained unshaken in her faith till the last moment of her life.

She has always had poor health; and for the last six months has been the greatest sufferer I ever saw. In her extreme agony she often prayed God to deliver her out of her sufferings by death. She prayed also for supporting faith, and dying grace. She fell asleep in Jesus, firmly believing that she should wake no more nor know anything until Gabriel's trump should summon her, with all the righteous dead, to arise and meet their coming Lord in the air.

Just before her death, being asked by a lady who holds to the immortality of the soul if her faith in the sleep of the dead was now unshaken, she answered, "Yes. It will be like a person who lies down at night, and sleeps soundly until morning, and awakes just as the sun is rising to behold it in its beauty. They are unconscious of every thing going on. Time will not be reckoned with them, and it will seem but a moment that they had slept." CASTLE CHURCHILL.

ELD. BENJAMIN LOCKE.

Another watchman fallen! Fell asleep in Jesus, in East Weare, N. H., Jan. 19th, 1864, of consumption of the lungs, my honored father, Eld. Benjamin Locke, aged sixty-six years, five months, three days.

He embraced religion in 1825, and united with the F. W. Baptist denomination, being immersed by Eld. James Morgan, of Cavendish, Vt. He was ordained a preacher of the gospel in 1835, and labored successfully among them until he heard the news of the immediate coming of Christ, in 1843, which doctrine he embraced with all his heart. And though disappointed as to the time, he continued steadfast in the faith of the personal coming of Christ, and resurrection of the dead, which hope supported him in his last hours, making him joyful in anticipating a glorious resurrection, and an unfading crown when the Chief Shepherd shall appear.

Of father it can truly be said that he loved the ways of peace, always striving to have the church united. It caused him the keenest pain to see the children of God scattered and divided. His mission seemed to be to find out the isolatad ones, and tell them of the blessed Savior, and urge preparation for his coming. He was a kind and loving husband, an affectionate parent, a peaceful citizen, always seeking to exemplify the religion of Christ, and square his life by the Scriptures of truth.

Long and severe have been his labors; but he never found God to be a hard master, the yoke of Christ being easy and his burden light. His last days were peaceful and happy. He testified to all that God did not forsake him in the hour of affliction, but gave him grace sufficient for his day. He leaves a wife, with whom he had been united almost forty years, and two children. He now sleeps beside the two lovely daughters who died, one ten, and the other two years ago. We sorrow not as those that have no hope, believing that, if faithful a little longer, we shall meet the loved ones together with all the dear saints in our Eden home.

A few words to the pilgrims with whom father was wont to meet. O! remember his counsels of wisdom. Gird on the armor more firmly, and press with more earnestness for the kingdom. Shall his admonitions be in vain? Be watchful that ye do not fall from your steadfastness, and get overcharged with the cares of this life, and so that day overtake you unawares. O! watchmen, be faithful, and care for the little flock, for soon He that is to come will come, and will not tarry. And all whose names are found written in the book of life will be delivered. Brethren and sisters, let us be good, true children, that we may all meet in the everlasting kingdom, is the prayer of your unworthy brother, G. FRANK LOCKE.

ABBY A. STAPLES.

Died at Litte Falls, Gorham, Me., Abby A. Staples, only child of Whitman and Rebecca Staples, aged nine years, three months.

Abby was really a child of promise. Unlike most children of this age, the obedience which she always yielded to her parents, and the love she manifested for those around her, had won for her many friends outside the family circle.

But how suddenly are our brightest earthly hopes blasted. Abby was at the breakfast table well as usual, and in the short space of thirty hours she was asleep in death. Her remains were carried to Casco, where she had lived till a few months previous to her death, to be laid in the silent grave, beside her twin sister, there to wait the sound of the last trump. Then she will awake to life to suffer pain and death no more.

We tried to speak words of comfort to the afflicted ones, from Jeremiah 31: 19. May the blessing of God rest upon the afflicted parents, and they be guided by his Spirit into all truth, and found ready to meet their children when they shall come again from the land of the enemy, to enter upon the joys of paradise restored, is the prayer of the writer. JESSE GAY.

RUFUS C. HANSON.

Died in Wakefield, N. H., Jan. 9th, 1864, of diptheria, Rufus C., son of John and Mary Jane Hanson, aged eighteen years, eight months, and seven days.

The subject of this notice, although often impressed with the importance of seeking the Lord, had neglected the all-important work until brought upon a bed of sickness. He then felt the importance of seeking the Savior for his friend and portion. In his distress, he cried unto the Lord, and, as we humbly trust, he heard him, and gave him peace in believing. From this time there was a great change visible in him. His voice was often heard in prayer and praise to God; and although his sufferings were very severe, yet he could calmly trust in the Lord. He warned his young mates and friends, and exhorted them to get ready to meet him in the world to come. He requested the writer to preach his funeral sermon, which he did from Prov. 8: 17. May the Lord sanctify this bereavement to the afflicted friends and relatives, JOSEPH SPINNEY.

LUCY A. BECKLEY.

The subject of this notice for many years has been watching and waiting for the coming Lord. Having for the last few years suffered much from disease, she seemed to fully realize the value of the blessed hope. Long weary months confined to her bed, she suffered all that human nature could endure, but with christian meekness, and without a murmur, so much so that her physician remarked to the writer that he thought her a model of patience. In her last moments she was calm and composed, and no cloud overshadowed the bright glory that clustered around her hope, and passed away one of the bright flowers that shall bloom in the Paradise of God. At her request, sermon by the writer, from John 11: 25.

LEWIS ANDREWS.

VARNUM JILLSON.

Bro. Jillson professed the religion of Christ some years ago, and embraced the Advent doctrine, in which faith he died. He was a man of few words, consequently said very little, but lived out his faith. It is due to his memory to say, that he was not known to have an enemy in the world. We saw him the day before his death. He said that all was well, and the prospect beyond the grave looked bright. Bro. J. leaves a wife and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss.

At the request of Bro. J., the writer of this notice endeavored to administer words of consolation upon the occasion. May the blessing of God attend the effort that was made. GEO. A. STREETER.

ABBY GLIDDEN.

Also died at her husband's father's—Bro. John Glidden—of consumption, Feb. 12th, 1864, M. Abby Glidden, wife of Edmund C. Glidden, aged twenty-five years, seven months, and sixteen days.

Abby possessed a noble mind, was a blessing to society, and was a kind, affectionate, dutiful, loving wife and daughter; and her loss is deeply felt by her sorrow-stricken husband, and a large circle of friends.

Thus in five short weeks death has twice entered the beloved family circle of our dear Bro. Glidden. Truly, we can say his house is a house of mourning. May God sustain Bro. G. and family in their deep affliction. Words of comfort were administered on both occasions by the writer. The first from Psa. 17: 15; second from Hosea 6: 1–4.

T. W. PIPER.

SARAH ELIZABETH BAILEY.

Died of dropsy on the brain, Feb. 14th, 1864, Sarah Elizabeth, daughter of Henry and Mira G. Bailey.

Death, that cruel tyrant, has laid his icy hand upon our darling little Lizzie, and borne her away to his dark dominions; but blessed be the name of the Lord, he cannot always keep her. We believe the time is near when she, with all such precious treasures, will come again from the land of the enemy. Precious promise!

It was very hard to part with our darling babe, but we would not have her back in this world of temptation, pain and sorrow. She is safe, for Jesus died that she might live. HENRY BAILEY.

A. B. GLIDDEN.

Died very suddenly, at his brother's residence in Barrington, N. H., Jan. 5th, 1864, Aaron B. Glidden, aged twenty years, eight months, and twenty-seven days.

Thus, while teaching his third school, this exemplary young man, excellent scholar, dutiful son, kind and affectionate brother, beloved by his scholars and all who knew him, was cut down in the flower of youth. His remains were carried to his father's, Bro. John Glidden, of Tuftonborough, and interred on the 8th.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool, Feb. 9th, Queenstown 10th.

It is fully confirmed that the Danes retreated from Schleswig, evacuated Dannewark, and blew up the works of Missunde. The Germans followed them to Flensburg, whence they also retreated towards Duppel.

There had been several severe engagements and losses on both sides. The Germans secured great booty, a large number of guns and prisoners.

According to some authorities, the Danish possession of Schleswig is probably ended, and the army will retreat to Jutland.

Other authorities assert that a formidable stand will be made at Duppee, where the Danes are supported by a fleet, and may assume a strong position.

Great excitement was caused at Copenhagen under the news of the retreat.

Active naval preparations were making at Copenhagen.

Duke Frederick had been proclaimed at various places in Schleswig.

The Prussians occupied Fleusburg. The Austrian losses there were 1100.

It was rumored that an attack was made on the Danes at Duppel, but no particulars are given.

VIENNA, Feb. 9. At the Council of Ministers on the 7th, under the presidency of the Emperor, important resolutions were adopted to the effect that the London protocol can no longer be preserved by Austria as a basis of negotiations between great Powers.

LONDON, Feb. 9. The Times' Vienna correspondent says the Austrian government is not satisfied with the course of events taken by Schleswig, and it is understood that Austria will not consent to cross the northern frontier of Schleswig.

HAMBURG, Feb. 9. Official reports state that the Prussians are marching upon Duppel, and are said to have carried the intrenchments before Duppel, and thrown forward their main body to Appevrade to cut off the Danish retreat into Jutland. The roads were blocked up by cannon, which the exhausted horses were unable to drag further. The Danish army is reported to be in a state of complete dissolution.

An engagement occurred on the 6th, near Idsteadt, in which the Austro-Prussian army was victorious.

In an engagement near "Oversee" and in the streets of Flensburg there were many killed and wounded. One Austrian regiment lost seventeen officers and five hundred rank and file.

A Berlin dispatch of the 8th states that 1000 persons were arrested in Warsaw, and it is said the archives of the national government have fallen into the hands of the Russians.

Advices from New Zealand announce the defeat of the natives by Gen. Cameron, after a severe engagement, in which the English lost 41 killed and 91 wounded. Nearly 200 prisoners were taken.

FOUR DAYS LATER.

Liverpool, Feb. 13th, Queenstown, 14th.

It is asserted that Italy is arming.

☞ One of the schemes of the day is a grand international alliance of hotels, so that all parts of Europe are to be in hotel correspondence—London, Paris, Vienna, Berlin, Antwerp, etc.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, Feb. 26. The conscription has been postponed until April 1—that is to say, bounties will be paid up to that time.

"Charleston, Feb. 25. One hundred and forty-six shots were fired at the city during the last twenty-four hours. The enemy were erecting a battery on Dixon's Island, commanding Schooner Creek."

On the afternoon of the 20th, our troops under Gen. Seymore met the enemy, 15000 strong, fifty-five miles beyond Jacksonville, and eight miles beyond Sanderson. The battle was desperately fought during three hours, and at sunset our forces, overpowered by numbers, retired to Sanderson, taking with them the greater part of the wounded.

Good News.

The following is one clause of the amended enrollment bill as it passed both houses of Congress last week. It is now awaiting the President's signature:

Members of religious denominations, who shall by oath or affirmation declare that they are conscientiously opposed to the bearing of arms, and who are prohibited from doing so by the rules and articles of faith and practice of such religious denomination, shall, when drafted into the military service, be considered non-combatants, and shall be assigned by the Secretary of War to duty in the hospitals, or to the care of freedmen, or shall pay the sum of three hundred dollars, to be applied to the benefit of the sick and wounded soldiers; provided, no person shall be entitled to the benefit of this section, unless his declaration of conscientious scruples against bearing arms shall be supported by satisfactory evidence that his deportment has been uniformly consistent with such declaration.

Portland, Me., Feb. 23rd. The steamship Bohemian, Capt. Borland, from Liverpool, Feb. 4th, via Londonderry 5th, for this port, struck on Alden's rock, four miles outside of Cape Elizabeth, about nine o'clock last evening, keeled over, turned her head toward shore, and sunk in about one hour and a half, about two miles from shore, outside of Richard's Island, having stove a hole in her engine compartment.

The whole number of passengers was 218, and that of the crew, it is supposed, 99. It is estimated that there were saved in all the boats 298, leaving 19 to be accounted for. The crew were nearly all saved.

MODERN GREECE.—The new King of Greece begins to appreciate the difficulties of his position. Mobs are frequent, calling for the downfall of the ministry; the sittings of the Assembly are turbulent, and almost ending at every meeting in personal conflicts among the members; the public treasury is empty, and it is contemplated to assist it by appropriating the pension money of the seamen, and the King is not yet in possession of his stables, as the artillery corps refuse to give them up to him.

PROGRESS.—Barnum's Museum, in New York city, has been opened on the Sabbath, for afternoon and evening performances, and the papers tell us "was crowded by men, women and children, including scores of babes in their mother's arms." The pious use of the first day's labor, was for the benefit of a "German Hospital." These are war times, it is said.

☞ That strange, and as yet uncontrollable disease, diptheria, is spreading to an alarming extent through New Hampshire, more especially the northern part of it. Whole families in some instances have been swept away by its ravages.

☞ The partridges in Illinois were nearly all frozen to death during the recent cold weather. Thousands of these birds which had been killed by the cold were gathered by men and boys, and sent to the markets for sale.

☞ The Indiana papers report that the peach crop of that State is entirely destroyed by the late severe cold. The same is true of Ohio and the Western States generally.

☞ The Emperor Napoleon will be fifty-six years of age April 20th, 1864; Eugenie is thirty-eight.

☞ There were four hundred and forty-three cases of small-pox in Nashville on the 31st ult.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—

Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive one third the value of the money sent, in any of our books and tracts they may select. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollars' worth; for twelve dollars, four dollars' worth, etc.

Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

MILES GRANT, per order of Publishing Committee.

Important Discussion.

There will be a discussion held in Kast Hall, No. 104 Hanover Street, Boston, to commence March 8th, at 7 P. M., and continue four evenings, between MOSES HULL, Spiritualist, and JOSEPH F. CURRY, Adventist.

For the World's Crisis.

BORNE WITH EVERY BREEZE ALONG.

Borne with every breeze along,
Comes a wail of ruth and wrong;
Treason's banner flaunteth high,
Freedom bares her breast to die.
Brothers, mingling in the strife,
Fiercely seek each other's life;
Hate and wrong hath won the day,
Peace must yield her gentle sway.

Darkness hovers o'er our path,
Men shall drink the wine of wrath;
Thunders mutter at our door,
Snares beset our path before;
Troubles gather thick behind,
Rushing swifter than the wind.
See! destruction rideth by,
Terror lifts her banner high,
Myriads arming through the world,
Legions to the dust are hurled;
Earth may tremble at the shock,
We are founded on a Rock!

While the fires of passion burn,
Wait we for our Lord's return;
In the signs of earth and sky
We discern his advent nigh.
Soon the heavens will backward roll,
Earth will shake from pole to pole,
Every eye on earth will see
Christ, the Lamb of Calvary—
Judah's Lion! Mighty One!
Brighter than the noon-day sun,
Fairer than the golden dawn,
Passing through the gates of morn.
He will burst the silent grave,
Backward roll the mountain wave,
From the dust his people bring
In the likeness of their King.

Once he left his Father's throne,
Suffered on the earth alone,
Nailed to the accursed tree,
He hath died for thee and me;
Low into the grave he sank,
Deep the cup of sorrow drank,
Then, uprising from the gloom,
Broke the fetters of the tomb.
Promising again to come,
Sought he then his native home.

Age on age hath rolled away,
Now we wait the promised day;
Lord, how long ere we shall see
Our redemption come with thee?
We are waiting in the gloom,
'Mid the shadows of the tomb,
'Mid the evening's gathering shade,
All our hopes on Thee are laid.
Come, let us not wait in vain;
Come on earth to rule and reign;
Come to bind the bruised reed,
Come to bless our every need;
With that hope we now repose,
Wait we Sharon's deathless Rose.

WHAT IS A JEW?
And to whom do the Promises Belong?

NUMBER THREE.

It is claimed that the Old Testament prophecies contain exceeding great and precious promises to Israel, or the Jews, and to this claim I do not object, providing we take God's definition of an Israelite or Jew; but if I take man's definition of what it takes to constitute Israel, I become involved in a taller and more dense thicket than a common "hedge," with no sword to cut my way through. God says by Ezekiel that "the house of Israel are my people." Again, by Isaiah he uses these words to define the same; "The vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel."

Now do not these Scriptures, as well as many others which might be adduced on this point, prove that it was GOD'S PEOPLE who bore the name of Israel, that God's church or vineyard was denominated by the same name? This being the case, does it not look reasonable that God should make exceeding great and precious promises to his people, his church? I think so. But that every one must sustain a special or particular character in order to occupy a place in God's church, or vineyard, under the old, as well as under the new covenant, must appear obvious to all Bible readers. Obedience and self-denial were required under both covenants in order to be in God's church. Now if we sustain this special character we are in God's church, and consequently may claim the promises made to said church.

Allow me to ask, have Israel according to to the flesh, the Jews, as a nation, sustained the requisite characteristics to be in God's church since Christ declared to them that the kingdom of God should be taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof? Matt. 21: 33. The reason Christ gave in the preceding verse for taking the kingdom from them was, that they, as God's professed builders, had set at naught that foundation Stone which the Lord God had laid in Zion! This was a precious Stone, a tried Stone, a sure foundation, etc. Isa. 28: 16.

It may be asked, how the kingdom of God could be taken from them when it was not set up? Is it not obvious that it was the PROMISE of the kingdom he took from them; because they had so long violated their part of the contract; ever bearing in mind that God's promises relative to man's salvation are conditional. Their unbelief and rebellion had been carried to such an extent that there seemed no remedy as a nation; yet if they remain not in unbelief they may be grafted in again. The conditions of obtaining the kingdom are the same to the Jew as to the Gentile. God is no respecter of persons. If the promise of the kingdom was taken from the Jews as a nation, where do we get another after this?

There seems to be some dispute relative to "what is a Jew" or Israelite, but it seems to be generally admitted that they, whoever they are, shall have the land of Palestine, and never be plucked up or moved out of it. Now what if we take the "circumcised posterity of Abraham" to constitute Israel and fulfill this promise to them, we will have about one hundred and sixty millions Mohammedans planted in Palestine, and never to be plucked up or moved out! It will be recollected that in a former article I gave the historical fact that more of Abraham's blood was coursing through Mohammedan veins than any other nation under heaven. And the fact that circumcision has been practised by this people from time immemorial, goes to substantiate the same. Indeed, so naturalized and decided were this people in the rite of circumcision, that Mahomet said there was no need of legislating upon it.

Another definition of Israel is, those who adhere to the Jews' religion and practise the law of Moses. Alas! where are such a people to be found? Not on this earth, I am sure! From what knowledge I can obtain by personal conversation with modern Jews, they use scarcely any of the beasts specified by Moses; and if historians can be relied upon, they never have since the destruction of Jerusalem. Says Dr. Adam Clarke, "It is worthy of remark, that after the destruction of Jerusalem, the paschal lamb ceased to be offered by the Jews throughout the world, though they continue to hold the anniversary of the Passover, but without anysacrifice, notwithstanding their deep-rooted, inveterate antipathy against the Author and grace of the gospel."

Now to whom do the promises belong? Do they belong to Israel after the flesh, that is, to those who have the greatest amount of Abrahamic blood flowing in their natural veins? Then blessed be the one hundred and sixty millions of Mohammedans! But if it be the five or six million of those who are noted the world over for their sordid love of gain, and their keeping some parts of the Mosaic law when it does not put them to too great inconvenience, then this class will be such as shall have an eternal plantation in Palestine—never moved or plucked up! Then you and I shall have no right to that land if they are never to be moved, and that is specially THEIR land.

God did promise Abraham that he should be heir of the world. He then tells us how we can share with Abraham, listen, "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Then all that will have Christ to reign over them in this world will be heirs with Abraham—have what Abraham has. But, says one, the natural descendants of Abraham, or nominal or national Israel, are going to have opportunity to get the faith of Abraham after Christ comes the second time. What is there in the Scriptures presented by those who believe in probation after the advent that looks like true repentance and conversion to God? I think, with Rev. C. Cunningham, that these prophecies mostly "are descriptive of the results of Jehovah's exercise of power in the great gathering day, which will be the overthrow of his enemies, and the eternal salvation of his people, and have no reference whatever to the conversion of souls to Christ."

Some tenaciously maintain that the latter part of Zech. 14 is to be fulfilled after the second advent; but this application of Scripture looks very inconsistent to me. The idea of such is, that nations are left on the earth after Christ comes, who shall go up to Jerusalem to worship. This seems to be the only requisition of said nations, and the penalty for breaking this requirement, is a drouth—not being eternally shut out of God's kingdom, but—"no rain." Now allow me to ask how long it would take those nations living no further from Jerusalem than we, to go up there yearly,—then glance at the thousands and millions of poor heathen frow Patagonia, Australia, and other remote corners of the earth, and tell me how they are to be supported in going to Jerusalem yearly? For be it remembered, these nations are in a mortal state, and of course must live and travel like mortals. And if they would remain in Jerusalem in order to secure the inestimable prize, what could these vast millions subsist upon?

But this, inconsistent as it appears, does not shock the christian, like the idea of offering beasts for the expiation of human guilt, after Christ the great sacrifice has come and offered himself once for all. I say, to maintain that beasts shall be offered for a sin-offering after this, seems like a great insult to the Savior, as though his blood was not sufficient, and the blood of bulls and goats must make up that deficiency! And, if this going up to Jerusalem for yearly worship is after the second advent, these sin-offerings of beasts are made; for the great object of this going up to Jerusalem is to keep the feast of tabernacles. According to inspiration, this feast was kept eight days and a SIN-OFFERING made on each day.

The idea that any who are found unprepared at the coming of Christ have time and opportunity to make their peace with God, is, to me, as utterly without foundation in the inspired volume as universal salvation. There is evidently a large class of professors of religion who think to be saved when Christ comes, against whom the door is shut. Christ exhorts such to put forth greater exertion now, because "when once the Master of the house hath risen up and shut to the door," their agonizing calls will all be unheeded. Luke 13: 25. Now is not this "Master at the house" the same as the Bridegroom in Matt. 25, who takes those only who are READY AT HIS coming? Does not the parable of the virgins, the shutting of the door when the Bridegroom (Christ) comes, plainly show that no more can be admitted after this event? But more anon.

PHILOSOPHIES OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

Those who advocate the doctrine of eternal conscious existence in misery have a great amount of talk about "philosophy," and that the opponents of their theories discard and neglect the arguments which prove the Bible and their creed. We do not object to philosophy. We prefer to use it as it is, all on the side of this gospel truth that "The wicked shall be as though they had not been." I have read in some old book about "opposition to science falsely so called," and it may be that the philosophies of my dear brethren are some of the "oppositions" spoken of. I do not wish to arrogate all the truth to "our side" unless it belongs there, and if my opponents will fairly answer the arguments here presented, I will allow them the credit of having the truth as far as their darling philosophy goes. If they cannot, then they are bound to admit that the everlasting punishment into which the wicked will go is not conscious or unconscious misery through all eternity.

The arguments are based on the theory of a Theodicy, or the harmony of God's government. Dr. Edward Beecher wrote his "Conflict of Ages," but there was not much Theodicy about that; then he wrote his "Concord of Ages," but he did not mend the matter much. Then Albert Taylor Bledsoe, now Clerk of the Rebel Secretary of War, tried the work on the Armenian theory, but they all allowed that horrible dogma of Eternal Misery to be true, and so even Bledsoe's Armenianism fails to unravel the mystery of ages and solve the question often asked reasonably, Why, if greater evil than good must result from the creation of man, as more will be lost and eternally miserable than saved and happy, did God make man?

Dr. Lyman Beecher, I am told, said in relation to Edward's book, "My son Edward has been trying to get God out of difficulty, but he has not done it." Bledsoe may be more reasonable, but he finally gets into the same pit into which Beecher and his coadjutors fall; so that neither Bledsoe's "Theodicy," nor Edward Beecher's "Conflict" or "Concord" of ages answers the question—Why did God make man, if he knew that the man could or might sin?

Before answering the question, I will notice three theories that are advanced by my philosophical friends.

1st. That of the Calvinists. They say that some are vessels of wrath fitted for destruction; i. e., conscious existence in misery (?) In other words, that he made them on purpose to be damned, for he foreknew that man would sin, and as all men having natural immortality cannot die, or cease to exist, he must have intended that such should be lost.

2nd. Others (Bledsoe among them) claim that man was under no obligation to sin, and so is himself responsible for his suffering. But they get into the meshes of the natural immortality theory, and so, as in the other case, there is a difficulty for admitting that men have a natural immortality, and the eternal misery of a greater part of the race. Then the question, Why did God make man? is yet unanswered; for they can introduce sin into the universe, and on the authority of their own natural immortality challenge their Maker to rid his universe of them or their sins, or prevent them with their depraved and hell-consigned natures from sinning against him as much as they please. The simple point is, the immortal sinner has the advantage of God, and it would certainly seem wiser, with this view, for God not to have made man at all than to have thus frustrated himself by making beings whom he could not control; for natural immortality means no less than that he who has it is indestructible, and can do what he pleases with that nature, even though he choose to defy and blaspheme God and hold all his laws in contempt; for if God would stop him he cannot do it, because the man has an indestructible nature.

Ministers and members of the so-called evangelical sects warn sinners to repent, for God may stop them in their "mad career" and call them to their account; while at the same time they believe that these same sinners will be sent down to a hell where their career will be madder than ever. Prof. Hudson justly remarks that this theory gives a sort of dignity to the wicked as such.

The third theory is urged by only a few. It is occasioned by the dilemma of the other theories. It is taught in some theological schools I wot of. "Brethren," said a theological professor to his class, "man has n't natural immortality; if he had, God would have frustrated himself and have made what he could not destroy. If man exists forever, it is by the will of God."

But even this, the most reasonable of the three positions, is but another horn of the dilemma; for the question occurs, would God make man and hold him in existence with the capacity to sin? Would he do as the Roman Inquisitors who, when torturing on the rack, applied restoratives that the victim might be the longer tortured, his life being prolonged? For holding the sinner in existence in eternal torment when he has no natural immortality to keep him there, is on the inquisitorial restorative principle. So if either of the three positions is correct, the often asked question, Why did God make man at all? is pertinent.

There is, after all, a Theodicy, simple and consistent, which unfolds the hidden mystery of the ages, hidden because the mists of contradictory theological dogmas have made it so. It is this. God might have made man consistently, if by doing so he could accomplish a greater good than evil, which cannot be seen from even the most plausible (so called) Armenian stand-point. That a greater good than evil will be accomplished must be seen, or the theory is false, for God cannot work unless these results be accomplished. That evil is an accident of free agency must be seen; i. e., if a man is a free, responsible being, evil is likely to be introduced into the universe. Positive good implies its opposite, positive evil; not as an actual existence, but as possible; else sin could never have been introduced into God's moral government. CANT, the metaphysician, speaks of the "receptivity of space," or a place in space capable of receiving the worlds which might be created and put into it. So it is in the moral universe: and a finite, moral being must be put on probation, and may introduce sin; for if he cannot do wrong, he cannot do right, and vice versa.

Good has been well said to be "evil resisted and reconquered evermore." It is positive obedience to God in opposition to evil. So evil or sin is positive disobedience in opposition to good. So that, while there was no necessity for man's disobedience, he must have the opportunity of sinning, or he could not be a moral probationer. The first man sinned, and the sentence of death was pronounced upon him; a Savior was provided to redeem him and his posterity from death, which he did by tasting death for every man, and so delivering all from that death by ransoming them from the power of the grave.

A second death was threatened; and although blood has been shed for the remission of sins, the majority of men will receive the penalty of their transgressions by being consigned to that second death. They take the advantage of their opportunities of sinning and come under condemnation, and it becomes a question of importance as to what that second death is. If it is eternal misery, and a state of eternal sinfulness, as it must be in opposition to the state of eternal sinlessness in the everlasting kingdom, then more evil and misery will result from the creation of man than good and happiness, and God's creatures, on the authority of their own freedom and eternal sinful existence, will introduce and keep evil in the universe contrary to God's government and beyond his control; and if it makes no difference whether he does it with natural immortality, or by being sustained "by the will of God," if he only has the opportunity of sinning and defying God.

In the case of natural immortality, he does it on his own authority and cannot be destroyed, and if he has the opportunity because God keeps him in existence he must still be allowed the opportunity, or his misery cannot be eternal.

But if the second death be literal, and God makes an end of the sinner, then all the misery of all the lost, which must end, will not even balance the happiness of one who shall be eternally saved; and the happiness of all the saved will far transcend the whole aggregate of suffering, and God will be triumphant in the administration of his government; sin will be banished from the universe, and no sinners will have the opportunity of wickedly defying him forever.

This is the only true philosophy. No other is reasonable. There must be a "conflict of ages," except this position be adopted. Just take this simple position, and the wrangling of theological sachems will be no longer of account; the strife of opinion will cease, and gospel truth will be seen in a clear, beautiful light.

Volumes have been written which are as clear as the effort to reconcile light with darkness would be, because they would hold fast to the inconsistent error of eternal sinfulness and misery. Thank God for consistent truth!

ADAM'S TRIAL-PARADISE NOT TO BE RESTORED.

Some people are in blindness respecting the future Paradise of God, which has its origin in the erroneous supposition that it will include all that was connected with Adam's state in the garden of Eden,—thus making it a restoration of that state, with its appendages. But that trial Paradise of Adam is never to be restored as the Paradise of immortal saints. Adam's trial Paradise was only the state in which Adam was on trial for endless life, and during that term of trial he was commanded to "MULTIPLY and replenish the earth, and subdue it."—Gen. 1: 28. This command to "multiply" must have been intended for Adam's trial state, and not for his deathless state, which he would have reached at the end of his trial, if he had not fallen; otherwise it involves the conclusion that if Adam had not fallen, there would have been a perpetual propagation of the species among immortals, thus flooding numberless worlds with their offspring in process of eternity; and furthermore, that when the saints reach that deathless state, they will thus "multiply"! During this term of trial, Adam was not only commanded to "multiply," but also to "SUBDUE" the earth; and to this end God gave him "dominion over" fish, fowl, and beasts, which would have been necessary appendages had that trial state been continued. But man fell; now God places him on trial again, firstly, for a rise from guilt, and, secondly, for the same deathless state that he was formerly on trial for: hence, we are now having our trial, though not in a Paradise like Adam's.

After this second trial is offered to man, God renews the command to "multiply" (Gen. 9: 1), and the beasts are still for his benefit, and the earth still to be "subdued," rendered doubly difficult by being "cursed" with "thorns and thistles." During this second trial, God will gather a class to dwell in the future deathless Paradise; not in a restored trial Paradise, but a Paradise like the one which Adam would have reached at the end of his trial, if he had not fallen, differing from the former in these particulars:—

1st. In this trial Paradise, the occupants were a "little lower than the angels"; in the other they will be "equal to the angels."

2nd. In this trial Paradise its occupants were on trial for endless life; but the trial is in the past before reaching the other.

3rd. The occupants of the trial Paradise could, and did fall and die; but "neither can they die any more" in the other.

4th. The occupants of this trial Paradise were commanded to "multiply," being pronounced "man and wife" (Gen. 2: 25), thus showing the existence of the marriage covenant there; but in the future Paradise they will "neither marry nor be given in marriage."

5th. In this trial Paradise was the tree of death, and the tempting Serpent, which will not be needed in the deathless state.

6th. In this trial Paradise were the "beasts, made to be taken and destroyed," placed there for the use of man while on trial, and they were to multiply; but in the deathless state the "beasts that perish" will not be needed.

To claim a restoration of Adam's trial Paradise is certainly erroneous. The territorial "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world," free from mortal appendages, will be ours—a deathless Paradise. W. SHELDON.

Righteousness must be king, ruling over the entire man, or else be subject to sin and bow in silent submission. Holiness must reign over the faculties of the mind, the affections of the heart and the passions of the soul, forming the grand central power. Holiness thus enthroned gives energy to our actions and decision to our characters. Man is a religious being, and practically speaking, holiness set him in motion. The heart is made for worship. The affections must cling to something. The mind must be developed. The body must be so trained as to secure health and manual dexterity. All man's powers need to be brought into active exercise to secure health and happiness.

Such harmonious, symmetrical and progressive development of man's nature will enable him to accomplish the design of his creation. This is the way to make the most of life, to rise continually higher in the scale of existence—attain a good degree of moral excellence—prepare for the greatest possible usefulness on earth—secure comfort and consolation to his soul in affliction and pave the way to felicity in the outside world. Here in such a character there is the purest thought, holiest aspirations, the greatest moral power, and the highest spiritual attainments. Absolute holiness is confined to the regions of heaven, and belongs only to God.

Essential holiness belongs especially to human beings, and is well fitted for the province of man's life and destiny. Holiness like this prepares man for every possible emergency. Enlisted in the warfare of life; armed for the fray, drilled and disciplined for the charge, entered into the holy war, he only waits the orders of the Captain of his salvation to march to sure and complete victory. Under the school of Christ talents are improved, faculties roused, spiritual improvement attained, growth in grace secured, and a consistent christian character formed.

The great work of holiness is entered into by urgent and life-like prayers, by earnest and persevering efforts; and the good accomplished in every worthy enterprise, is only realized by the energy of its performers. By this law of personal activity, purity is recommended and purity obtained. Holiness that walks and works, lives and breathes, believes and bountifully bestows, is the kind for this life.

Who would not be holy? Who would not possess such peace and enjoy such happiness? Here is such a perfection of nature—such an influence of love—such a ruling of righteousness—such a mastery of moral power—such a control of the passions—such a growth of religious graces—such a foretaste of heaven—such an attainment of virtue—all springing from true holiness; that one would readily suppose that everybody would admire and covet earnestly a character growing out of christian holiness. BISHOP MORRIS AND THE YOUNG PREACHERS.

You honor me with a request to suggest some plan that may be of use to young brethren. I am willing, but feel timid for several reasons. 1. I claim no alma mater but "Old Brush College," the only one we claimed or had in the early years of my ministry. 2. I am at a loss in digesting a plan of study for a class of men having so much leisure as have our "preachers on trial." If, situated as to labor and study, as were our cotemporaries and I, it would be an easier task for me to advise them. During my two years' probation I met class over five hundred and thirty times, preached about seven hundred and thirty times, besides hundreds of exhortations, and much pastoral visiting and disciplinary business—to accomplish which I traveled on horseback over seven thousand miles, not on smooth pikes, but over stony ridges and muddy vales, by rough and crooked ways, often difficult to find. Yet I found time for as much study as I was able to endure. My plan of studies was briefly this:—

1. At five, A. M., I read the Bible with a view to a better general knowledge of it; also, to mark particular portions of it to be committed to memory, and suitable passages on which to make sermons, and add them to my reserved list of texts.

2. I wrote a brief of a new subject, or revised and remodeled an old one for a new occasion. These briefs were never laid before me in the pulpit, but were intended to fix the outline of the subject clearly in my mind and filed for future reference.

3. For every four miles I had to ride to my appointment, I allowed myself one hour, and whatever time I had before leaving I spent in reading theology in regular course. When mounted on the horse I took out my pocket Bible and memorized the passages marked for that purpose. This done, I studied the filling up of my brief in all its details, so that on meeting my congregation I was full of the subject, and poured it out fresh and warm from the heart. Though I did not write out my sermons, nor use notes when delivering them, yet I could never preach with confidence without thorough preparation. The daily service between Sabbaths was one sermon and class meeting. This ended, we enjoyed brief christian salutations; but all the talking had to be done between the religious service and the adjournment from the dinner table, as there was no spare time afterward.

4. My literary and scientific studies were reserved for afternoon, so as not to interfere with regular ministerial duties. Immediately after dinner, I resumed my regular task where it was left the previous day. In the warm season my favorite studio was the shady woodland. In cold weather, if a separate room with fire could be had all well; if not, I remained with the family, but went on with my studies as if alone. When night came, unless an evening service prevented, I spent the evening partly in reading to the family, interspersed with remarks for their instruction and my own improvement, and the balance in singing and religious conversation. Next day the same routine was repeated. Having no teacher, I acted the double part of professor and student, that is, I studied my lesson and recited it to myself. So I proceeded not only during my probation, but for many years after. I own, however, to occasional relaxation of mind from severe application, by reciting amusing incidents which came under my observation, in order to counteract a tendency to nervous depression. Thus in the early days of Western Methodism, we learned a few things pertaining to our ministry, without the benefit of colleges.

Now the state of the case is changed; laborers are abundant, and many hands make light work. In most of the conferences the circuits are so reduced that young preachers are required to preach comparatively little and to travel less. Of course their charges are not equal as to the amount of labor expected of them, and hence the difficulty of suggesting any plan applicable in all cases. Perhaps the following hints may be of use to some.

The day and night at all seasons of the year contain twenty-four hours, which might be divided thus: In the bedroom half an hour to pray, undress, and turn in; seven hours to repose; half an hour to rise, wash, dress, and pray; in all eight hours. For breakfast, dinner, supper, with family worship morning and evening, allow two hours. For reading current news, say one hour. For general reading, say three hours. For public service, if there be one, including going and returning, two hours.

For visiting, conversation, and prayer with the sick and serious, two hours. Total, eighteen hours, leaving the young man even on preaching day between Sabbath six hours, and on other days eight hours for his regular course of studies. When his appointment requires it, he can add the two hours allowed for visiting to the two for public service, which would give him four hours. Thus it appears that a young man may deduct all Sabbaths and festivals, and yet have three hundred days in a year with at least six hours each for regular study, which is enough.

Allow me a few more hints on special points, and I am done. 1. A hundred pages of poor reading costs as much time as the same amount of good, while the former is an injury and the latter a benefit; therefore, select carefully. 2. Leave all novels to the circles of folly whence they came and where they belong. No sensible man, who appreciates life and its results, will waste his precious time with them. 3. Don't entertain the absurd thought that a man can study only in a room with his library in sight. Take your text book with you, study here, there, yonder, all the time. 4. Do not defer writing your composition till the year is gone, and then come to conference with the silly excuse that you had to write it in haste. A whole year is allowed, and if your composition contains one error in spelling, with a dictionary before you, it is inexcusable. Write one every quarter and file it, then select the best and copy with final revision and correction, and submit it without apology for examination. Very respectfully,

T. A. MORRIS.

EXTRACT FROM ONE OF JOHN B. GOUGH'S SPEECHES.

John Maynard was well known in the Lake district as a God-fearing, honest, intelligent pilot. He was pilot on a steamer from Detroit to Buffalo one summer afternoon. At that time, those steamers seldom carried boats. Smoke was seen ascending from below, and the captain called out, "Simpson, go down and see what the smoke is." Simpson came up with his face pale as ashes, and said, "Captain, the ship is on fire." Then, "Fire! fire! fire! fire on shipboard!" All hands were called up. Buckets of water were dashed upon the fire, but in vain. There were large quantities of rosin and tar on board, and it was useless to attempt to save the ship. The passengers rushed aft and inquired of the pilot, "How far are we from Buffalo?" "Seven miles." "How long before we reach it?" "Three-quarters of an hour at our present rate of steam." "Is there any danger?" "Danger here,—see the smoke bursting out! Go forward, if you would save your lives!" Passengers and crew, men, women, and children crowded the forward part of the ship. John Maynard stood at the helm. The flames burst forth in a sheet of fire; clouds of smoke arose; the captain cried out through his trumpet, "John Maynard!" "Ay, ay, sir!" "Are you at the helm?" "Ay, ay, sir!" "How does she head?" "South-east by east, sir!" "Head her south-east and run her on shore!" Nearer, nearer, yet nearer, she approached the shore. Again the captain cried out, "John Maynard!" The response came feebly, "Ay ay, sir!" "Can you hold on five minutes longer, John?" "By God's help I will!" The old man's hair was scorched from the scalp, one hand disabled, his knee upon the stanchion, and his teeth set, with the other hand upon the wheel, he stood firm as a rock. He breached the ship,—every man, woman, and child was saved, as John Maynard dropped, and his spirit took its flight to his God.

He sacrificed his life to save the lives of others; it is worth a greater effort to save a man from mortal ruin,—to save a child from drunkenness than from fire.

PHTHISIC.

BRO. GRANT:—By your permission I wish to say a few things more about the herb for the above disease, through the paper, which will save me much writing to single individuals. Last mail I took out fourteen letters, to which I made answer. Two years ago, I first became acquainted with its effect. A Bro., over sixty years old, had been afflicted all his life, who took the herb, and was relieved. The winter before, he sat up night after night, because he could not lie on the bed. He let me have some, as I had a brother-in-law so afflicted that he had to have three pillows and his overcoat under his head to sleep. Last spring I persuaded him to take a course of treatment, and he very soon could sleep with one pillow; but it slightly returned in three months, when it was necessary to take another course. When I asked him if he thought it was worth the trouble, he replied, Yes, for I have seen many a night that I would give ten dollars for a night's rest.

I think it may not cure every body; yet if one half, or two thirds are cured, or relieved for months, it will be worth the trial. I have hesitated for nearly one year to speak, and yet I thought that suffering humanity ought to be helped.

Many of these letters have but one stamp, which would only pay the postage of a single letter, while it may take more, owing to the weight. I should have spoken about this, but it would look like speculating. This is the reason I have not published it before. Some of these letters are from preachers, or their families, of like precious faith. They must have it, even at my expense. I am not a doctor, and have not a license; therefore I cannot make a charge, if I wished to. What may be given as a present will be used in the cause of truth.

I cannot define the medicine so others can get it, but I will give general direction here, and send it with a sample dose for an adult, to those who wish it. It is to be taken before eating, for three mornings, and so on till nine doses are taken; then wait nine days, and if there are still symptoms, take it again as before. After these two courses, I think it may not be necessary to repeat again. The patient can better judge, and vary some in size of doses, according to age, and circumstances. Follow the Hygienic mode of living, as given by Bro. Himes in his Journal in the Crisis. PETER S. W. DEYO.

REASON IN FOOD AND DRINK.

Mixed food is unwholesome if the different kinds disagree with each other. The cook-books are only directions for poisoning people. The reason of mince pies being more hurtful than any other kind, is that the inside is composed of things that oppose each other. Cider, apples, sugar, and raisins, disagree with meat. Sugar disagrees with almost everything. Vinegar on baked beans disagree with each other. Tomatoes and vinegar agree, as do cucumbers and vinegar. The soft watery part in the middle of a cucumber is wholesome, the hard or outside part is what hurts people. Butter and flour mixed and baked together oppose each other.

The substantial and necessary articles of food are bread, potatoes, a little meat if desired, fish, eggs, beans, peas, turnips, beets, carrots, parsnips, cabbage, onions, squashes, etc. All of them agree with each other. Sour fruit is beneficial to those who like it, such as sour apples cooked, tomatoes, strawberries. . . . Fruit disagrees with the substantial articles and it makes a great difference which is eaten first. If fruit is eaten promiscuously with the meal or immediately after it, it makes a disturbance in the stomach and prevents a good digestion. If the fruit is eaten first, it is out of the way, interferes with nothing, and has no bad effect on the meal. Besides when eaten first, it sharpens the appetite. After a person has eaten to moderate satisfaction of plain substantial food, not a bit of anything else whatever should be taken. "Topping off" with other things is one of the greatest faults in eating. It is peculiarly an American vice. Accordingly, the food which is loved most, should be eaten first. If a person is so imprudent as to eat pies, sweet cake, pickles, or baked pudding, they ought to be the first things taken. Things that are unwholesome, do less harm when taken first, on an empty stomach. The same is true of honey and whatever else disagrees with particular persons. Sugar or any sweetened food, if eaten promiscuously with the meal, or immediately after it, is apt to cause a broiling and disturbance, with the sourness of the stomach. Eaten first, it is less hurtful.

Drink of any kind taken while eating, or immediately after the meal, prevents digestion. The liquid that is mixed with food in the stomach has to be carried off before digestion can begin. Drink taken immediately after eating mixes with the food. Thirst also disagrees with digestion, and whatever thirst there is should be quenched before beginning to eat. After the thirst is quenched, no more drink is needed, and if more is taken, it is only to "wash it down," which is a most hurtful practice. Drink taken before beginning to eat does not interfere or mix with the food, and does no harm. In about two hours after eating, a degree of thirst is commonly felt, from the stimulating effect of the food, and then drink can be safely taken. Salted food is unwholesome, because it creates a fever in the stomach and thirst which must be quenched with drink. Nobody can tell any good that is done by eating salt. Whatever does no good, does harm. Salt may be good at times as a medicine, but medicine makes well people sick. Undoubtedly animals would be better off without salt. . . .

The flesh of animals that are fatted by having as much as they will eat, is unwholesome food, because such animals are diseased. Pork is in a worse condition than any other meat, because hogs are commonly kept without exercise or sun, and with insufficient light and air. Adjoining the "back house" is a favorite place for the hog pen. Constant breathing the stench makes the pork unwholesome, and to a consistent person disgusting. If aged people are unhealthy, and would be bad food for cannibals, by the same reasoning the flesh of old animals is unfit to eat.

With health and rational habits of eating, there is no looseness of the bowels. With a good digestion, the juices of the food go into the blood and leave the evacuations solid. With a bad digestion, the juices go off by the bowels with looseness. Wind is entirely owing to bad digestion. In perfect health and rational eating, no person would have any wind. The first worms in a child are created without parentage by an overloaded stomach. Pin worms are started into existence by a continued use of sweet or unfermented cider. . . . Sweet cider produces piles, bloating and other serious complaints of the stomach and bowels. Cider that is prevented from working by the addition of spirit or anything else, should be avoided as poison. . . .

The wholesomest kind of water is rain water, because it is purified by sun, air, light and exercise in the clouds. Next is river and brook water. Well water is not so good, from being confined from sun, air, and light. The water of ponds and lakes is disordered from want of motion. Bad water is made good by boiling, and any water whatever is made better by it. Water needs to be cooked as well as food. Boiling throws out the gas and alters the nature of the water. If cold drink is needed, let it stand and cool. It is much more pleasant to the taste than that which is not boiled. The bad water in the low lands of the Southern States can be made good by boiling, although the inhabitants don't appear to know it. Bad water can be improved by shaking it violently, exposed to the air, or by raising it to a height and letting it fall. The best warm drink is a weak tea made of any pleasant and wholesome herb, for instance, sage, or even hot water alone with a little milk. With plenty of hot drink in hot weather, there is no danger of being "sun struck" or "melted." It is no trouble to live right after a person has found the way and got a little used to it. It is only pleasure in every respect.—Investigator.

HEALTHFULNESS OF WALKING.

A writer says: "I remember once being at William and Mary Howitt's, when some one proposed that we should make a little family visit to Epping Forest, distant some four or five miles. As we crossed the threshold of the door, I was expecting the next moment to help the two ladies making our party into the carriage; but I saw no carriage; and when I asked where was the carriage? I got for a reply, 'We are going on foot, of course.' And so we walked all the way there, and rambled all the day long over the beautiful forest, and at night walked back to 'The Elms.' I kept looking at the ladies while we were returning, expecting to see them faint away; and finally, I ventured very quietly to ask one of them, "Are you not very tired?" I got for a reply a merry ringing laugh and a 'To be sure not; I could walk half a dozen miles farther yet!' When I got home I was so fatigued as to be unable to stand without great pain and trouble, and was obliged to acknowledge that the English ladies were my superiors in physical powers of endurance. I saw at once the secret of their glorious health, their buoyancy, and flow of spirits. It was their habits of exercise out of doors."—Exchange.

INFLUENCE OF TEMPER ON HEALTH.

Excessive labor, exposure to wet and cold, deprivation of sufficient quantities of necessary and wholesome food, habitual bad lodging, sloth and intemperance, are all deadly enemies to human life; but they are none of them so bad as violent and ungoverned passions. Men and women have survived all these, and at last reached an extreme old age; but it may be safely doubted whether a single instance can be fonnd of a man of violent and irascible temper, habitually subject to storms of ungovernable passion, who has arrived at a very advanced period of life. It is, therefore, a matter of the highest importance to every one desirous to preserve "a sound mind in a sound body," so that the brittle vessel of life may glide down the stream of time smoothly and securely, instead of being continually tossed about amidst all the vicissitudes and trials of life, to maintain a quiet possession of his own spirit.—Hall's Journal of Health.

TO PRESERVE HEALTH.

Remember that medicine will never remedy bad habits; and it is utterly futile to think of living in gluttony, intemperance, and every excess, and keeping the body in health by medicines. Indulgence of the appetite, and indiscriminate dosing and drugging, have ruined the health and destroyed the lives of more persons than famine or pestilence. If you will take our advice, you will become regular in your habits, eat and drink only wholesome things, in moderate quantities; retire and rise with regularity; make a free use of water to purify and invigorate the skin, give full expansion to the lungs with pure fresh air; and when sick, an occurrence which will rarely happen, take counsel of the best physician, and follow nature.

ACTION.—Men who have half a dozen irons in the fire are not the ones to go crazy. It is the man of voluntary or compelled leisure who mopes, and pines, and thinks himself into the madhouse or the grave. Motion is all nature's law. Action is man's salvation physical and mental, and yet nine out of ten are wistfully looking forward to the coveted hour when they shall have leisure to do nothing or something only if they feel like it—the very siren that has lured to the death many a successful man.

BORNE WITH EVERY BREEZE ALONG.

Borne with every breeze along,
Comes a wail of ruth and wrong;
Treason's banner flaunteth high,
Freedom bares her breast to die.
Brothers, mingling in the strife,
Fiercely seek each other's life;
Hate and wrong hath won the day,
Peace must yield her gentle sway.

Darkness hovers o'er our path,
Men shall drink the wine of wrath;
Thunders mutter at our door,
Snares beset our path before;
Troubles gather thick behind,
Rushing swifter than the wind.
See! destruction rideth by,
Terror lifts her banner high,
Myriads arming through the world,
Legions to the dust are hurled;
Earth may tremble at the shock,
We are founded on a Rock!

While the fires of passion burn,
Wait we for our Lord's return;
In the signs of earth and sky
We discern his advent nigh.
Soon the heavens will backward roll,
Earth will shake from pole to pole,
Every eye on earth will see
Christ, the Lamb of Calvary—
Judah's Lion! Mighty One!
Brighter than the noon-day sun,
Fairer than the golden dawn,
Passing through the gates of morn.
He will burst the silent grave,
Backward roll the mountain wave,
From the dust his people bring
In the likeness of their King.

Once he left his Father's throne,
Suffered on the earth alone,
Nailed to the accursed tree,
He hath died for thee and me;
Low into the grave he sank,
Deep the cup of sorrow drank,
Then, uprising from the gloom,
Broke the fetters of the tomb.
Promising again to come,
Sought he then his native home.

Age on age hath rolled away,
Now we wait the promised day;
Lord, how long ere we shall see
Our redemption come with thee?
We are waiting in the gloom,
'Mid the shadows of the tomb,
'Mid the evening's gathering shade,
All our hopes on Thee are laid.
Come, let us not wait in vain;
Come on earth to rule and reign;
Come to bind the bruised reed,
Come to bless our every need;
With that hope we now repose,
Wait we Sharon's deathless Rose.

WHAT IS A JEW?
And to whom do the Promises Belong?

NUMBER THREE.

It is claimed that the Old Testament prophecies contain exceeding great and precious promises to Israel, or the Jews, and to this claim I do not object, providing we take God's definition of an Israelite or Jew; but if I take man's definition of what it takes to constitute Israel, I become involved in a taller and more dense thicket than a common "hedge," with no sword to cut my way through. God says by Ezekiel that "the house of Israel are my people." Again, by Isaiah he uses these words to define the same; "The vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel."

Now do not these Scriptures, as well as many others which might be adduced on this point, prove that it was GOD'S PEOPLE who bore the name of Israel, that God's church or vineyard was denominated by the same name? This being the case, does it not look reasonable that God should make exceeding great and precious promises to his people, his church? I think so. But that every one must sustain a special or particular character in order to occupy a place in God's church, or vineyard, under the old, as well as under the new covenant, must appear obvious to all Bible readers. Obedience and self-denial were required under both covenants in order to be in God's church. Now if we sustain this special character we are in God's church, and consequently may claim the promises made to said church.

Allow me to ask, have Israel according to to the flesh, the Jews, as a nation, sustained the requisite characteristics to be in God's church since Christ declared to them that the kingdom of God should be taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof? Matt. 21: 33. The reason Christ gave in the preceding verse for taking the kingdom from them was, that they, as God's professed builders, had set at naught that foundation Stone which the Lord God had laid in Zion! This was a precious Stone, a tried Stone, a sure foundation, etc. Isa. 28: 16.

It may be asked, how the kingdom of God could be taken from them when it was not set up? Is it not obvious that it was the PROMISE of the kingdom he took from them; because they had so long violated their part of the contract; ever bearing in mind that God's promises relative to man's salvation are conditional. Their unbelief and rebellion had been carried to such an extent that there seemed no remedy as a nation; yet if they remain not in unbelief they may be grafted in again. The conditions of obtaining the kingdom are the same to the Jew as to the Gentile. God is no respecter of persons. If the promise of the kingdom was taken from the Jews as a nation, where do we get another after this?

There seems to be some dispute relative to "what is a Jew" or Israelite, but it seems to be generally admitted that they, whoever the are, shall have the land of Palestine, and never be plucked up or moved out of it. Now what if we take the "circumcised posterity of Abraham" to constitute Israel and fulfill this promise to them, we will have about one hundred and sixty millions Mohammedans planted in Palestine, and never to be plucked up or moved out! It will be recollected that in a former article I gave the historical fact that more of Abraham's blood was coursing through Mohammedan veins than any other nation under heaven. And the fact that circumcision has been practised by this people from time immemorial, goes to substantiate the same. Indeed, so naturalized and decided were this people in the rite of circumcision, that Mahomet said there was no need of legislating upon it.

Another definition of Israel is, those who adhere to the Jews' religion and practise the law of Moses. Alas! where are such a people to be found? Not on this earth, I am sure! From what knowledge I can obtain by personal conversation with modern Jews, they use scarcely any of the beasts specified by Moses; and if historians can be relied upon, they never have since the destruction of Jerusalem. Says Dr. Adam Clarke, "It is worthy of remark, that after the destruction of Jerusalem, the paschal lamb ceased to be offered by the Jews throughout the world, though they continue to hold the anniversary of the Passover, but without sacrifice, notwithstanding their deep-rooted, inveterate antipathy against the Author and grace of the gospel."

Now to whom do the promises belong? Do they belong to Israel after the flesh, that is, to those who have the greatest amount of Abrahamic blood flowing in their natural veins? Then blessed be the one hundred and sixty millions of Mohammedans! But if it be the five or six million of those who are noted the world over for their sordid love of gain, and their keeping some parts of the Mosaic law when it does not put them to too great inconvenience, then this class will be such as shall have an eternal plantation in Palestine—never moved or plucked up! Then you and I shall have no right to that land if they are never to be moved, and that is specially THEIR land.

God did promise Abraham that he should be heir of the world. He then tells us how we can share with Abraham, listen, "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Then all that will have Christ to reign over them in this world will be heirs with Abraham—have what Abraham has. But, says one, the natural descendants of Abraham, or nominal or national Israel, are going to have opportunity to get the faith of Abraham after Christ comes the second time. What is there in the Scriptures presented by those who believe in probation after the advent that looks like true repentance and conversion to God? I think, with Rev. C. Cunningham, that these prophecies mostly "are descriptive of the results of Jehovah's exercise of power in the great gathering day, which will be the overthrow of his enemies, and the eternal salvation of his people, and have no reference whatever to the conversion of souls to Christ."

Some tenaciously maintain that the latter part of Zech. 14 is to be fulfilled after the second advent; but this application of Scripture looks very inconsistent to me. The idea of such is, that nations are left on the earth after Christ comes, who shall go up to Jerusalem to worship. This seems to be the only requisition of said nations, and the penalty for breaking this requirement, is a drouth—not being eternally shut out of God's kingdom, but—"no rain." Now allow me to ask how long it would take those nations living no further from Jerusalem than we, to go up there yearly,—then glance at the thousands and millions of poor heathen frow Patagonia, Australia, and other remote corners of the earth, and tell me how they are to be supported in going to Jerusalem yearly? For be it remembered, these nations are in a mortal state, and of course must live and travel like mortals. And if they would remain in Jerusalem in order to secure the inestimable prize, what could these vast millions subsist upon?

But this, inconsistent as it appears, does not shock the christian, like the idea of offering beasts for the expiation of human guilt, after Christ the great sacrifice has come and offered himself once for all. I say, to maintain that beasts shall be offered for a sin-offering after this, seems like a great insult to the Savior, as though his blood was not sufficient, and the blood of bulls and goats must make up that deficiency! And, if this going up to Jerusalem for yearly worship is after the second advent, these sin-offerings of beasts are made; for the great object of this going up to Jerusalem is to keep the feast of tabernacles. According to inspiration, this feast was kept eight days and a SIN-OFFERING made on each day.

The idea that any who are found unprepared at the coming of Christ have time and opportunity to make their peace with God, is, to me, as utterly without foundation in the inspired volume as universal salvation. There is evidently a large class of professors of religion who think to be saved when Christ comes, against whom the door is shut. Christ exhorts such to put forth greater exertion now, because "when once the Master of the house hath risen up and shut to the door," their agonizing calls will all be unheeded. Luke 13: 25. Now is not this "Master at the house" the same as the Bridegroom in Matt. 25, who takes those only who are READY AT HIS coming? Does not the parable of the virgins, the shutting of the door when the Bridegroom (Christ) comes, plainly show that no more can be admitted after this event? But more anon.

PHILOSOPHIES OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

Those who advocate the doctrine of eternal conscious existence in misery have a great amount of talk about "philosophy," and that the opponents of their theories discard and neglect the arguments which prove the Bible and their creed. We do not object to philosophy. We prefer to use it as it is, all on the side of this gospel truth that "The wicked shall be as though they had not been." I have read in some old book about "opposition to science falsely so called," and it may be that the philosophies of my dear brethren are some of the "oppositions" spoken of. I do not wish to arrogate all the truth to "our side" unless it belongs there, and if my opponents will fairly answer the arguments here presented, I will allow them the credit of having the truth as far as their darling philosophy goes. If they cannot, then they are bound to admit that the everlasting punishment into which the wicked will go is not conscious or unconscious misery through all eternity.

The arguments are based on the theory of a Theodicy, or the harmony of God's government. Dr. Edward Beecher wrote his "Conflict of Ages," but there was not much Theodicy about that; then he wrote his "Concord of Ages," but he did not mend the matter much. Then Albert Taylor Bledsoe, now Clerk of the Rebel Secretary of War, tried the work on the Armenian theory, but they all allowed that horrible dogma of Eternal Misery to be true, and so even Bledsoe's Armenianism fails to unravel the mystery of ages and solve the question often asked reasonably, Why, if greater evil than good must result from the creation of man, as more will be lost and eternally miserable than saved and happy, did God make man?

Dr. Lyman Beecher, I am told, said in relation to Edward's book, "My son Edward has been trying to get God out of difficulty, but he has not done it." Bledsoe may be more reasonable, but he finally gets into the same pit into which Beecher and his coadjutors fall; so that neither Bledsoe's "Theodicy," nor Edward Beecher's "Conflict" or "Concord" of ages answers the question—Why did God make man, if he knew that the man could or might sin? Before answering the question, I will notice three theories that are advanced by my philosophical friends.

1st. That of the Calvinists. They say that some are vessels of wrath fitted for destruction; i. e., conscious existence in misery (?) In other words, that he made them on purpose to be damned, for he foreknew that man would sin, and as all men having natural immortality cannot die, or cease to exist, he must have intended that such should be lost.

2nd. Others (Bledsoe among them) claim that man was under no obligation to sin, and so is himself responsible for his suffering. But they get into the meshes of the natural immortality theory, and so, as in the other case, there is a difficulty for admitting that men have a natural immortality, and the eternal misery of a greater part of the race. Then the question, Why did God make man? is yet unanswered; for they can introduce sin into the universe, and on the authority of their own natural immortality challenge their Maker to rid his universe of them or their sins, or prevent them with their depraved and hell-consigned natures from sinning against him as much as they please. The simple point is, the immortal sinner has the advantage of God, and it would certainly seem wiser, with this view, for God not to have made man at all than to have thus frustrated himself by making beings whom he could not control; for natural immortality means no less than that he who has it is indestructible, and can do what he pleases with that nature, even though he choose to defy and blaspheme God and hold all his laws in contempt; for if God would stop him he cannot do it, because the man has an indestructible nature.

Ministers and members of the so-called evangelical sects warn sinners to repent, for God may stop them in their "mad career" and call them to their account; while at the same time they believe that these same sinners will be sent down to a hell where their career will be madder than ever. Prof. Hudson justly remarks that this theory gives a sort of dignity to the wicked as such.

The third theory is urged by only a few. It is occasioned by the dilemma of the other theories. It is taught in some theological schools I wot of. "Brethren," said a theological professor to his class, "man hasn't natural immortality; if he had, God would have frustrated himself and have made what he could not destroy. If man exists forever, it is by the will of God."

But even this, the most reasonable of the three positions, is but another horn of the dilemma; for the question occurs, would God make man and hold him in existence with the capacity to sin? Would he do as the Roman Inquisitors who, when torturing on the rack, applied restoratives that the victim might be the longer tortured, his life being prolonged? For holding the sinner in existence in eternal torment when he has no natural immortality to keep him there, is on the inquisitorial restorative principle. So if either of the three positions is correct, the often asked question, Why did God make man at all? is pertinent.

There is, after all, a Theodicy, simple and consistent, which unfolds the hidden mystery of the ages, hidden because the mists of contradictory theological dogmas have made it so. It is this. God might have made man consistently, if by doing so he could accomplish a greater good than evil, which cannot be seen from even the most plausible (so called) Armenian stand-point. That a greater good than evil will be accomplished must be seen, or the theory is false, for God cannot work unless these results be accomplished. That evil is an accident of free agency must be seen; i. e., if a man is a free, responsible being, evil is likely to be introduced into the universe. Positive good implies its opposite, positive evil; not as an actual existence, but as possible; else sin could never have been introduced into God's moral government. CANT, the metaphysician, speaks of the "receptivity of space," or a place in space capable of receiving the worlds which might be created and put into it. So it is in the moral universe: and a finite, moral being must be put on probation, and may introduce sin; for if he cannot do wrong, he cannot do right, and vice versa.

Good has been well said to be "evil resisted and reconquered evermore." It is positive obedience to God in opposition to evil. So evil or sin is positive disobedience in opposition to good. So that, while there was no necessity for man's disobedience, he must have the opportunity of sinning, or he could not be a moral probationer. The first man sinned, and the sentence of death was pronounced upon him; a Savior was provided to redeem him and his posterity from death, which he did by tasting death for every man, and so delivering all from that death by ransoming them from the power of the grave.

A second death was threatened; and although blood has been shed for the remission of sins, the majority of men will receive the penalty of their transgressions by being consigned to that second death. They take the advantage of their opportunities of sinning and come under condemnation, and it becomes a question of importance as to what that second death is. If it is eternal misery, and a state of eternal sinfulness, as it must be in opposition to the state of eternal sinlessness in the everlasting kingdom, then more evil and misery will result from the creation of man than good and happiness, and God's creatures, on the authority of their own freedom and eternal sinful existence, will introduce and keep evil in the universe contrary to God's government and beyond his control; and it makes no difference whether he does it with natural immortality, or by being sustained "by the will of God," if he only has the opportunity of sinning and defying God.

In the case of natural immortality, he does it on his own authority and cannot be destroyed, and if he has the opportunity because God keeps him in existence he must still be allowed the opportunity, or his misery cannot be eternal.

But if the second death be literal, and God makes an end of the sinner, then all the misery of all the lost, which must end, will not even balance the happiness of one who shall be eternally saved; and the happiness of all the saved will far transcend the whole aggregate of suffering, and God will be triumphant in the administration of his government; sin will be banished from the universe, and no sinners will have the opportunity of wickedly defying him forever.

This is the only true philosophy. No other is admissible. There must be a "conflict of ages," unless this position be adopted. Just take this simple position, and the wrangling of theological sectaries will be no longer of account; the strife of opinion will cease, and gospel truth will be seen in a clear, beautiful light.

Volumes have been written which are as clear as the effort to reconcile light with darkness would be, because they would hold fast to the inconsistent error of eternal sinfulness and misery. Thank God for consistent truth!

ADAM'S TRIAL-PARADISE NOT TO BE RESTORED.

Some people are in blindness respecting the future Paradise of God, which has its origin in the erroneous supposition that it will include all that was connected with Adam's state in the garden of Eden,—thus making it a restoration of that state, with its appendages. But that trial Paradise of Adam is never to be restored as the Paradise of immortal saints. Adam's trial Paradise was only the state in which Adam was on trial for endless life, and during that term of trial he was commanded to "MULTIPLY and replenish the earth, and subdue it."—Gen. 1: 28. This command to "multiply" must have been intended for Adam's trial state, and not for his deathless state, which he would have reached at the end of his trial, if he had not fallen; otherwise it involves the conclusion that if Adam had not fallen, there would have been a perpetual propagation of the species among immortals, thus flooding numberless worlds with their offspring in process of eternity; and furthermore, that when the saints reach that deathless state, they will thus "multiply"! During this term of trial, Adam was not only commanded to "multiply," but also to "SUBDUE" the earth; and to this end God gave him "dominion over" fish, fowl, and beasts, which would have been necessary appendages had that trial state been continued. But man fell; now God places him on trial again, firstly, for a rise from guilt, and, secondly, for the same deathless state that he was formerly on trial for: hence, we are now having our trial, though not in a Paradise like Adam's.

After this second trial is offered to man, God renews the command to "multiply" (Gen. 9: 1), and the beasts are still for his benefit, and the earth still to be "subdued," rendered doubly difficult by being "cursed" with "thorns and thistles." During this second trial, God will gather a class to dwell in the future deathless Paradise; not in a restored trial Paradise, but a Paradise like the one which Adam would have reached at the end of his trial, if he had not fallen, differing from the former in these particulars:—

1st. In this trial Paradise, the occupants were a "little lower than the angels"; in the other they will be "equal to the angels."

2nd. In this trial Paradise its occupants were on trial for endless life; but the trial is in the past before reaching the other.

3rd. The occupants of the trial Paradise could, and did fall and die; but "neither can they die any more" in the other.

4th. The occupants of this trial Paradise were commanded to "multiply," being pronounced "man and wife" (Gen. 2: 25), thus showing the existence of the marriage covenant there; but in the future Paradise they will "neither marry nor be given in marriage."

5th. In this trial Paradise was the tree of death, and the tempting Serpent, which will not be needed in the deathless state.

6th. In this trial Paradise were the "beasts, made to be taken and destroyed," placed there for the use of man while on trial, and they were to multiply; but in the deathless state the "beasts that perish" will not be needed.

To claim a restoration of Adam's trial Paradise is certainly erroneous. The territorial "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world," free from mortal appendages, will be ours—a deathless Paradise. W. SHELDON.

HOLINESS OF HEART.—No. 5.

Righteousness must be king, ruling over the entire man, or else be subject to sin and bow in silent submission. Holiness must reign over the faculties of the mind, the affections of the heart and the passions of the soul, forming the grand central power. Holiness thus enthroned gives energy to our actions and decision to our characters. Man is a religious being, and practically speaking, holiness set him in motion. The heart is made for worship. The affections must cling to something. The mind must be developed. The body must be so trained as to secure health and manual dexterity. All man's powers need to be brought into active exercise to secure health and happiness.

Such harmonious, symmetrical and progressive development of man's nature will enable him to accomplish the design of his creation. This is the way to make the most of life, to rise continually higher in the scale of existence—attain a good degree of moral excellence—prepare for the greatest possible usefulness on earth—secure comfort and consolation to his soul in affliction and pave the way to felicity in the outside world. Here in such a character there is the purest thought, holiest aspirations, the greatest moral power, and the highest spiritual attainments. Absolute holiness is confined to the regions of heaven, and belongs only to God.

Essential holiness belongs especially to human beings, and is well fitted for the province of man's life and destiny. Holiness like this prepares man for every possible emergency. Enlisted in the warfare of life; armed for the fray, drilled and disciplined for the charge, entered into the holy war, he only waits the orders of the Captain of his salvation to march to sure and complete victory. Under the school of Christ talents are improved, faculties roused, spiritual improvement attained, growth in grace secured, and a consistent christian character formed.

The great work of holiness is entered into by urgent and life-like prayers, by earnest and persevering efforts; and the good accomplished in every worthy enterprise, is only realized by the energy of its performers. By this law of personal activity, purity is recommended and purity obtained. Holiness that walks and works, lives and breathes, believes and bountifully bestows, is the kind for this life.

Who would not be holy? Who would not possess such peace and enjoy such happiness? Here is such a perfection of nature—such an influence of love—such a ruling of righteousness—such a mastery of moral power—such a control of the passions—such a growth of religious graces—such a foretaste of heaven—such an attainment of virtue—all springing from true holiness; that one would really suppose that everybody would admire and covet earnestly a character growing out of christian holiness. BISHOP MORRIS AND THE YOUNG PREACHERS.

You honor me with a request to suggest some plan that may be of use to young brethren. I am willing, but feel timid for several reasons. 1. I claim no alma mater but "Old Brush College," the only one we claimed or had in the early years of my ministry. 2. I am at a loss in digesting a plan of study for a class of men having so much leisure as have our "preachers on trial." If, situated as to labor and study, as were our cotemporaries and I, it would be an easier task for me to advise them. During my two years' probation I met class over five hundred and thirty times, preached about seven hundred and thirty times, besides hundreds of exhortations, and much pastoral visiting and disciplinary business—to accomplish which I traveled on horseback over seven thousand miles, not on smooth pikes, but over stony ridges and muddy vales, by rough and crooked ways, often difficult to find. Yet I found time for as much study as I was able to endure. My plan of studies was briefly this:

1. At five, A. M., I read the Bible with a view to a better general knowledge of it; also, to mark particular portions of it to be committed to memory, and suitable passages on which to make sermons, and add them to my reserved list of texts.

2. I wrote a brief of a new subject, or revised and remodeled an old one for a new occasion. These briefs were never laid before me in the pulpit, but were intended to fix the outline of the subject clearly in my mind and filed for future reference.

3. For every four miles I had to ride to my appointment, I allowed myself one hour, and whatever time I had before leaving I spent in reading theology in regular course. When mounted on the horse I took out my pocket Bible and memorized the passages marked for that purpose. This done, I studied the filling up of my brief in all its details, so that on meeting my congregation I was full of the subject, and poured it out fresh and warm from the heart. Though I did not write out my sermons, nor use notes when delivering them, yet I could never preach with confidence without thorough preparation. The daily service between Sabbaths was one sermon and class meeting. This ended, we enjoyed brief christian salutations; but all the talking had to be done between the religious service and the adjournment from the dinner table, as there was no spare time afterward.

4. My literary and scientific studies were reserved for afternoon, so as not to interfere with regular ministerial duties. Immediately after dinner, I resumed my regular task where it was left the previous day. In the warm season my favorite studio was the shady woodland. In cold weather, if a separate room with fire could be had all well; if not, I remained with the family, but went on with my studies as if alone. When night came, unless an evening service prevented, I spent the evening partly in reading to the family, interspersed with remarks for their instruction and my own improvement, and the balance in singing and religious conversation. Next day the same routine was repeated. Having no teacher, I acted the double part of professor and student, that is, I studied my lesson and recited it to myself. So I proceeded not only during my probation, but for many years after. I own, however, to occasional relaxation of mind from severe application, by reciting amusing incidents which came under my observation, in order to counteract a tendency to nervous depression. Thus in the early days of Western Methodism, we learned a few things pertaining to our ministry, without the benefit of colleges.

Now the state of the case is changed; laborers are abundant, and many hands make light work. In most of the conferences the circuits are so reduced that young preachers are required to preach comparatively little and to travel less. Of course their charges are not equal as to the amount of labor expected of them, and hence the difficulty of suggesting any plan applicable in all cases. Perhaps the following hints may be of use to some.

The day and night at all seasons of the year contain twenty-four hours, which might be divided thus: In the bedroom half an hour to pray, undress, and turn in; seven hours to repose; half an hour to rise, wash, dress, and pray; in all eight hours. For breakfast, dinner, supper, with family worship morning and evening, allow two hours. For reading current news, say one hour. For general reading, say three hours. For public service, if there be one, including going and returning, two hours.

For visiting, conversation, and prayer with the sick and serious, two hours. Total, eighteen hours, leaving the young man even on preaching day between Sabbath six hours, and on other days eight hours for his regular course of studies. When his appointment requires it, he can add the two hours allowed for visiting to the two for public service, which would give him four hours. Thus it appears that a young man may deduct all Sabbaths and festivals, and yet have three hundred days in a year with at least six hours each for regular study, which is enough.

Allow me a few more hints on special points, and I am done. 1. A hundred pages of poor reading costs as much time as the same amount of good, while the former is an injury and the latter a benefit; therefore, select carefully. 2. Leave all novels to the circles of folly whence they came and where they belong. No sensible man, who appreciates life and its results, will waste his precious time with them. 3. Don't entertain the absurd thought that a man can study only in a room with his library in sight. Take your text book with you, study here, there, yonder, all the time. 4. Do not defer writing your composition till the year is gone, and then come to conference with the silly excuse that you had to write it in haste. A whole year is allowed, and if your composition contains one error in spelling, with a dictionary before you, it is inexcusable. Write one every quarter and file it, then select the best and copy with final revision and correction, and submit it without apology for examination. Very respectfully,

T. A. MORRIS.

EXTRACT FROM ONE OF JOHN B. GOUGH'S SPEECHES.

John Maynard was well known in the Lake district as a God-fearing, honest, intelligent pilot. He was pilot on a steamer from Detroit to Buffalo one summer afternoon. At that time, those steamers seldom carried boats. Smoke was seen ascending from below, and the captain called out, "Simpson, go down and see what the smoke is." Simpson came up with his face pale as ashes, and said, "Captain, the ship is on fire." Then, "Fire! fire! fire! fire on shipboard!" All hands were called up. Buckets of water were dashed upon the fire, but in vain. There were large quantities of rosin and tar on board, and it was useless to attempt to save the ship. The passengers rushed aft and inquired of the pilot, "How far are we from Buffalo?" "Seven miles." "How long before we reach it?" "Three-quarters of an hour at our present rate of steam." "Is there any danger?" "Danger here,—see the smoke bursting out! Go forward, if you would save your lives." Passengers and crew, men, women, and children crowded the forward part of the ship. John Maynard stood at the helm. The flames burst forth in a sheet of fire; clouds of smoke arose; the captain cried out through his trumpet, "John Maynard!" "Ay, ay, sir!" "Are you at the helm?" "Ay, ay, sir!" "How does she head?" "South-east by east, sir!" "Head her south-east and run her on shore." Nearer, nearer, yet nearer, she approached the shore. Again the captain cried out, "John Maynard!" The response came feebly, "Ay, ay, sir!" "Can you hold on five minutes longer, John?" "By God's help I will!" The old man's hair was scorched from the scalp, one hand disabled, his knee upon the stanchion, and his teeth set, with the other hand upon the wheel, he stood firm as a rock. He breached the ship,—every man, woman, and child was saved, as John Maynard dropped, and his spirit took its flight to his God.

He sacrificed his life to save the lives of others; it is worth a greater effort to save a man from mortal ruin,—to save a child from drunkenness than from fire.

PHTHISIC.

BRO. GRANT:—By your permission I wish to say a few things more about the herb for the above disease, through the paper, which will save me much writing to single individuals. Last mail I took out fourteen letters, to which I made answer. Two years ago, I first became acquainted with its effect. A Bro., over sixty years old, had been afflicted all his life, who took the herb, and was relieved. The winter before, he sat up night after night, because he could not lie on the bed. He let me have some, as I had a brother-in-law so afflicted that he had to have three pillows and his overcoat under his head to sleep. Last spring I persuaded him to take a course of treatment, and he very soon could sleep with one pillow; but it slightly returned in three months, when it was necessary to take another course. When I asked him if he thought it was worth the trouble, he replied, Yes, for I have seen many a night that I would give ten dollars for a night's rest.

I think it may not cure every body; yet if one half, or two thirds are cured, or relieved for months, it will be worth the trial. I have hesitated for nearly one year to speak, and yet I thought that suffering humanity ought to be helped.

Many of these letters have but one stamp, which would only pay the postage of a single letter, while it may take more, owing to the weight. I should have spoken about this, but it would look like speculating. This is the reason I have not published it before. Some of these letters are from preachers, or their families, of like precious faith. They must have it, even at my expense. I am not a doctor, and have not a license; therefore I cannot make a charge, if I wished to. What may be given as a present will be used in the cause of truth.

I cannot define the medicine so others can get it, but I will give general direction here, and send it with a sample dose for an adult, to those who wish it. It is to be taken before eating, for three mornings, and so on till nine doses are taken; then wait nine days, and if there are still symptoms, take it again as before. After these two courses, I think it may not be necessary to repeat again. The patient can better judge, and vary some in size of doses, according to age, and circumstances. Follow the Hygienic mode of living, as given by Bro. Himes in his Journal in the Crisis. PETER S. W. DEYO.

Strawberry Point, Ill.

REASON IN FOOD AND DRINK.

Mixed food is unwholesome if the different kinds disagree with each other. The cookbooks are only directions for poisoning people. The reason of mince pies being more hurtful than any other kind, is that the inside is composed of things that oppose each other. Cider, apples, sugar, and raisins, disagree with meat. Sugar disagrees with almost everything. Vinegar on baked beans disagree with each other. Tomatoes and vinegar agree, as do cucumbers and vinegar. The soft watery part in the middle of a cucumber is wholesome, the hard or outside part is what hurts people. Butter and flour mixed and baked together oppose each other.

The substantial and necessary articles of food are bread, potatoes, a little meat if desired, fish, eggs, beans, peas, turnips, beets, carrots, parsnips, cabbage, onions, squashes, etc. All of them agree with each other. Sour fruit is beneficial to those who like it, such as sour apples cooked, tomatoes, strawberries. . . . Fruit disagrees with the substantial articles and it makes a great difference which is eaten first. If fruit is eaten promiscuously with the meal or immediately after it, it makes a disturbance in the stomach and prevents a good digestion. If the fruit is eaten first, it is out of the way, interferes with nothing, and has no bad effect on the meal. Besides when eaten first, it sharpens the appetite. After a person has eaten to moderate satisfaction of plain substantial food, not a bit of anything else whatever should be taken. "Topping off" with other things is one of the greatest faults in eating. It is peculiarly an American vice. Accordingly, the food which is loved most, should be eaten first. If a person is so imprudent as to eat pies, sweet cake, pickles, or baked pudding, they ought to be the first things taken. Things that are unwholesome, do less harm when taken first, on an empty stomach. The same is true of honey and whatever else disagrees with particular persons. Sugar or any sweetened food, if eaten promiscuously with the meal, or immediately after it, is apt to cause a broiling and disturbance, with the sourness of the stomach. Eaten first, it is less hurtful.

Drink of any kind taken while eating, or immediately after the meal, prevents digestion. The liquid that is mixed with food in the stomach has to be carried off before digestion can begin. Drink taken immediately after eating mixes with the food. Thirst also disagrees with digestion, and whatever thirst there is should be quenched before beginning to eat. After the thirst is quenched, no more drink is needed, and if more is taken, it is only to "wash it down," which is a most hurtful practice. Drink taken before beginning to eat does not interfere or mix with the food, and does do harm. In about two hours after eating, a degree of thirst is commonly felt, from the stimulating effect of the food, and then drink can be safely taken. Salted food is unwholesome, because it creates a fever in the stomach and thirst which must be quenched with drink. Nobody can tell any good that is done by eating salt. Whatever does no good, does harm. Salt may be good at times as a medicine, but medicine makes well people sick. Undoubtedly animals would be better off without salt. . . .

The flesh of animals that are fatted by having as much as they will eat, is unwholesome food, because such animals are diseased. Pork is in a worse condition than any other meat, because hogs are commonly kept without exercise or sun, and with insufficient light and air. Adjoining the "back house" is a favorite place for the hog pen. Constant breathing the stench makes the pork unwholesome, and to a consistent person disgusting. If aged people are unhealthy, and would be bad food for cannibals, by the same reasoning the flesh of old animals is unfit to eat.

With health and rational habits of eating, there is no looseness of the bowels. With a good digestion, the juices of the food go into the blood and leave the evacuations solid. With a bad digestion, the juices go off by the bowels with looseness. Wind is entirely owing to bad digestion. In perfect health and rational eating, no person would have any wind. The first worms in a child are created without parentage by an overloaded stomach. Pin worms are started into existence by a continued use of sweet or unfermented cider. . . . Sweet cider produces piles, bloating and other serious complaints of the stomach and bowels. Cider that is prevented from working by the addition of spirit or anything else, should be avoided as poison. . . .

The wholesomest kind of water is rain water, because it is purified by sun, air, light and exercise in the clouds. Next is river and brook water. Well water is not so good, from being confined from sun, air, and light. The water of ponds and lakes is disordered from want of motion. Bad water is made good by boiling, and any water whatever is made better by it. Water needs to be cooked as well as food. Boiling throws out the gas and alters the nature of the water. If cold drink is needed, let it stand and cool. It is much more pleasant to the taste than that which is not boiled. The bad water in the low lands of the Southern States can be made good by boiling, although the inhabitants don't appear to know it. Bad water can be improved by shaking it violently, exposed to the air, or by raising it to a height and letting it fall. The best warm drink is a weak tea made of any pleasant and wholesome herb, for instance, sage, or even hot water alone with a little milk. With plenty of hot drink in hot weather, there is no danger of being "sun struck" or "melted." It is no trouble to live right after a person has found the way and got a little used to it. It is only pleasure in every respect.—Investigator.

HEALTHFULNESS OF WALKING.

A writer says: "I remember once being at William and Mary Howitt's, when some one proposed that we should make a little family visit to Epping Forest, distant some four or five miles. As we crossed the threshold of the door, I was expecting the next moment to help the two ladies making our party into the carriage; but I saw no carriage; and when I asked where was the carriage? I got for a reply, 'We are going on foot, of course.' And so we walked all the way there, and rambled all the day long over the beautiful forest, and at night walked back to 'The Elms.' I kept looking at the ladies while we were returning, expecting to see them faint away; and finally, I ventured very quietly to ask one of them, "Are you not very tired?' I got for a reply a merry ringing laugh and a 'To be sure not; I could walk half a dozen miles farther yet!' When I got home I was so fatigued as to be unable to stand without great pain and trouble, and was obliged to acknowledge that the English ladies were my superiors in physical powers of endurance. I saw at once the secret of their glorious health, their buoyancy, and flow of spirits. It was their habits of exercise out of doors."—Exchange.

INFLUENCE OF TEMPER ON HEALTH.

Excessive labor, exposure to wet and cold, deprivation of sufficient quantities of necessary and wholesome food, habitual bad lodging, sloth and intemperance, are all deadly enemies to human life; but they are none of them so bad as violent and ungoverned passions. Men and women have survived all these, and at last reached an extreme old age; but it may be safely doubted whether a single instance can be fonnd of a man of violent and irascible temper, habitually subject to storms of ungovernable passion, who has arrived at a very advanced period of life. It is, therefore, a matter of the highest importance to every one desirous to preserve "a sound mind in a sound body," so that the brittle vessel of life may glide down the stream of time smoothly and securely, instead of being continually tossed about amidst all the vicissitudes and trials of life, to maintain a quiet possession of his own spirit.—Hall's Journal of Health.

TO PRESERVE HEALTH.

Remember that medicine will never remedy bad habits; and it is utterly futile to think of living in gluttony, intemperance, and every excess, and keeping the body in health by medicines. Indulgence of the appetite, and indiscriminate dosing and drugging, have ruined the health and destroyed the lives of more persons than famine or pestilence. If you will take our advice, you will become regular in your habits, eat and drink only wholesome things, in moderate quantities; retire and rise with regularity; make a free use of water to purify and invigorate the skin, give full expansion to the lungs with pure fresh air; and when sick, an occurrence which will rarely happen, take counsel of the best physician, and follow nature.

ACTION.—Men who have half a dozen irons in the fire are not the ones to go crazy. It is the man of voluntary or compelled leisure who mopes, and pines, and thinks himself into the madhouse or the grave. Motion is all nature's law. Action is man's salvation physical and mental, and yet nine out of ten are wistfully looking forward to the coveted hour when they shall have leisure to do nothing or something only if they feel like it—the very siren that has lured to the death many a successful man.

A WORD FOR ACHING HEARTS.

Whence, child of hope, so many sighs,
Why dim thine eyes with weeping?
Why should the furrows up thy brow
With stealthy tread be creeping?

What though the clouds are dense above,
Have they no silver lining?
What though the night is dark around,
Will not the dawn be shining?

What though thy days are weary still,
Thy nights oppressed with sorrow?
Mind, sorrow lasteth but a night,
"Joy cometh with the morrow."

What though temptations fierce assail,
To weaken each endeavor?
Remember, neither height nor depth
From him thy love shall sever.

What though the nearest earthly friends
Forsaking, turn to wound thee?
Forget not, God is over all,
His loving arms surround thee.

What though the darkness of the grave
Should fill thy heart with quaking?
A rainbow brightens up its shades
To promise thy awaking.

Or, should the muttering thunders break
In tribulation o'er thee;
Christ through the tempest works the helm,
The port is just before thee.

Behold! the Son of man appears,
With angel crowds descending,
Rise, weary ones, to meet your Lord,
And share his rest unending.

THE SCARLET-COLORED BEAST.

In the Revelations 17: 3, we read as follows; "So he carried me away in the Spirit unto the wilderness; and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns." It is not my purpose to go into an investigation of all the points contained in the verse, but simply to ascertain what government is symbolized by the scarlet-colored beast, and when it is upon the stage of action. In doing so, and also in order to make the subject more easy to be understood, it will be necessary for me briefly to refer to some items mentioned in this chapter, concerning the woman seen sitting upon this beast.

The angel informs John in the first verse that he will show him "the judgment of the great whore." Let it be particularly noticed that the angel does not propose to show him the condition of this woman while she is in her prosperity, reigning over the kings of the earth, but, rather, her condition while she is receiving her judgments, until her final overthrow. Hence it would appear that the position this woman occupies, as seated upon the scarlet-colored beast, must be the one where her sorrows are coming upon her; and as she does not begin to receive her judgments, as indicated in the prophecy, until after the "1260 days" (years) of her supremacy have ended, it follows that the scarlet-colored beast, as connected with this woman, could not have come upon the stage of action untill after the ending of the above-mentioned period.

Again, we read that this woman, during some portion of her history, "sitteth upon many waters." The question will now arise, During what portion of her history was she sitting upon "many waters?" and I answer first, negatively, that it could not have been while she was sitting upon the scarlet-colored beast; for the one beast upon which she was sitting does not symbolize but one nation, while we are assured in the fifteenth verse that the many waters where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. Her position then as sitting upon "many waters" must have occupied that portion of her history while she was in her prosperity, committing fornication with the kings of the earth; and while, together with the seven heads of the leopard beast, of the thirteenth chapter, they had power over all "kindreds, and tongues, and nations."

This view will appear more plain, by referring to what is said concerning the type; for we all agree that the papal government, symbolized by this woman of the apocalypse, is the antitype, while ancient Babylon is the type. I will make but one quotation. Jer. 51: 13,—"O thou that dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasures, thine end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness." From this text I think it will appear plain, that ancient Babylon is spoken of as sitting upon many waters, while she was in all her glory, grandeur, and power, before she had lost her supremacy; so also I understand that the woman who symbolizes the ecclesiastical power of Rome, is recognized as sitting upon the "many waters" during the 1260 years of her supremacy, while she is connected with the seven heads, and committing fornication with the kings of the earth.

Hence it is evident, if the above view is correct, that the scarlet-colored beast could not have been upon the stage of action,—as represented in the prophecy with the woman seated upon him,—at any time during the 1260 years of papal supremacy; for the woman could not have been seated upon the governments recognized by the seven heads of the leopard beast, each, in succession; and also upon the government symbolized by the scarlet-colored beast, both at one and the same time.

Again, were it not for the unfolding of the mystery by the angel, we should be left in the dark, and could not tell what government is symbolized by the scarlet-colored beast; neither could we tell when it was to come upon the stage of action to accomplish its work. But as he has said, as recorded in the seventh verse, "I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her;" I will invite a careful investigation of what he has said concerning the beast.

But before proceeding with this part of my subject, I will call attention to one other point, namely, to what period of time in the history of the wilderness' state was John carried, in Spirit, when the vision or panoramic view, recorded in the seventeenth chapter, was caused to pass before him? In answer, I will refer the reader to the tenth verse, a portion of which reads as follows: "And there are seven kings; five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come." It is evident from this text, that the sixth of the seven governments symbolized by the seven heads is represented by the angel as being upon the stage of action at the period of time when this scenery is caused to pass before him; hence it will only be necessary to show when the government symbolized by the sixth head occupied its place upon the stage of action, in order that we may understand at what period of time in the wilderness John was carried, in Spirit, to witness the scenery brought to view in this chapter.

This nation or government I understand to have been the Spanish, which commenced to occupy the position symbolized by the sixth head under the reign of Charles the First, of a branch of the Hapsburg dynasty, who was elected emperor of the "Holy, Roman, German Empire," under the title of Charles V., in A. D. 1519, and continued to occupy that position for more than two centuries, until the male line of that dynasty became extinct. Hence I understand that John's stand-point in time, while he was in the wilderness, must have been in the sixteenth or seventeenth century, or during both.

Having now ascertained the revelator's stand-point, I will now proceed to an investigation of what the angel says to him concerning the beast which he saw. In the eighth verse, we read as follows: "The beast that thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition." In this text there are four distinct statements concerning the beast which John saw; three of which I shall endeavor to give a careful examination.

First, the beast which he saw "was," or, in other words, was upon the stage of action some time prior to the period of time occupied by the revelator when he was in the wilderness.

Second, "and is not;" in other words the beast is not upon the stage of action at the period of time occupied by John when he is in the wilderness. And

Third, "and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit," that is, he shall come again upon the stage of action some time in the future, beyond the period of time above mentioned.

In my investigation, I propose first to notice the second proposition.

Now in order to make my view as plain as I can, I shall ask and answer some questions during the investigation. First, what beast was it that John saw? Let the third verse answer: "And I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast." From this text we learn that it was the scarlet-colored beast which he saw; hence it must have been the "scarlet-colored beast" that "is not," or, in other words, is not upon the stage of action during, at least, that portion of the wilderness state occupied by John, when the scenery of the seventeenth chapter is caused to pass before him; which I have shown to have been in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. But some will say that inasmuch as the Revelator was carried away in Spirit into the wilderness, and that while there he saw this beast, it is evident that the scarlet-colored beast must have been upon the stage of action at that time. In answer, I will say that the Revelator also says he saw at the same time ten horns upon the beast; but the angel assures him that these "have received no kingdom as yet." Hence it is evident that although John saw the beast, and the ten horns, in vision, while he was in the Spirit, and while his stand-point was in the wilderness, yet the angel in showing him the mystery of them assures him that they were not then upon the stage of action.

Having now shown, as I think, that the form of government symbolized by the scarlet-colored beast could not have been upon the stage of action, during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries at least, I will now commence an investigation of the first proposition.

"The beast that thou sawest was."

It is evident from this text, that the government or form of government symbolized by the scarlet-colored beast made its first appearance upon the stage of action sometime prior to the period of time occupied by John in the wilderness; or, prior to the sixteenth or seventeenth centuries. Now I think it is reasonable to believe, that the first, as well as the last, appearance upon the stage of action, of the form of government symbolized by this beast, will be brought to view somewhere in this book; from the fact that the symbol is given, and also that its first and last appearance is mentioned in the explanation given by the angel. But unless the symbols given to represent its first and last appearance have the same descriptive mark, and also, unless the leading characteristics of the form of government, symbolized by them are the same, we might be at a loss to know what government is symbolized by its first appearance. Happily, however, it is all made plain. The terms which in our version of the Scriptures are rendered, "scarlet-colored beast," Prof. Murdock, in his translation of the Syriac, renders, "red beast," which terms I shall frequently prefer to use, as they will make my argument more readily understood.

I will now refer the reader to the twelfth chapter of Revelations, at the third verse: "And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon." In this text we find another beast brought to view, with the same descriptive mark as the one in the seventeenth chapter which we have under consideration, both of which are red beasts. Some, however, may object to the idea of calling the dragon a beast; but if we believe that the great red dragon symbolizes Imperial Pagan Rome, which was the fourth universal monarchy of earth, then we shall be warranted in calling the dragon a beast; for the prophet Daniel so called it. By reading the twelfth chapter we learn that the leading characteristics of the form of government symbolized by the great red dragon (during some portions of its history), were to persecute and destroy the woman who, I understand, symbolizes the professed church, both in its true and apostate condition. He also stood ready to destroy the man-child (Jesus) at his first advent into the world. So also we read concerning the red beast of the seventeenth chapter; that he, together with the ten horns "shall hate the woman (apostate chosen), and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." And also that they "shall make war with the Lamb" (Jesus), and his "chosen," when he shall come the second time.

And again, the Revelator when speaking of this same beast, which was to "ascend out of the bottomless pit," as found recorded in the eleventh chapter, says he shall make war against and "overcome" and "kill" the "two witnesses;" which I understand to symbolize the Bible, the Old and New Covenants or Testaments. And if the Bible was overthrown and slain, as a matter of course those who professed to believe in it would share its fate, unless they fled from the war against it. And we might prove that it was so, from the history of those times, had we space to quote from it.

Thus it will be seen that there is an exact resemblance in the appearance and characteristics of the red dragon of the twelfth chapter, and the red beast of the seventeenth chapter, showing, to my mind, that the Infidel or pagan form of government, symbolized by the red dragon, must have been that referred to under the symbol of the red beast, of the seventeenth chapter, during its first appearance upon the stage of action.

Again, I understand that the great red dragon of the twelfth of Revelation symbolizes the same government as the fourth beast of the prophecy of Daniel; and we read concerning this fourth beast, that it is to be upon the stage of action, in some condition, when the burning day shall come; for he is to be "given to the burning flame." If then the two beasts, (the red dragon, and the fourth beast of Daniel) symbolize the same government, then we shall also find the great red dragon, in some condition, upon the stage of action when the burning day shall come. For proof of this, we will refer to the sixteenth of Revelation, where we learn that one of the unclean spirits proceeded out from the mouth of the dragon, which spirits are to gather the nations to battle just prior to the coming of our Savior and the burning day; showing conclusively, that the form of government, symbolized by the red dragon is to exist in some condition for a short time, at least, prior to the coming of the great day of God.

But we learn from another Scripture (Revelation 13: 2), that when the leopard beast assumes its place upon the stage of action, "the dragon gave him his (own) power, and his seat, and great authority." And again, at the seventh and eighth verses, we read, "And power was given him (Papal Rome) over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him (Papal Rome), whose names are not written in the book of life." From these texts of Scripture, it is evident that when the Papal beast takes its place, the form of government symbolized by the great red dragon, became extinct, or ceased to act; for as we have seen, all nations were brought in subjection to the Papal beast, and all that dwelt upon the earth were compelled to worship him.

Therefore, I think it may be said of the form of government symbolized by the red dragon or red beast, as of no other, that it was upon the stage of action at two separate and distinct periods of time. First, prior to the time when Papal Rome had gained universal sway; and, second, after the overthrow of the papal supremacy. Hence the angel informed John while he had his stand-point (as I have shown) at a period of time during the papal supremacy or wilderness state, as follows: "The beast that thou sawest (the red beast) was (in the past), and is not (at the present), and shall (in the future) ascend out of the bottomless pit."

Again, we read in the twelfth chapter, at the fifteenth verse, that "the serpent (red dragon) cast out of his mouth waters (Murdock's Trans.) as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood." Now as the term "waters," when used as a symbol, means "peoples, and multitudes, and nations and tongues," I think it is evident that the "waters" in the above text have reference to those pagan nations that poured into and had their existence upon the Roman territory at and after the overthrow of the Imperial government of Rome; and who, when practicable, were ever at war with the woman (the church), until they were finally conquered by the Franks, under the reign of the Carlovingian dynasty, and brought into submission ("swallowed up") to Papal Rome. Therefore, I understand that these nations are spoken of in the prophecy as a part of pagan Rome, especially, inasmuch as they are represented as proceeding out from the mouth of the dragon, and had also the same principles of government; that is, pagan, or infidel. Hence the form of government symbolized by the red dragon, or red beast, cannot be said to have been "swallowed up," or become extinct, until all these nations were brought into complete subjection to Papal Rome.

The question will now arise, when was their complete subjugation accomplished? Universal history testifies that the last of these pagan nations was compelled by the strong arm of Charlemagne, to submit to the Catholic faith, in A. D. 803–4. The historian says: "The declared object of his (Charlemagne's) invasions, according to his biographer, was the extinction of heathenism, subjugation to the christian faith, or extermination. Baptism was the sign of subjugation and fealty." (Milman's Latin Christianity. Vol. 2, p. 472.) Again, wherever Charlemagne led his legions, he baptized the vanquished; and the conquered tribes and nations called themselves christians." (Abbot's History of the French Revolution, p. 21.)

Finally, the Saxons, the last of those pagan nations, were brought into subjection, and compelled to adopt the Catholic faith, by the victorious arms of Charlemagne, in A. D. 803–4. See History of France by A. B. Edwards. Also Kohlrausch's History of Germany.

I have now, as I think, given some evidence to show that the form of government symbolized by the "red beast" of the seventeenth chapter during its first existence upon the stage of action, was Infidel or Pagan Rome, including all those pagan tribes who had their existence upon the Roman territory, prior to the time of complete papal dominion; and also that the pagan government was completely subjugated or "swallowed up" by the papal government, as early as A. D. 804. Hence it will appear plain, if the view I have presented is correct, that the form of government symbolized by the scarlet-colored or red beast could not have been in existence during the remainder of the wilderness state, for the angel assures the Revelator, when his stand-point in time was somewhere in the sixteenth or seventeenth century, (as I have shown), that it "is not," or, it had not at that time resumed its place upon the stage of action.

THE DAYS OF THE SON OF MAN.

"The kingdom of God" (Luke 17: 20), "the days of the Son of man" (17: 22), "the Son of man in his day" (17: 24) "his times," (1 Tim. 6: 15), "his appearing and his kingdom," (1 Tim. 4: 1), "shall appear the second time" (Feb. 9: 28), "the last time" (1 Peter 1: 5), "the day of the Lord" (1 Thess. 5: 3 and 2 Peter 3: 10), "the day of God" (3: 12), "the dispensation of the fullness of times" (Eph. 1: 10), "appointed a day in the which he will judge the world" (Acts 17: 31). "Ye shall not see me, until the time come when ye shall say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Luke 13: 35), "the times of the restitution of all things" (Acts 3: 21), "everlasting kingdom of our Lord" (2 Peter 1: 11), and "thy kingdom come" of our Lord's prayer, all refer, I apprehend, to one and the same epoch only, with reference to the events transpiring therein it is relatively like one of our days. Some things are done at its beginning, then others succeed in their regular order. Save, perhaps, this difference, that instead of measuring time by hours as now, it may be measured by events.

But it is urged by those claiming to be "teachers" among Protestants and Catholics that "the kingdom of God" was "set up" by the gift of the Spirit on the "day of Pentecost," and that the church of Christ on earth constitutes that kingdom, by Christ ruling in the hearts of believers through the Spirit. Now if this be true, it should be known and seen of all men, that they might not be deceived by heresies, schisms and false-teachers blindly leading the blind, and if it be untrue then it should also be known, that those who have been deceived by these "piled up" teachers, "speaking lies in hypocrisy" may be undeceived and found clothed in their "right mind" by a knowledge of the truth.

When Christ had done talking to the Pharisees, who had asked him when the kingdom of God should come, he turned from those children of iniquity to his disciples, and said unto them (Luke 17: 22), "The days will come, when YE shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and YE SHALL NOT SEE IT." "For as the lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven, So shall also the Son of man be in his day." Who is ever deceived or mistaken concerning the bright, vivid, sudden, forked lightning's flash, as for a moment it lights up the dark and angry vault of heaven, overspread with rolling, surging, tempest-tossed thunder clouds, "black as Erebus and dark as Hades," like the thick canopy of night spread over us? And are we to be told after reading of the "down-treading of the children of the free woman" for eighteen centuries, and have witnessed the "groanings of earth," the carnage and slaughter, the tears and sufferings, the despotisms and oppressions," the "wrongs and outrages with which earth is filled," the "carnival of death" that fills our own land with lamentation and weeping, with curses and blasphemies against God and his Christ,—I say, are we to be told that THIS has been so many hundred years of "the kingdom of God" wherein his "will is done upon the earth as it is now done in heaven"? Do teachers of heavenly and divine truths expect to impose such a "pandemonium on earth" upon lovers of truth, [illegible] and righteousness, and seekers after holiness who love the "glorious appearing of the great God and Savior Jesus Christ, and his peaceable kingdom, and the days of the Son of man, in which "the righteous flourish and abundance of grace fill the earth so long as the sun and moon endure," with any hope or expectation of success? If so, may the good Lord deliver us, and may they be confounded and most thoroughly disappointed, is my most devout supplication. (Paul, I think, would have said, imprecation, "anathema maranatha," accursed at the Lord's coming, 1 Cor. 15: 22.)

Christ himself positively affirmed that before the kingdom of God, comprehending "one of the days of the Son of man," should come, himself must suffer many things and be rejected of that race of men, the Jews, and they, the disciples, should not see one of his days when persecutions against his church arose, and they should anxiously long to behold "one of his days."

Now look at it, the disciples were themselves baptized with the Holy Spirit, as none are at this day; preached the kingdom of God from Pentecost until they were killed for their witnessing in its favor. Some of them coming down over thirty years this side of the destruction of Jerusalem, making over half a century that some of them were absolutely living in the days of the Son of man—if it be true that the kingdom was set up at Pentecost—and yet Christ told them they should not see one of his days when they should desire to.

Again, he is still rejected of that race of men, and the church are still "filling up the measure of his sufferings that were left behind;" the Gentiles are still "treading down the holy city," and their times are not yet ended; and until they are, the "times of the Messiah" cannot begin, and the Jews are not yet crying, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord!" and we in the kingdom! What infatuation! G. W. STETSON.

For the World's Crisis.

THE SEVENTH DAY SABBATH—THE LAW.

THE OLD "DEAD" SCHOOLMASTER"! THE LIVING JESUS.

NUMBER THREE.

THE LORD JESUS CHRIST FULFILLED THE LAW.

Strictly speaking, we should say that the Lord Jesus has "fulfilled," or will "fulfill" the Old Testament law; rather than to say he abrogated it. We will first notice the passage found in Matt. 5: 17, 18:—

"Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled."

Let us take particular notice of our Saviour's language in this passage:—"I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. If, then, he fulfills any portion of the law, of course he does not destroy it. He says in Luke:—"The law and the prophets were until John," etc.; and then adds:—"It is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail." Now he does not mean that he will not fulfill any of the law or the prophets "till heaven and earth pass"; and thus "all be fulfilled" at one time, after the heavens and earth have passed away, for he says, "I AM come to fulfill." Hence, whatever he fulfilled of the law and the prophets, he did "not destroy"; neither did it "fail." And if he fulfilled a part at his first advent, and then completes the fulfillment at his second advent, none of it fails, and none of it is destroyed. Now to the word, and to the testimony.

WHAT DID THE LORD JESUS FULFILL AT HIS FIRST ADVENT?

Why, says one, he fulfilled all the ceremonial law of Moses. Not so fast—hold a moment. Was the "Passover" fulfilled at the first advent? Certainly it was, says the objector. Certainly it was not, says the Scriptures; for we read:—

"And when the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him. And he said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer: For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be FULFILLED in the kingdom of God."—Luke 22: 14–16.

Thus we see that Christ did not fulfill the "passover," but it is to "be fulfilled in the kingdom of God"—at "the marriage supper of the Lamb," (Rev. 19: 9,) when, as Christ says,—"Ye may eat and drink at my table in MY KINGDOM." (Luke 22: 30.) Glory to God and the Lamb. Amen.

STRIKING POINTS OF ANALOGY BETWEEN THE PASSOVER AND THE SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH.

The following are some of the points which impress the mind of the close observer:—1. Both had their origin in the Old Testament times. The Passover: "And this day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the Lord throughout your generations: ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance forever. Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses; for whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel. And in the first day there shall be an holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be an holy convocation to you; no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you. And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; for in this self-same day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt: therefore shall ye observe this day in your generations forever."—Ex. 12: 14–17. The Sabbath: "Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbath ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you, throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you: every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people. Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the Sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord. Whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed."

From these portions of Scripture we learn that, 2. Both were "holy" institutions. 3. Both forbid all manner of "work." 4. Both were for a "memorial" or "sign." 5. Both were to be observed by a particular class of people—"the children of Israel." 6. Both were limited, not only to a particular class of persons; but also, as in respect to the time for their observance "throughout your generations," or "forever." 7. In both cases, the penalty for a violation was—"that soul shall be cut off from Israel"—or "he shall surely be put to death." We also learn from the New Testament Scriptures that, 8. Both were to cease in their observance, after the crucifixion and resurrection of Christ, throughout the gospel dispensation. (Luke 22: 16; Heb. 4: 8.) 9. Both had a substitute appointed, viz.: "the passover"—"THE LORD'S SUPPER" (1 Cor. 11: 20) and "the Sabbath"—"THE LORD'S DAY." (Rev. 1: 10.) And 10. Both were to have their complete fulfillment in "the kingdom of God," or in "the new earth." Luke 22: 16, 30; Rev. 19: 9; Heb. 4: 6–11; Rev. 20: 4, 6.

"THE LORDS' DAY," THE TRUE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

About sixty-two years after the resurrection of Christ—or after the christian Sabbath began—the "beloved" John, who was our "brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ," while he "was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ," said,—"I was in the spirit on THE LORD'S DAY," etc. Here shines the clear blazing light of the christian Sabbath, according to the gospel of notwithstanding so many are trying, with a "veil upon their hearts," to throw a dark cloud over the whole thing, by saying, that the "Lord's day" here spoken of "is the Sabbath of the fourth commandment," as found in Ex. 20: 8–11. But how many, through ignorance, "pervert the gospel of Christ."

The word here rendered "Lord's," is in the Greek kuriokos, and it is found elsewhere in the New Testament but once; and this is in 1 Cor. 11: 20, where it refers to the "Lord's (kuriokos) Supper." The question now arises, Whose "supper" is here referred to? Is it the Lord JEHOVAH'S supper? or is it the Lord JESUS CHRIST'S supper? All must confess that it is the Lord Jesus Christ's supper. Then is the "LORD'S (kuriokos) DAY," Rev. 1: 10, the Lord JESUS CHRIST'S day. Thus we have the plain word of God to establish this long disputed truth. Praise God. Amen. Here, then, we have the proof that "the passover" had, as its substitute, the "Lord's (kuriokos) supper"; and as a substitute for "the Sabbath," the Lord's (kuriokos) day," as I have above stated: the passover to have its complete fulfillment in "the kingdom of God"; (Luke 22: 16), and just so of the Sabbath. (Heb. 4: 3; Rev. 20: 4.)

If, then, as the apostle says, "Christ is the end of the law"; and he having fulfilled a great part already, and the last to "be fulfilled in the kingdom of God"; we see that the "law" is not all fulfilled at one time; and that not until the heavens and the earth pass away! and hence, some fail entirely in the use they make of Matt. 5: 17–19, in support of the perpetuity of the Sabbath. And to those who apply the 19th verse to such as observe the "first day of the week" for the Sabbath, I would say, take heed and beware, or you, yourselves, may "be called the least in the kingdom of heaven."

What "commandments" are "these" which the Savior speaks of in the 19th verse? Surely they must be "these" which he is presenting to his hearers in this discourse. And are they the commandments "of old time"? or are they the "commandments" of which he himself is the Author? The following, from this same discourse of our Savior, will prove whether "these least commandments" are those of which the disciples had "heard that it was said by them of OLD TIME";—or by the old dead "schoolmaster";—or whether they were "these" commandments put forth by the LIVING JESUS, in this emphatic language:—"BUT I SAY UNTO YOU," etc. Jesus speaks from "a mountain"—hear him:—

"Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery: But I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement: But I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery. Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths: But I say unto you, swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne: nor by the earth; for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communication be yea, yea; nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil. Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: but I say unto you, that ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away. Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so? Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matt. 5: 27–48.

NEW CODE OF LAWS,

praise God, worth having—superior to those of the old dead "schoolmaster"! This also puts to silence all cavil about the "ten commandments," or the decalogue, being superceded by the commandments or laws of Christ: for in this case there are at least two of the commandments of the decalogue especially referred to, viz.: the sixth and seventh—"Thou shalt not kill," and "Thou shalt not commit adultery."

If any one is disposed to think that the Lord Jesus Christ's laws, as found in the New Testament, are more lenient than those of the Old, let them take for an example what is said in the above quotation, and especially what is said in regard to the sin of "adultery"; and they will find that for the LORD Jesus Christ makes a man guilty of "adultery" who shall even look on a woman "to lust after her." But says the caviler, Christ let the woman go, who was taken in the very act of adultery, without condemning her. Without condemning her for what? I ask. He did not, to be sure, condemn her to "be stoned," as "Moses in the law commanded," for the sake of gratifying the woman's "accusers—these old "hypocrites"—who themselves were guilty of the double crime of, first, complicity with the woman; and second, of "tempting" Christ, that "they might accuse him"! but he did condemn the woman as a sinner! and said, "Go and SIN NO MORE"!

DID THE LORD JESUS KEEP THE SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH?

He evidently did, as he was "made under the law" (Gal. 4: 4), and was "circumcised"; he no doubt observed the Sabbath, as it ought to be observed at that time; although his manner of keeping it, however, was such that the old Pharisees accused him of breaking it, because he did not observe their traditions which they had connected with the observance of that day.

There is no doubt but what the women mentioned in Luke 23: 55, after they had "prepared spices and ointments" for the body of Jesus, returned and "rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment"; yea, the "fourth commandment." Good, says the Sabbatarian. And I too say, Good; because I have no doubt but what it is true. But when this matter shall be critically examined, I think all candid minds will acknowledge that this was as I believe the following facts will abundantly prove. The original Greek words for Sabbath, as found in the New Testament, in their singular and plural form, are Sabbaton, and Sabbata. The number of times these words occur in the N. T. is sixty-eight. They are found in different books, as follows: in Matt., eleven times; in Mark, twelve times; in Luke, twenty times; in John, thirteen times; in Acts, ten times; in 1 Cor., once; and in Col., once. These words are transposed (not translated) into our English version, in all, fifty-nine times; and thus called Sabbath, or Sabbath days, etc. But for some cause unknown to me, the translators saw fit to render the word Sabbaton, by the word "week," in nine cases out of the whole number sixty-eight! and these nine cases are found in the following places: in Matt. 28: 1; Mark 16: 2, 9; Luke 18: 12; 24: 1; John 20: 1, 19; Acts 20: 7; 1 Cor. 16: 2. In Matthew it reads,—"In the end of the Sabbath (Sabbaton), as it began to dawn toward the first (day, is a word supplied by the translators) of the week (Sabbaton), came Mary," etc. In Mark: "And very early in the morning, the first of the week (Sabbaton), they came," etc. "Now when Jesus was risen early the first of the week (Sabbaton), he appeared," etc. In Luke: "I fast twice in the week (Sabbaton), I give tithes," etc. "Now upon the first of the week (Sabbaton), very early in the morning," etc. In John: "The first of the week (Sabbaton), cometh Mary Magdalene early," etc. "Then the same day, at evening, being the first of the week (Sabbaton), when the doors were shut," etc. In Acts: "And upon the first of the week (Sabbaton), when the disciples came together to break bread," etc. In 1 Cor.: "Upon the first of the week (Sabbaton) let every one of you lay by him in store," etc.

Now let us turn back to Matt. 28: 1, and see if we can ascertain the true import of this word "week," as it has been thus found in the cases above referred to. It appears that the word Sabbaton, as found in this verse, occurs twice, and in both instances it is in the plural form; and this being the case, the true rendering of the passage requires us to read it, in substance, like this:—At the end of Sabbaths, in the beginning of the first of Sabbaths, etc. Or as Mark has it:—And very early in the first of Sabbaths, (lit. of one of Sabbaths), etc. But Luke and John appear to have it still stronger:—And in the first of the Sabbaths, etc; the definite article the being placed before the name Sabbaton. Now it is evident that if the translators had just transposed the word Sabbaton, in these nine cases just examined, as they did in the other fifty-nine instances already above referred to, then we should have had clear, blazing light shining on this glorious subject; and we should see that, at the END of the seventh-day Sabbaths—(or at the end of the Lord JEHOVAH'S Sabbaths—which he gave to the "children of Israel," to be a "sign" unto them "throughout their generations") THERE would be the BEGINNING of the LORD JESUS CHRIST'S SABBATHS. Or, in other words, where one series of Sabbaths ended, there another series of Sabbaths began. And this change of Sabbaths was marked by the most important events that ever transpired in the history of man. "The veil of the temple was rent in twain"—"the middle wall of partition" between Jews and Gentiles was "broken down," and thus they were "made both one." "Our Savior Jesus Christ" had "abolished death," and had brought LIFE and IMMORTALITY to light through the gospel"—the saints were begotten again unto a lively hope by the RESURRECTION OF JESUS CHRIST FROM THE DEAD"—the LIVING JESUS was VICTOR over "DEATH" and the "GRAVE"—old things had passed away, BEHOLD, ALL THINGS HAD BECOME NEW."

On confirmation of this truth, that the seventh-day Sabbath was to cease at the resurrection of our Lord from the dead, is the fact, that out of the whole number of times the Sabbath is mentioned in the New Testament, it is never spoken of by either Christ or any of the apostles as a precept, or command; but it is only spoken of as an historical fact. And it is thus worthy of special attention that, whenever the seventh-day Sabbath is mentioned in the New Testament, it is always to be found in the five historical books; and never ONCE found in the epistles of any of the apostles. And hence, as I have before stated, so I again repeat, that in no instance is the Sabbath spoken of by either Christ or his apostles as a command or precept. I know that our Savior said that he was "Lord of the Sabbath day"; and this shows that he had the power to change it whenever he pleased. It is true, that in the Acts of the apostles we find mention made of the apostle Paul speaking to the Jews in their synagogues on the Sabbath; but never do we find any of the other apostles holding meetings on the seventh-day Sabbath. And there is but one single instance where we have an account of any of the apostles holding a meeting on that day, which appears to have been for a season of mutual worship among themselves; and that is the one mentioned in Acts 16: 13, where it is said:—"And on the Sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither."

The passage in 17th chapter of Acts 2d verse, where it is said: "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures"; only shows that Paul was in Thessalonia, in a Jewish "synagogue," and his "manner was," when he could get an opportunity, he would "reason with them out of the Scriptures; opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead"; and although they were ever so much offended with him, he would "preach unto" them "that this Jesus" "is Christ." And the apostle's "manner," in thus going into Jewish synagogues on the Sabbath, was very much like my "manner," when I believed in the seventh-day Sabbath; for I attended a great many more meetings on the "first day of the week" than on any other, for the very good reason, that it was much easier to get the people out to meeting on this day than on the day that I then believed was the Sabbath. In Acts 18: 4, it is said: "And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks." Where was Paul at this time? At "Corinth." Who was he with? He was with a "Jew named Aquila," and "his wife Priscilla." "And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them and wrought: (for by their occupation they were tent makers.) And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks. And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ. And when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, he shook his raiment, and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles."—Acts 18: 1–6.

The apostle did not find this very pleasant "seventh-day" worship, did he? These were not his brethren that Paul was with on this occasion, were they? "And when they opposed themselves, and BLASPHEMED," Paul left them, saying,—"From HENCEFORTH I will go to the GENTILES." Do we have any account that the apostle after this had any more meetings on the seventh-day Sabbath? Never! This was the last. But we do find him holding meetings with his brethren after this; but their meetings for worship were on the "first day of the week," (Sabbaton.) Acts. 20: 7.

P. S. When I sent my second No., I was in hopes I could close my argument on this subject with this No.; but I am unable to do it without making my article too lengthy for one paper. Hope the readers of the Crisis will have patience with me, and I will close with my next. T. M. P.

For the World's Crisis.

COULD N'T FIND IT.

BRO. GRANT:—Dear Sir, accept my thanks for the package of tracts you sent me. I have been from home some, talking to the people, and circulating the tracts; and have met with strong opposition. Some ministers have taken up the Bible in my presence to show that the soul is to be re-united to the body at the resurrection; but, as might be expected, they could not find the place,—thus showing the wonderful amount of ignorance, even among ministers, respecting what is written in the Scriptures. They believe it, or think they believe, because "it is in the Bible"; but, when they look for the place, they cannot find it. Yet, still, they believe it, as firmly as if it were in the Bible. I remain yours in truth and love, WM. BOTHWELL.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, March 8, 1864.

DISCUSSION.

We have arranged to hold a discussion at Lyceum Hall, Lynn, Mass., with Eld. Moses Hull, of Battle Creek, Mich., commencing Tuesday evening, March 22nd, to continue four evenings.

QUESTION. "Has man in his nature an immortal principle, which, after the death of the body, is capable of returning and communicating with the inhabitants of earth?"

Aff.—Moses Hull. Neg.—Miles Grant.

Eld. Hull has been known for some years as a leading man among the Seventh-day Adventists. Within a few months he has joined the Spiritualists, and is being made quite prominent among them. He has been lecturing on Spiritualism, in Boston, for some weeks. We shall expect an interesting discussion.

THE TRACT FUND.

We are rejoiced to see the tract fund becoming an object of interest among our readers. This is a very favorable symptom of good. In this simple way a great work may be accomplished, and no one be burdened; indeed we shall all feel the better for what we do for the benefit of our fellow men. Let the refreshing streams come in from all directions, as when the Jews gave money to rebuild the temple. Give us the means to scatter tracts like autumn leaves. The people are greedy after them. We have never seen them more anxious to read than now. They are sighing for something not found in popular churches. Shall they have the light? We think we hear a tremendous response, "YES, if it is in our power to help send it." Let the quarters and dollars come in an overwhelming shower. Let us "sow beside all waters." Our work will soon be done. Shall it be "well done?" We have reason to thank the Lord that the way is open for us to use our spare money where it can hardly help accomplishing much good. Come, sit down this evening and write us a note and send the offering,—"Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver."

PITTSFIELD. N. H.

Our late meetings in Pittsfield were very interesting. That church is doing well. There are a goodly number of real living christians, who are known and read of all men. The community appear to be as much interested in the great truths of the Bible as at any time in the past, and apparently more so. The people are astonished at "the signs of the times." Many are convicted that we have the truth, but the fear of reproach keeps them in bondage, and is depriving them of a blessed hope, and great peace.

Some of our meetings were seasons of deep heart-searching, and produced some very noble confessions of faults, accompanied with a determined purpose, in the Lord, to live better than ever. They act like those who have counted the cost, and are willing to pay the price.

We had pleasant interviews with Bro. C. S. Emerson, S. S. Mooney, and Bro. Glidden, who preach the word.

On Lord's day, Feb. 28th, it was estimated that the Town Hall was crowded with some six hundred attentive listeners. The people looked thoughtful and solemn. In the evening we had a pleasant communion season. Three requested prayers. We trust the work is onward in that place. Many are fearful that the Lord is coming, who do not feel ready to meet him. The fear of man keepeth them from acting. In the midst of all the strong evidence showing that the coming of Jesus is near, there are many professed watchmen in our land, who are crying "peace and safety,"—"good time coming,"—"do not be worried about those who are preaching the end of the world," etc. If it were not so, we should not know we were "in the last days," because this is to be one of the signs, when we are near the end.

THE WAR.

The Union army has met with some reverses lately in Florida, while there seems to be an advance in the neighborhood of Richmond. On the whole, we see no "silver lining" yet to the cloud that hangs over our nation. Our progress is only in the downward road to destruction.

The Boston Journal of March 1st, remarks: "It must be admitted that the opening of the spring campaign—if it can be regarded as having opened—is not quite so favorable as had been anticipated, although it presents nothing to dampen our hopes of the future. The reverse in Florida is not only to be deeply regretted for the losses involved, but it is mortifying from the apparent fact that we have still officers in responsible commands who appear to have learned nothing from all their experience in the war."

THE RISING STORM IN EUROPE.

Observing men are now quite well satisfied that a general war is about to open in Europe. They see but little hope of peace. All their efforts to control the war elements are about to result in a hopeless failure. They might as well attempt to stay the hurricane by a legislative enactment. The time appears to have arrived for the "winds" to "blow."

This is the time for christians to lift up their heads, for their redemption is at hand. They are occupying a sublime position in this world's history. Praise the Lord for the "blessed hope" that is like an anchor to secure us in the coming storm.

"Here it is believed and hoped that the Danes, like the Poles, will continue the war in the hope that ultimately they may receive help. By continuing the war Prussia may claim an annexation of the Duchies as a compensation, and then France, claiming such an act as a violation of the treaty of London, may hold up the torn pieces of that treaty as an argument why she too ought to have a compensation for this aggrandizement of Germany on the North, and then will commence the march of the French army to the Rhine."

It is certain that, if the Danes decide to continue the war for the recovery of Schleswig, as they say they do, and if they continue it especially with any degree of success, the war in the spring will become general from one end of Europe to the other."

SPIRITUALIST NATIONAL CONVENTION.

At the late convention of Spiritualists in Boston, it was resolved to hold a "National Convention" during the coming summer, at some central point in the West. A committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements. They are talking of great events to be accomplished through the agency of spirits and their mediums. We think the time is at hand for strange developments. Let us beware of the snare of the devil, and all his "seducing spirits." Now is the time to keep near the Lord, if we would be safe from the wiles of the adversary.

Every one, who wishes to meet the Son of man at his coming, should beware of the principles taught by the spirits who claim to be the spirits of our deceased friends. All who make such claims may be reckoned as deceiving and lying spirits. They tell the truth at times, to gain the confidence of those they would deceive, as do other liars; but they are not to be trusted for one moment. They are very active at the present time, and as confident of success as they are active. Christian, gird on your armor. Do not sleep now, lest you be caught in Satan's snare.

"RELIGION OF THE DAY."

The following description of the religion of the day is from Bonar. We think the representation is not overdrawn, but short of the sad reality. He says:—

"The religion of the day is an easy-minded religion; a religion without conflict and wrestling, without self-denial and sacrifice; a religion which knows nothing of the pangs of the new birth as its commencement, and nothing of the desperate struggle with the Devil, day by day, making us long for resurrection-deliverance, for the binding of the Adversary, and for the Lord's arrival. It is a second-rate religion,—a religion in which there is no largeness, no grandeur, no potency, no noble-mindedness, no elevation, no self-devotedness, no all-constraining love. It is a hollow religion, with a fair exterior, but an aching heart,—a heart unsatisfied, a soul not at rest, a conscience not at peace with God; a religion marked, it may be, by activity and excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness of a wound hidden and unhealed within, and hence unable to animate to lofty doings, or supply the strength needed for such doings. It is a feeble religion, lacking the sinews and bones of hardier times,—very different from the indomitable, much-enduring, storm-braving religion, not merely of apostolic days, but even of the Reformation. It is an uncertain religion; that is to say, it is not rooted in certainty; it is not the outflowing of a soul assured of pardon, and rejoicing in the filial relationship between itself and God. Hence, there is no liberty of service, for the question of personal acceptance is still an unsettled thing; there is a working for pardon, but not from pardon. Hence all is bondage, heaviness, irksomeness. There is a speaking for God, but it is with a faltering tongue; there is a laboring for God, but it is with fettered hands; there is a moving in the way of his commandments, but it is with a heavy drag upon our limbs. Hence the inefficient, uninfluential character of our religion. It does not tell on others; for it has not yet fully told upon ourselves. It falls short of its mark, for the arm that drew the bow was paralyzed."

The foregoing corresponds with Paul's description of "the last days." Let each reader ask himself, am I helping on this lamentable state of things?

NEW TRACT.—"Our Country; what is to become of it?" To be had of W. Z. Harbert, Philadelphia. Price, per copy, 5 cts.; per dozen 50 cts.; per hundred, $3.00. This is a good tract for the times.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS IN FEBRUARY.

The prospect of 4,000 new subscribers in 1864 is brightening. Brethren are taking hold of the work in earnest. Never with more energy than now. January brought in 270 names, which was more than any previous month, and February a larger number still—360. Seven-ninths of these, or 280, were obtained by the efforts of friends whose names appear below. 630 in two months. This is certainly a very large and encouraging increase, and gives promise of what, with the help of the Lord, we may expect in the remainder of the year.

"How many more, in each of the ten months to come, will it need to make up the 4,000?" Only 337.

"But we obtained more than that, last month." Yes—360.

"Well, we can do that again, if we try, and overrun the 4,000."

You can; and more, if you WILL. You can, at least, do this—let no month to come fall short of the month past. Keep it up! It is the Lord's work. More volunteers are called for. Won't YOU enlist, and do what you can to push it along. Can't you get a subscriber to-day? TRY! Get another to-morrow. Another next week, and so on. Send on the money, and call for your premium. No time to lose. Time is short. Be up and doing. W. H. H.

"As God hath prospered him."—1 Cor. 16: 2.

Such is the gospel rule of giving for all religious purposes. Who lives up to it? Do you? "Weighed in the balances and found wanting," will be the final verdict on one half the professors of christianity. Perhaps you don't understand this rule. Let me explain it. You are worth $500: you give $10 each year to the cause of your divine Master. Very well. Now suppose you in the same year are so prospered of God that you come to be worth $1000. Your substance is now doubled: the rule demands that you double your gift. Hence if you take heed to the inspired apostle you will give $20 instead of $10. And your gifts to the cause of God will increase in the same ratio as your worth increases. Suppose you are worth 50,000, and you give $1000 per annum. Then if you come to be worth $100,000, your gifts to God should be $2000. Else how will your benevolence keep pace with your accumulating wealth?

Again: your income or earnings this year amount to $400. You give of it $20. Next year you earn $800. Then you should give of the same $40,—all things being equal. Now you are enlightened, so figure up your worth, christian brother, and go by the Scripture rule.

Perhaps you will ask, "Thou that preachest a man should give, dost thou give? Answer. Ten years ago I established a rule of systematic benevolence. I said I would give all the way from $2 to $6 each month for religious and charitable purposes. I have done so according to my ability and prosperity. In the year 1863, my donations of this kind amounted to about one ninth of all my income. And I call myself a poor man. These facts you would never have known were it not for setting you an example. Hence I come with an unblushing cheek and an unfaltering voice and ask you, poor christian, well-to-do christian, rich christian, Have you heard the voice from heaven which demands that you "GIVE" "as God hath PROSPERED you? And hearing, will you dare to DISOBEY? D. T. T.

P. S.—Here they come. Five new ones helping me beg for the best cause under the sun. Well done, brethren T., M., B., C., and W. Stand aside, you stingy christian (?), or you'll get buried under a shower of two-thousand quarters.

From Bro. D. D. Chaffee.

BRO. GRANT:—When I first saw Bro. D. T. Taylor's tract assessment on the readers of the Crisis, I said to myself, I will send one dollar, which is twenty-five cents each for my household; but deferring a little, I began to think of my business prospects, which are not as good this season as usual for want of sledding to get in timber, and thought I might need the dollar for other purposes. But I am reminded by the milking principle in his last article, how well it has worked in times past,—one instance in particular.

After hearing a sermon once, I said it was worth a dollar to me, and at once paid it, besides fifty cents for my ride to meeting, and on my way home I picked up a turtle which I sold for just enough to pay the whole. And now I am reminded that not a dollar has come into my purse since I have deferred paying my tract assessment, but rather it has been drying up. So here goes the dollar. Come, brother and sister, file in, file into the tract column. Your Bro, D. D. CHAFFEE.

South Wilbraham, Mass.

P. S.—My wife adds thirty cents.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

BRO. GRANT:—You may put my name among the list for the Tract Fund, counting me among the two thousand of the poorest christians who read the Crisis, for I feel none need be so poor but that they can pay twenty-five cents; and so I will pay fifty, half for me, and the other half for some one that loves tea and money better than they do tracts. For my part I have lived ten years without drinking one cup of tea to my knowledge, and seldom drink any thing but water. It was a great sacrifice, and I thank God I was enabled to make it for his glory, and said I would drink no more till the Lord come; and when I see so much as has been written in the Crisis on tobacco and tea, I wonder there can be one left that will use it. I never saw the moment that I was sorry, and could I sacrifice it for others I would gladly do it; but I feel others can if they will. And now let us all send in our mite and heed what Bro. Taylor says in the Crisis of Feb. 9th.

Roxbury, Ct. SUSAN E. TEEPLE.

BRO. F. HOUSE, Dalton, Wis., writes:—"Seeing a call from Bro. Taylor for each of the subscribers to the Crisis to pay twenty-five cents to the Tract Fund, I cheerfully respond with twice the amount, hoping that all others will do likewise, and send in the amount before the first of April; so that these messengers of truth can be scattered over our land, that some may be led to come out on the side of the Lord, and live in the enjoyment of the hope of the soon coming of our Savior."

RESPONSE.

BRO. GRANT:—Our devout Bro. Taylor, whom I never saw, suggests that two thousand of the poorest christians that read the Crisis send you "twenty-five cents" for the Tract Fund. I got my porte monnaie. It contained just twenty-five cents. I cheerfully enclose it, hoping I shall meet at least one in the promised land saved by reading the little heralds. SALLIE SNELL.

PROGRESS REPORTED.

"And still they come"! Men and women, young and more advanced, parents and children, still they come. In addition to all who have been converted, the number of whom I do not know, between thirty and forty were forward for prayers on last Saturday evening. All praise to God! Last evening there was the most perfect "jam" that I think I ever saw in and around a house of worship. When I got to the house I found every avenue obstructed with the swaying, crowding masses. In a loud voice I repeatedly demanded entrance, and commenced pushing and crowding this way and that, to the no small danger of certain modern "inventions" of a hidden nature which the women have "sought out," and at last reached the pulpit, where I found Rev. H. G. Day, and Dr. Hikock, President of Union College, waiting for me. I spoke on the angels gathering the saints at the last day.

My labors are abundant, and my health pretty comfortable. Thanks be to God. And thanks to Dr. A. M. Higgins of Palmer, Mass., through whose skill and kindness I found relief. If any of my friends are troubled with nervous diseases, I advise them to give him a call. EDWIN BURNHAM.

WANTED, A PASTOR,—

A good man, an efficient man, a laborer. One who loves to build up, not tear down: one who will gather, not scatter. One who studies,—a workman, not ashamed. One who loves the Holy Spirit and believes in revivals. One who has no hobby but Christ's speedy coming and kingdom, and a readiness for the same. Church from forty to fifty souls. House of worship holds four hundred. Salary from four hundred to four hundred and fifty dollars per annum. Village one of the largest and pleasantest in Vermont. Is on a railroad. A rare chance to do good, to work, to endure, to suffer, to play the peace-maker, to act the financier and get a burdened and struggling, but true-hearted and sacrificing church out of a debt of $1200, of which under an energetic pastor $600 could be lifted in a single day.

You now know all that is needed at present. Are you the man, my brother? Will you come and preach, pray and work for this people one or two months right off? Brethren Couch, Cole, Fenn, Burbank, Pratt, and others, what do you say? Will you at once open corresponcence with one interested for our good cause in a very important and central place? Address D. T. TAYLOR, Castleton, Vt.

THE CAUSE IN MONTREAL.

DEAR BROTHER GRANT:—It is with great pleasure I address you. You must not think that on account of my silence I have forgotten you, nor have I forgotten the glorious meetings we had here in Montreal during the time of your preaching. Eternity alone will reveal the amount of good that was done through your instrumentality; and I am happy to inform you that God still continues to bless us as a church; and also that there is a gradual increase both of membership and congregation; and from the impression you have left behind, I feel persuaded had you been enabled to stop with us another week the wall of partition would have been broken down, and many, who now believe the doctrine you preached here, but have not joined us, would have come out with us, and boldly proclaimed the truth. We have on our books forty-seven names of those who have declared for Jesus; and there are others who are seeking the "pearl of great price." The Spirit of the Lord is amongst us, and is making many glad.

Last Sunday, Bro Porter, from Danville, visited us, and preached in the morning and evening on the coming of Christ, and the necessity of being ready to meet the Bridegroom. In the afternoon, at half-past two o'clock, we had prayer and conference meeting; and had you heard the testimonies of the brethren and sisters, you would have rejoiced, and your heart would have danced for joy. There was no delay, but one rose after another to speak of the goodness of God to them, and they also thanked God that he ever directed your footsteps to Montreal.

There was the infidel who had refused to receive the word of God, the skeptic fast following in his footsteps, and many who had made an outward profession of religion, but secretly believed it to be a cunningly devised fable, who bore testimony to the truth; and the burden of their prayers was, that God would bless Bro. Grant for being the instrument in his hand of awakening them out of their sleep, and arousing them to a sense of their danger. They now can rejoice in God as their Father and their friend. They stated in their experience that they had sat under the preaching of ministers in various places, but never felt the power of the truth as they do now. Ministers and people call this "infidelity," and you an "infidel." Is this "infidelity" that converts infidels? that makes men and women who hated God and his word love him and delight in his word? If so, it is the "infidelity" preached by the apostles, and taught by the prophets; and, with the help of God, we mean to know nothing else but this "infidelity," and still to continue in the truth, as revealed in God's word.

Among the many cases that have come under our notice, is one of a man who has lived an avowed infidel for many years, and his boast was that in his discussions with christian professors, he was always the victor. Having heard that an "infidel" was to deliver a lecture in Nordheimer's Hall, he thought he would go and hear it, in order that his views might be strengthened; but to his great surprise, he found this "infidel" the only person that ever expounded the Bible satisfactorily to his mind. He continued to go through the lectures, and the discussion that was held, and became convinced that if there was any truth in the Bible the infidel understood it, whilst those who opposed him proved by their clamor that they were in the wrong. He still continues to attend, and, although he has not declared for some years, says he is convinced that there is a reality in the religion of the Bible, but no consistency in that of the theology of the present day.

My Dear Brother:—I would say in conclusion on this subject, there still continues a growing demand for your tracts, especially the "Rich Man and Lazarus," and "What is Man?" We have not one left, and when we inquire for them, they have lent them to their friends and acquaintances, so the Lord is still continuing his work and making the hearts of his people to rejoice.

Our sisters have commenced a course of visiting each other and praying with each other. They carry tracts with them, and when opportunity presents itself, speak a word for God. Our members are in earnest, and God is blessing their labors. I remain your affectionate brother in the Lord,

WM. JOHNSTON.

N. B. The brethren in Montreal request any Elder passing by Montreal to stop a short time with us. Our cry is like that of the man of Macedonia, "Come over and help us!"

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Since writing my last in November, I have been engaged in the mill six days in a week, and gone out on the Sabbath; hence have become a seventh-day believer. Working after four months' confinement, it was a privilege to answer some of the calls, and visit the battle fields of former times.

Boston, Lowell St. Found a standing army, armed and equipped. Had a good time. At Portsmouth, found them on good ground, ready to take hold. First Sunday morning thirty-seven good warm rounds were fired after preaching was over, before twelve o'clock. House full day and evening. Monday evening, Bro. Cole stopped on his way home from Elliot, and opened his battery. We had an old-fashioned shout in the camp. Astonished the rebels by surprise, and took a good number of prisoners.

We continued the meeting every evening during the week, interest increasing every day. Quite a number that had skulked into other ranks in the rear to get rid of the fire of the enemy for fear of the speech of people, came up again, loaded and fired publicly, and felt blessed in doing duty in the right position and place. They found God the Captain of our salvation would pay only such as stood up for the truth as they had received it.

Three in private conversation told me they had tried to get rid of the cross, and were in darkness; had no feeling, and were good for nothing any where. Wanted instruction, which was given as follows: God gives a dispensational truth to be preached, and those that receive it must hold up the light, or skulk back into the dark. Such must come out publicly and confess it to be blessed again. Several did it, and they had feeling enough, and a blessing followed which put new life into the meetings. On inquiry, it was found that there were as many such skulkers in the city as there were those who stood out for the truth and helped sustain it. It is so in many other places. Such will long for oil soon. But we saw a disposition in many to return during the meeting.

The second Sabbath was one of deep interest. The house was running over full in the morning, although a man by the name of Hull had scattered handbills stating that he had been a prominent Second Advent preacher for many years, and would tell all about his wonderful experience, in getting into Spiritualism, the next Sabbath in the Temple; but it seems by report that he was disappointed in not seeing more out in the forenoon, and dissolved their meeting for the sake of coming to ours, prepared to take notes. My subject was—"God's Mediums," the prophets, that wrote foretelling future events correctly, the angels being the spirits that communicated or moved their pens, etc. Then took up Spiritualism as the counterfeit which God said should come down in the last days in the form of Antichrist, which had been witnessed in that city, etc. I did not know Hull was in the house, supposing he was holding forth at the Temple.

After preaching I gave an opportunity for exhortation, as usual, when Hull arose and began to speak about his experience in the Advent cause, and told great things about what he was going to say at the Temple in the afternoon. I then mistrusted it was the Hull who was to preach in the Temple, and felt called upon to follow his remark, not knowing certainly that it was him, or anything I was going to say, only to call his remarks a piece of ill-manners, and if he was the Hull advertised, I never saw or heard of him before, and I had been acquainted with all their publications for twenty-two years, and had not seen his name, but believed him a disciple of Ann White's visions. When he cried out, "I never know her." Bro. Young from East Boston spoke and said, it was Ellen White, which I corrected, and he made no reply. Victory began to turn, and the children began to shout. I felt I was speaking for God then, and told the people that he never came any nearer being a Second Adventist than one of Moses' disciples by keeping the seventh day and following Ellen White's visions, and called on the congregation to look at his head and face and they could see at a glance what he was. Some stood up to look, when he dropped his eyes and his brass caved in and the children gave another shout. I then felt from God to answer him in the language of Paul to one of the same stamp, looking him in the eye: "O full of all subtlety and mischief, thou child of the devil," etc., which caused another shout that drowned my voice, and I stopped. I advised all who wanted to hear the man to go to the Temple, for they would not do us any good, and their seats were wanted for others. This ended the forenoon meeting, he leaving with his host muttering, Grant was a gentleman, but I was a clown, so I understood. But I felt so clear in God, I was as willing to be called a clown by him as a gentleman.

P. M. House was completely packed, desk and all. Had a blessed time talking about Moses' prophet, which was Christ. See Acts 3: 22, 23. This subject interested the people very much. They stood up patiently. At four P. M., we retired to the water for baptism, which God recognized by blessing the candidates, and convicting sinners. Sunday evening, at the last meeting, more came, in spite of Hull's advertisement. Some said two hundred went away who could not get a place to stand in the house, while I took up the perils of the last days, one of which was to be the spirit of Jannes and Jambres. 2 Tim. 3: 8. This was the spiritualism of the last days that we were then witnessing in this city; and if Hull was once an Adventist, and had gone into Spiritualism, it only fulfilled 1 Tim. 4, where some in the last days would depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, etc. Thus ended eight days battle at Portsmouth, that gave a victory to the truth. The committee said the cause stood better than it had for ten years. Many see the difference between truth and error.

Next went to Lee. Found some good ones, but have been induced to hitch on to a sectarian load they cannot draw up hill. Doubling teams are of no use unless they can work together.

Next to Exeter. A few stood clear, hoping the coming protracted meeting would prove a blessing; but there are some elements there that will let, or hinder, the work of God until they are taken out of the way.

Next to Haverhill. Found a few holding on. Stopped with Bro. Timothy Cole. He has just been sick. Glad to see he is gaining, for he is needed in the vineyard. He contends for the Spirit of truth to set the word home; had good accommodations; felt like old times with Bro. and Sr. Cole.

Next went to Salem. This is a church that stands on the principles of the gospel, willing to live and let live, and go forward in every good word and work; but they need reviving.

Next to East Boston, another old battle-field, where we have had many a victory by storm. They hold their position, and must make another attack to get another victory.

Sunday, at Lowell St. Found them armed and equipped ready for another attack soon. This church stands on the principles they first started out on. As a band they keep clear of distracting hobbies, and are willing every one should work out what God works in. They like a variety, and few places are as free as this for a raw country preacher. I had a blessed good time with them, which ended a trip of three weeks, the first I have had since last fall.

I go home to attend to my business in the mill, going out on Sabbaths near by, and returning on Mondays. Those wishing my books must direct to me at Chicopee Falls, Mass., as there are none at the Crisis office.

Correspondence.

From J. L. Hopkins, San Francisco, Cal.

BRO. GRANT:—I now acknowledge the receipt of your kind letter received some months ago; also you and the brethren's kindness in sending the Crisis to enlighten my darkness and aid me in scattering a little light here in San Francisco, and on this coast. On receipt of some numbers of the Crisis, the first that came to hand, I was astonished on reading an article on the destruction of the wicked or no immortality out of Christ. I certainly thought you folks held great heresy. Well, it has taken me upwards of twelve months to see into this truth, as I begin to call it now. A few weeks ago, I was meditating on 1 Cor. 15: 18,—"Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." I then felt to receive your views as the truth of God; hence the necessity for a resurrection. Heretofore, my views have been much with the Episcopal brethren on the subject of the second advent of Christ; now, since I see the immortality question, I feel to go in with you Advent brethren. I have been originally a Methodist; but when I learned the doctrine of the Lord's coming, I had to leave them, and walked right out, and ever since have been endeavoring to spread this truth abroad. For some few weeks past, I have been speaking on Sundays, on the street opposite one of our large hotels. I had to give up the City Hall, so few attended. I am now in the street till the Lord opens some other place. The last two Sundays, I spoke on the life and death question, in connection with the coming of the Lord, and some of my religious friends, thought certainly that I had got into great error. It was bad enough to believe in the second coming of Christ, as some of them think; but to believe in the annihilation of the wicked, was going over into lunacy. I conclude, praying the Lord's blessing to be with you till the coming of Jesus.

Yours in the blessed hope,

J. L. HOPKINS.

Bro. Hopkins is editing and publishing a paper in California, showing "the end of all things is at hand." We send him a lot of tracts to scatter among those seeking light. It is cheering to know that the Lord is raising up faithful men in various parts of the world to give the note of warning to the slumbering virgins. Events are ripening rapidly, and soon we may expect to see the Prince of Peace in all his glory and beauty. May the Lord bless Bro. Hopkins in his efforts to spread the light in California.—ED.

From J. B. Luther.

BRO. GRANT:—In searching after the truth, I was induced to subscribe for the Crisis three months. I have now received its weekly visits for about one year, and I feel to rejoice in the light it has thrown on my pathway, for its truth has made me free indeed. O, what joy it has brought to my poor soul, while traveling through this wilderness world, amid the perils of these last days, to hear of the kingdom of God and the soon coming of our blessed Savior, who brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

When I gave heed to the precious truths of the Bible, some of my pious friends told me I was gnawing the bone of contention. Bless the Lord, I have always found it meat in due season. While contemplating the reward that is promised to God's dear children, my heart longs to be there, where my joy shall be full, where I can see the dear Redeemer, who has done so much for me, and all the saints that sleep in Jesus.

We are wearing away, and the pleasures of earth are transitory; but, if we are Christ's, then we are Abraham's seed, and heirs, according to the promise, to an inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that will never fade away. The promise is that the meek shall inherit the earth. O, how comforting the thought. We may fall a prey to the enemy death, yet we shall come again from the land of the enemy and return to our own border. But when shall this glad day be ushered in? When Jesus comes to reign on the throne of his father David, and to gather his elect from out of all nations into the paradise of God.

O what joys are in store for God's dear saints, just think of it: Eden's lovely bowers—the river of life, its waters clear as crystal,—the tree of life, on either side of the river, yielding its fruit every month,—the redeemed just examined, as they did in the other fifty-nine instances already above referred to, then we should have had clear, blazing light shining on this glorious subject; and we should see that, at the END of the seventh-day Sabbaths—(or at the end of the Lord JEHOVAH'S Sabbaths—which he gave to the "children of Israel," to be a "sign" unto them "throughout their generations") THERE would be the BEGINNING of the LORD JESUS CHRIST'S SABBATHS. Or, in other words, where one series of Sabbaths ended, there another series of Sabbaths began. And this change of Sabbaths was marked by the most important events that ever transpired in the history of man. "The veil of the temple was rent in twain"—"the middle wall of partition" between Jews and Gentiles was "broken down," and thus they were "made both one." "Our Savior Jesus Christ" had "abolished death," and had brought LIFE and IMMORTALITY to light through the gospel"—the saints were begotten again unto a lively hope by the RESURRECTION OF JESUS CHRIST FROM THE DEAD"—the LIVING JESUS was VICTOR over "DEATH" and the "GRAVE"—old things had passed away, BEHOLD, ALL THINGS HAD BECOME NEW."

On confirmation of this truth, that the seventh-day Sabbath was to cease at the resurrection of our Lord from the dead, is the fact, that out of the whole number of times the Sabbath is mentioned in the New Testament, it is never spoken of by either Christ or any of the apostles as a precept, or command; but it is only spoken of as an historical fact. And it is thus worthy of special attention that, whenever the seventh-day Sabbath is mentioned in the New Testament, it is always to be found in the five historical books; and never ONCE found in the epistles of any of the apostles. And hence, as I have before stated, so I again repeat, that in no instance is the Sabbath spoken of by either Christ or his apostles as a command or precept. I know that our Savior said that he was "Lord of the Sabbath day"; and this shows that he had the power to change it whenever he pleased. It is true, that in the Acts of the apostles we find mention made of the apostle Paul speaking to the Jews in their synagogues on the Sabbath; but never do we find any of the other apostles holding meetings on the seventh-day Sabbath. And there is but one single instance where we have an account of any of the apostles holding a meeting on that day, which appears to have been for a season of mutual worship among themselves; and that is the one mentioned in Acts 16: 13, where it is said:—"And on the Sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither."

The passage in 17th chapter of Acts 2d verse, where it is said: "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures"; only shows that Paul was in Thessalonia, in a Jewish "synagogue," and his "manner was," when he could get an opportunity, he would "reason with them out of the Scriptures; opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead"; and although they were ever so much offended with him, he would "preach unto" them "that this Jesus" "is Christ." And the apostle's "manner," in thus going into Jewish synagogues on the Sabbath, was very much like my "manner," when I believed in the seventh-day Sabbath; for I attended a great many more meetings on the "first day of the week" than on any other, for the very good reason, that it was much easier to get the people out to meeting on this day than on the day that I then believed was the Sabbath. In Acts 18: 4, it is said: "And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks." Where was Paul at this time? At "Corinth." Who was he with? He was with a "Jew named Aquila," and "his wife Priscilla." "And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them and wrought: (for by their occupation they were tent makers.) And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks. And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ. And when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, he shook his raiment, and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles."—Acts 18: 1–6.

The apostle did not find this very pleasant "seventh-day" worship, did he? These were not his brethren that Paul was with on this occasion, were they? "And when they opposed themselves, and BLASPHEMED," Paul left them, saying,—"From HENCEFORTH I will go to the GENTILES." Do we have any account that the apostle after this had any more meetings on the seventh-day Sabbath? Never! This was the last. But we do find him holding meetings with his brethren after this; but their meetings for worship were on the "first day of the week," (Sabbaton.) Acts. 20: 7.

P. S. When I sent my second No., I was in hopes I could close my argument on this subject with this No.; but I am unable to do it without making my article too lengthy for one paper. Hope the readers of the Crisis will have patience with me, and I will close with my next. T. M. P.

For the World's Crisis.

COULD N'T FIND IT.

BRO. GRANT:—Dear Sir, accept my thanks for the package of tracts you sent me. I have been from home some, talking to the people, and circulating the tracts; and have met with strong opposition. Some ministers have taken up the Bible in my presence to show that the soul is to be re-united to the body at the resurrection; but, as might be expected, they could not find the place,—thus showing the wonderful amount of ignorance, even among ministers, respecting what is written in the Scriptures. They believe it, or think they believe, because "it is in the Bible"; but, when they look for the place, they cannot find it. Yet, still, they believe it, as firmly as if it were in the Bible. I remain yours in truth and love, WM. BOTHWELL.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, March 8, 1864.

DISCUSSION.

We have arranged to hold a discussion at Lyceum Hall, Lynn, Mass., with Eld. Moses Hull, of Battle Creek, Mich., commencing Tuesday evening, March 22nd, to continue four evenings.

QUESTION. "Has man in his nature an immortal principle, which, after the death of the body, is capable of returning and communicating with the inhabitants of earth?"

Aff.—Moses Hull. Neg.—Miles Grant.

Eld. Hull has been known for some years as a leading man among the Seventh-day Adventists. Within a few months he has joined the Spiritualists, and is being made quite prominent among them. He has been lecturing on Spiritualism, in Boston, for some weeks. We shall expect an interesting discussion.

THE TRACT FUND.

We are rejoiced to see the tract fund becoming an object of interest among our readers. This is a very favorable symptom of good. In this simple way a great work may be accomplished, and no one be burdened; indeed we shall all feel the better for what we do for the benefit of our fellow men. Let the refreshing streams come in from all directions, as when the Jews gave money to rebuild the temple. Give us the means to scatter tracts like autumn leaves. The people are greedy after them. We have never seen them more anxious to read than now. They are sighing for something not found in popular churches. Shall they have the light? We think we hear a tremendous response, "YES, if it is in our power to help send it." Let the quarters and dollars come in an overwhelming shower. Let us "sow beside all waters." Our work will soon be done. Shall it be "well done?" We have reason to thank the Lord that the way is open for us to use our spare money where it can hardly help accomplishing much good. Come, sit down this evening and write us a note and send the offering,—"Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver."

PITTSFIELD. N. H.

Our late meetings in Pittsfield were very interesting. That church is doing well. There are a goodly number of real living christians, who are known and read of all men. The community appear to be as much interested in the great truths of the Bible as at any time in the past, and apparently more so. The people are astonished at "the signs of the times." Many are convicted that we have the truth, but the fear of reproach keeps them in bondage, and is depriving them of a blessed hope, and great peace.

Some of our meetings were seasons of deep heart-searching, and produced some very noble confessions of faults, accompanied with a determined purpose, in the Lord, to live better than ever. They act like those who have counted the cost, and are willing to pay the price.

We had pleasant interviews with Bro. C. S. Emerson, S. S. Mooney, and Bro. Glidden, who preach the word.

On Lord's day, Feb. 28th, it was estimated that the Town Hall was crowded with some six hundred attentive listeners. The people looked thoughtful and solemn. In the evening we had a pleasant communion season. Three requested prayers. We trust the work is onward in that place. Many are fearful that the Lord is coming, who do not feel ready to meet him. The fear of man keepeth them from acting. In the midst of all the strong evidence showing that the coming of Jesus is near, there are many professed watchmen in our land, who are crying "peace and safety," —"good time coming,"—"do not be worried about those who are preaching the end of the world," etc. If it were not so, we should not know we were "in the last days," because this is to be one of the signs, when we are near the end.

THE WAR.

The Union army has met with some reverses lately in Florida, while there seems to be an advance in the neighborhood of Richmond. On the whole, we see no "silver lining" yet to the cloud that hangs over our nation. Our progress is only in the downward road to destruction.

The Boston Journal of March 1st, remarks: "It must be admitted that the opening of the spring campaign—if it can be regarded as having opened—is not quite so favorable as had been anticipated, although it presents nothing to dampen our hopes of the future. The reverse in Florida is not only to be deeply regretted for the losses involved, but it is mortifying from the apparent fact that we have still officers in responsible commands who appear to have learned nothing from all their experience in the war."

THE RISING STORM IN EUROPE.

Observing men are now quite well satisfied that a general war is about to open in Europe. They see but little hope of peace. All their efforts to control the war elements are about to result in a hopeless failure. They might as well attempt to stay the hurricane by a legislative enactment. The time appears to have arrived for the "winds" to "blow."

This is the time for christians to lift up their heads, for their redemption is at hand. They are occupying a sublime position in this world's history. Praise the Lord for the blessed hope that is like an anchor to [illegible]

[illegible] continuing the war Prussia [illegible] annexation of the Duchies as a compensation, and then France, claiming [illegible] as a violation of the treaty of London, may hold up the torn pieces of that treaty as an argument why she too ought to have a compensation for this aggrandizement of Germany on the North, and then will commence the march of the French army to the Rhine.

It is certain that, if the Danes decide to continue the war for the recovery of Schleswig, as they say they do, and if they continue it especially with any degree of success, the war in the spring will become general from one end of Europe to the other."

SPIRITUALIST NATIONAL CONVENTION.

At the late convention of Spiritualists in Boston, it was resolved to hold a "National Convention" during the coming summer, at some central point in the West. A committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements. They are talking of great events to be accomplished through the agency of spirits and their mediums. We think the time is at hand for strange developments. Let us beware of the snare of the devil, and all his "seducing spirits." Now is the time to keep near the Lord, if we would be safe from the wiles of the adversary.

Every one, who wishes to meet the Son of man at his coming, should beware of the principles taught by the spirits who claim to be the spirits of our deceased friends. All who make such claims may be reckoned as deceiving and lying spirits. They tell the truth at times, to gain the confidence of those they would deceive, as do other liars; but they are not to be trusted for one moment. They are very active at the present time, and as confident of success as they are active. Christian, gird on your armor. Do not sleep now, lest you be caught in Satan's snare.

"RELIGION OF THE DAY."

The following description of the religion of the day is from Bonar. We think the representation is not overdrawn, but short of the sad reality. He says:—

"The religion of the day is an easy-minded religion; a religion without conflict and wrestling, without self-denial and sacrifice; a religion which knows nothing of the pangs of the new birth as its commencement, and nothing of the desperate struggle with the Devil, day by day, making us long for resurrection-deliverance, for the binding of the Adversary, and for the Lord's arrival. It is a second-rate religion,—a religion in which there is no largeness, no grandeur, no potency, no noble-mindedness, no elevation, no self-devotedness, no all-constraining love. It is a hollow religion, with a fair exterior, but an aching heart, —a heart unsatisfied, a soul not at rest, a conscience not at peace with God; a religion marked, it may be, by activity and excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness of a wound hidden and unhealed within, and hence unable to animate to lofty doings, or supply the strength needed for such doings. It is a feeble religion, lacking the sinews and bones of hardier times,—very different from the indomitable, much-enduring, storm-braving religion, not merely of apostolic days, but even of the Reformation. It is an uncertain religion; that is to say, it is not rooted in certainty; it is not the outflowing of a soul assured of pardon, and rejoicing in the filial relationship between itself and God. Hence, there is no liberty of service, for the question of personal acceptance is still an unsettled thing; there is a working for pardon, but not from pardon. Hence all is bondage, heaviness, irksomeness. There is a speaking for God, but it is with a faltering tongue; there is a laboring for God, but it is with fettered hands; there is a moving in the way of his commandments, but it is with a heavy drag upon our limbs. Hence the inefficient, uninfluential character of our religon. It does not tell on others; for it has not yet fully told upon ourselves, It falls short of its mark, for the arm that drew the bow was paralyzed."

The foregoing corresponds with Paul's description of "the last days." Let each reader ask himself, am I helping on this lamentable state of things?

NEW TRACT.—"Our Country; what is to become of it?" To be had of W. Z. Harbert, Philadelphia. Price, per copy, 5 cts.; per dozen 50 cts.; per hundred, $3.00. This is a good tract for the times.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS IN FEBRUARY.

The prospect of 4,000 new subscribers in 1864 is brightening. Brethren are taking hold of the work in earnest. Never with more energy than now. January brought in 270 names, which was more than any previous month, and February a larger number still—360. Seven-ninths of these, or 280, were obtained by the efforts of friends whose names appear below. 630 in two months. This is certainly a very large and encouraging increase, and gives promise of what, with the help of the Lord, we may expect in the remainder of the year.

"How many more, in each of the ten months to come, will it need to make up the 4,000?" Only 337.

"But we obtained more than that, last month." Yes—360.

"Well, we can do that again, if we try, and overrun the 4,000."

You can; and more, if you WILL. You can, at least, do this—let no month to come fall short of the month past. Keep it up! It is the Lord's work. More volunteers are called for. Won't YOU enlist, and do what you can to push it along. Can't you get a subscriber to-day? TRY! Get another to-morrow. Another next week, and so on. Send on the money, and call for your premium. No time to lose. Time is short. Be up and doing. W. R. H.

TRACTS.

"As God hath prospered him."—1 Cor. 16: 2.

Such is the gospel rule of giving for all religious purposes. Who lives up to it? Do you? "Weighed in the balances and found wanting," will be the final verdict on one half the professors of christianity. Perhaps you don't understand this rule. Let me explain it. You are worth $500: you give $10 each year to the cause of your divine Master. Very well. Now suppose you in the same year are so prospered of God that you come to be worth $1000. Your substance is now doubled: the rule demands that you double your gift. Hence if you take heed to the inspired apostle you will give $20 instead of $10. And your gifts to the cause of God will increase in the same ratio as your worth increases. Suppose you are worth 50,000, and you give $1000 per annum. Then if you come to be worth $100,000, your gifts to God should be $2000. Else how will your benevolence keep pace with your accumulating wealth?

Again: your income or earnings this year amount to $400. You give of it $20. Next year you earn $800. Then you should give of the same $40,—all things being equal. Now you are enlightened, so figure up your worth, christian brother, and go by the Scripture rule.

Perhaps you will ask, "Thou that preachest a man should give, dost thou give? Answer. Ten years ago I established a rule of systematic benevolence. I said I would give all the way from $2 to $6 each month for religious and charitable purposes. I have done so according to my ability and prosperity. In the year 1863, my donations of this kind amounted to about one ninth of all my income. And I call myself a poor man. These facts you would never have known were it not for setting you an example. Hence I come with an unblushing cheek and an unfaltering voice and ask you, poor christian, well-to-do christian, rich christian, Have you heard the voice from heaven which demands that you "GIVE" "as God hath PROSPERED you? And hearing, will you dare to DISOBEY? D. T. T.

P. S.—Here they come. Five new ones helping me beg for the best cause under the sun. Well done, brethren T., M., B., C., and W. Stand aside, you stingy christian (?), or you'll get buried under a shower of two-thousand quarters.

From Bro. D. D. Chaffee.

BRO. GRANT:—When I first saw Bro. D. T. Taylor's tract assessment on the readers of the Crisis, I said to myself, I will send one dollar, which is twenty-five cents each for my household; but deferring a little, I began to think of my business prospects, which are not as good this season as usual for want of sledding to get in timber, and thought I might need the dollar for other purposes. But I am reminded by the milking principle in his last article, how well it has worked in times past, —one instance in particular.

After hearing a sermon once, I said it was worth a dollar to me, and at once paid it, besides fifty cents for my ride to meeting, and on my way home I picked up a turtle which I sold for just enough to pay the whole. And now I am reminded that not a dollar has come into my purse since I have deferred paying my tract assessment, but rather it has been drying up. So here goes the dollar. Come, brother and sister, file in, file into the tract column. Your Bro, D. D. CHAFFEE.

South Wilbraham, Mass.

P. S.—My wife adds thirty cents.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

BRO. GRANT:—You may put my name among the list for the Tract Fund, counting me among the two thousand of the poorest christians who read the Crisis, for I feel none need be so poor but that they can pay twenty-five cents; and so I will pay fifty, half for me, and the other half for some one that loves tea and money better than they do tracts. For my part I have lived ten years without drinking one cup of tea to my knowledge, and seldom drink any thing but water. It was a great sacrifice, and I thank God I was enabled to make it for his glory, and said I would drink no more till the Lord come; and when I see so much as has been written in the Crisis on tobacco and tea, I wonder there can be one left that will use it. I never saw the moment that I was sorry, and could I sacrifice it for others I would gladly do it; but I feel others can if they will. And now let us all send in our mite and heed what Bro. Taylor says in the Crisis of Feb. 9th.

Roxbury, Ct. SUSAN E. TEEPLE.

BRO. F. HOUSE, Dalton, Wis., writes:—Seeing a call from Bro. Taylor for each of the subscribers to the Crisis to pay twenty-five cents to the Tract Fund, I cheerfully respond with twice the amount, hoping that all others will do likewise, and send in the amount before the first of April, so that these [illegible]

PROGRESS REPORTED.

"And still they come"! Men and women, young and more advanced, parents and children, still they come. In addition to all who have been converted, the number of whom I do not know, between thirty and forty were forward for prayers on last Saturday evening. All praise to God! Last evening there was the most perfect "jam" that I think I ever saw in and around a house of worship. When I got to the house I found every avenue obstructed with the swaying, crowding masses. In a loud voice I repeatedly demanded entrance, and commenced pushing and crowding this way and that, to the no small danger of certain modern "inventions" of a hidden nature which the women have "sought out," and at last reached the pulpit, where I found Rev. H. G. Day, and Dr. Hikock, President of Union College, waiting for me. I spoke on the angels gathering the saints at the last day.

My labors are abundant, and my health pretty comfortable. Thanks be to God. And thanks to Dr. A. M. Higgins of Palmer, Mass., through whose skill and kindness I found relief. If any of my friends are troubled with nervous diseases, I advise them to give him a call. EDWIN BURNHAM.

WANTED, A PASTOR,—

A good man, an efficient man, a laborer. One who loves to build up, not tear down: one who will gather, not scatter. One who studies,—a workman, not ashamed. One who loves the Holy Spirit and believes in revivals. One who has no hobby but Christ's speedy coming and kingdom, and a readiness for the same. Church from forty to fifty souls. House of worship holds four hundred. Salary from four hundred to four hundred and fifty dollars per annum. Village one of the largest and pleasantest in Vermont. Is on a railroad. A rare chance to do good, to work, to endure, to suffer, to play the peace-maker, to act the financier and get a burdened and struggling, but true-hearted and sacrificing church out of a debt of $1200, of which under an energetic pastor $600 could be lifted in a single day.

You now know all that is needed at present. Are you the man, my brother? Will you come and preach, pray and work for this people one or two months right off? Brethren Couch, Cole, Fenn, Burbank, Pratt, and others, what do you say? Will you at once open correspondence with one interested for our good cause in a very important and central place? Address D. T. TAYLOR, Castleton, Vt.

THE CAUSE IN MONTREAL.

DEAR BROTHER GRANT:—It is with great pleasure I address you. You must not think that on account of my silence I have forgotten you, nor have I forgotten the glorious meetings we had here in Montreal during the time of your preaching. Eternity alone will reveal the amount of good that was done through your instrumentality; and I am happy to inform you that God still continues to bless us as a church; and also that there is a gradual increase both of membership and congregation; and from the impression you have left behind, I feel persuaded had you been enabled to stop with us another week the wall of partition would have been broken down, and many, who now believe the doctrine you preached here, but have not joined us, would have come out with us, and boldly proclaimed the truth. We have on our books forty-seven names of those who have declared for Jesus; and there are others who are seeking the "pearl of great price." The Spirit of the Lord is amongst us, and is making many glad.

Last Sunday, Bro Porter, from Danville, visited us, and preached in the morning and evening on the coming of Christ, and the necessity of being ready to meet the Bridegroom. In the afternoon, at half-past two o'clock, we had prayer and conference meeting; and had you heard the testimonies of the brethren and sisters, you would have rejoiced, and your heart would have danced for joy. There was no delay, but one rose after another to speak of the goodness of God to them, and they also thanked God that he ever directed your footsteps to Montreal.

There was the infidel who had refused to receive the word of God, the skeptic fast following in his footsteps, and many who had made an outward profession of religion, but secretly believed it to be a cunningly devised fable, who bore testimony to the truth; and the burden of their prayers was, that God would bless Bro. Grant for being the instrument in his hand of awakening them out of their sleep, and arousing them to a sense of their danger. They now can rejoice in God as their Father and their friend. They stated in their experience that they had sat under the preaching of ministers in various places, but never felt the power of the truth as they do now. Ministers and people call this "infidelity," and you an "infidel." Is this "infidelity" that converts infidels? that makes men and women who hated God and his word love him and delight in his word? If so, it is the "infidelity" preached by the apostles, and taught by the prophets; and, with the help of God, we mean to know nothing else but this "infidelity," and still to continue in the truth, as revealed in God's word.

Among the many cases that have come under our notice, is one of a man who has lived an avowed infidel for many years, and his boast was that in his discussions with christian professors, he was always the victor. Having heard that an "infidel" was to deliver a lecture in Nordheimer's Hall, he thought he would go and hear it, in order that his views might be strengthened; but to his great surprise, he found this "infidel" the only person that ever expounded the Bible satisfactorily to his mind. He continued to go through the lectures, and the discussion that was held, and became convinced that if there was any truth in the Bible, the "infidel" understood it, while those who [illegible] although he [illegible] says he is [illegible] the religion [illegible] in that of the theology of the present day.

My Dear Brother:—I would say in conclusion on this subject, there still continues a growing demand for your tracts, especially the "Rich Man and Lazarus," and "What is Man?" We have not one left, and when we inquire for them, they have lent them to their friends and acquaintances, so the Lord is still continuing his work and making the hearts of his people to rejoice.

Our sisters have commenced a course of visiting each other and praying with each other. They carry tracts with them, and when opportunity presents itself, speak a word for God. Our members are in earnest, and God is blessing their labors. I remain you affectionate brother in the Lord,

WM. JOHNSTON.

N. B. The brethren in Montreal request any Elder passing by Montreal to stop a short time with us. Our cry is like that of the man of Macedonia, "Come over and help us!"

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Since writing my last in November, I have been engaged in the mill six days in a week, and gone out on the Sabbath; hence have become a seventh-day believer. Working after four months' confinement, it was a privilege to answer some of the calls, and visit the battle fields of former times.

Boston, Lowell St. Found a standing army, armed and equipped. Had a good time. At Portsmouth, found them on good ground, ready to take hold. First Sunday morning thirty-seven good warm rounds were fired after preaching was over, before twelve o'clock. House full day and evening. Monday evening, Bro. Cole stopped on his way home from Elliot, and opened his battery. We had an old-fashioned shout in the camp. Astonished the rebels by surprise, and took a good number of prisoners.

We continued the meeting every evening during the week, interest increasing every day. Quite a number that had skulked into other ranks in the rear to get rid of the fire of the enemy for fear of the speech of people, came up again, loaded and fired publicly, and felt blessed in doing duty in the right position and place. They found God the Captain of our salvation would pay only such as stood up for the truth as they had received it.

Three in private conversation told me they had tried to get rid of the cross, and were in darkness; had no feeling, and were good for nothing any where. Wanted instruction, which was given as follows: God gives a dispensational truth to be preached, and those that receive it must hold up the light, or skulk back into the dark. Such must come out publicly and confess it to be blessed again. Several did it, and they had feeling enough, and a blessing followed which put new life into the meetings. On inquiry, it was found that there were as many such skulkers in the city as there were those who stood out for the truth and helped sustain it. It is so in many other places. Such will long for oil soon. But we saw a disposition in many to return during the meeting.

The second Sabbath was one of deep interest. The house was running over full in the morning, although a man by the name of Hull had scattered handbills stating that he had been a prominent Second Advent preacher for many years, and would tell all about his wonderful experience, in getting into Spiritualism, the next Sabbath in the Temple; but it seems by report that he was disappointed in not seeing more out in the forenoon, and dissolved their meeting for the sake of coming to ours, prepared to take notes. My subject was—"God's Mediums," the prophets, that wrote foretelling future events correctly, the angels being the spirits that communicated or moved their pens, etc. Then took up Spiritualism as the counterfeit which God said should come down in the last days in the form of Antichrist, which had been witnessed in that city, etc. I did not know Hull was in the house, supposing he was holding forth at the Temple.

After preaching I gave an opportunity for exhortation, as usual, when Hull arose and began to speak about his experience in the Advent cause, and told great things about what he was going to say at the Temple in the afternoon. I then mistrusted it was the Hull who was to preach in the Temple, and felt called upon to follow his remark, not knowing certainly that it was him, or anything I was going to say, only to call his remarks a piece of ill-manners, and if he was the Hull advertised, I never saw or heard of him before, and I had been acquainted with all their publications for twenty-two years, and had not seen his name, but believed him a disciple of Ann White's visions. When he cried out, "I never know her." Bro. Young from East Boston spoke and said, it was Ellen White, which I corrected, and he made no reply. Victory began to turn, and the children began to shout. I felt I was speaking for God then, and told the people that he never came any nearer being a Second Adventist than one of Moses' disciples by keeping the seventh day and following Ellen White's visions, and called on the congregation to look at his head and face and they could see at a glance what he was. Some stood up to look, when he dropped his eyes and his brass caved in and the children gave another shout. I then felt from God to answer him in the language of Paul to one of the same stamp, looking him in the eye: "O full of all subtlety and mischief, thou child of the devil," etc., which caused another shout that drowned my voice, and I stopped. I advised all who wanted to hear the man to go to the Temple, for they would not do us any good, and their seats were wanted for others. This ended the forenoon meeting, he leaving with his host muttering, Grant was a gentleman, but I was a clown, so I understood. But I felt so clear in God, I was as willing to be called a clown by him as a gentleman.

P. M. House was completely packed, desk and all. Had a blessed time talking about Moses' prophet, which was Christ. See Acts 3: 22, 23. This subject interested the people very much. They stood up patiently. At four P. M., we retired to the water for baptism, which God recognized by blessing the candidates, and convicting sinners. Sunday evening, at the last meeting, [illegible]

Hull was once an Adventist, and had gone into Spiritualism, it only fulfilled 1 Tim. 4, where some in the last days would depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, etc. Thus ended eight days battle at Portsmouth, that gave a victory to the truth. The committee said the cause stood better than it had for ten years. Many see the difference between truth and error.

Next went to Lee. Found some good ones, but have been induced to hitch on to a sectarian load they cannot draw up hill. Doubling teams are of no use unless they can work together.

Next to Exeter. A few stood close, hoping the coming protracted meeting would prove a blessing; but there are some elements there that will let, or hinder, the work of God until they are taken out of the way.

Next to Haverhill. Found a few, holding on. Stopped with Bro. Timothy Cole. He has just been sick. Glad to see he is gaining, for he is needed in the vineyard. He contends for the Spirit of truth to set the word home; had good accommodations; felt like old times with Bro. and Sr. Cole.

Next went to Salem. This is a church that stands on the principles of the gospel, willing to live and let live, and go forward in every good word and work; but they need reviving.

Next to East Boston, another old battle-field, where we have had many a victory by storm. They hold their position, and must make another attack to get another victory.

Sunday, at Lowell St. Found them armed and equipped ready for another attack soon. This church stands on the principles they first started out on. As a band they keep clear of distracting hobbies, and are willing every one should work out what God works in. They like a variety, and few places are as free as this for a raw country preacher. I had a blessed good time with them, which ended a trip of three weeks, the first I have had since last fall.

I go home to attend to my business in the mill, going out on Sabbaths near by, and returning on Mondays. Those wishing my books must direct to me at Chicopee Falls, Mass., as there are none at the Crisis office.

Correspondence.

From J. L. Hopkins, San Francisco, Cal.

BRO. GRANT:—I now acknowledge the receipt of your kind letter received some months ago; also you and the brethren's kindness in sending the Crisis to enlighten my darkness and aid me in scattering a little light here in San Francisco, and on this coast. On receipt of some numbers of the Crisis, the first that came to hand, I was astonished on reading an article on the destruction of the wicked or no immortality out of Christ. I certainly thought you folks held great heresy. Well, it has taken me upwards of twelve months to see into this truth, as I begin to call it now. A few weeks ago, I was meditating on 1 Cor. 15: 18,—"Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." I then felt to receive your views as the truth of God; hence the necessity for a resurrection. Heretofore, my views have been much with the Episcopal brethren on the subject of the second advent of Christ; now, since I see the immortality question, I feel to go in with you Advent brethren. I have been originally a Methodist; but when I learned the doctrine of the Lord's coming, I had to leave them, and walked right out, and ever since have been endeavoring to spread this truth abroad. For some few weeks past, I have been speaking on Sundays, on the street opposite one of our large hotels. I had to give up the City Hall, so few attended. I am now in the street till the Lord opens some other place. The last two Sundays, I spoke on the life and death question, in connection with the coming of the Lord, and some of my religious friends, thought certainly that I had got into great error. It was bad enough to believe in the second coming of Christ, as some of them think; but to believe in the annihilation of the wicked, was going over into lunacy. I conclude, praying the Lord's blessing to be with you till the coming of Jesus.

Yours in the blessed hope,
J. L. HOPKINS.

Bro. Hopkins is editing and publishing a paper in California, showing "the end of all things is at hand." We send him a lot of tracts to scatter among those seeking light. It is cheering to know that the Lord is raising up faithful men in various parts of the world to give the note of warning to the slumbering virgins. Events are ripening rapidly, and soon we may expect to see the Prince of Peace in all his glory and beauty. May the Lord bless Bro. Hopkins in his efforts to spread the light in California.—ED.

From J. B. Luther.

BRO. GRANT:—In searching after the truth, I was induced to subscribe for the Crisis three months. I have now received its weekly visits for about one year, and I feel to rejoice in the light it has thrown on my pathway, for its truth has made me free indeed. O, what joy it has brought to my poor soul, while traveling through this wilderness world, amid the perils of these last days, to hear of the kingdom of God and the soon coming of our blessed Savior, who brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

When I gave heed to the precious truths of the Bible, some of my pious friends told me I was gnawing the bone of contention. Bless the Lord, I have always found it meat in due season. While contemplating the reward that is promised to God's dear children, my heart longs to be there, where my joy shall be full, where I can see the dear Redeemer, who has done so much for me, and all the saints that sleep in Jesus.

We are wearing away, and the pleasures of earth are transitory; but, if we are Christ's, then we are Abraham's seed, and heirs, according to the promise, to an inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that will never fade away. The promise is that the meek shall inherit the earth. O, how comforting the thought. We may fall a prey to the enemy death, yet we shall come again from the land of the enemy and return to our own border. But when shall this glad day be ushered in? When Jesus comes to reign on the throne of his father David, and to gather his elect from out of all nations into the paradise of God.

O what joys are in store for God's dear saints, [illegible]

just examined, as they did in the other fifty-nine instances already above referred to, then we should have had clear, blazing light shining on this glorious subject; and we should see that, at the END of the seventh-day Sabbaths—(or at the end of the Lord JEHOVAH'S Sabbaths—which he gave to the "children of Israel," to be a "sign" unto them "throughout their generations") THERE would be the BEGINNING of the LORD JESUS CHRIST'S SABBATHS. Or, in other words, where one series of Sabbaths ended, there another series of Sabbaths began. And this change of Sabbaths was marked by the most important events that ever transpired in the history of man. "The veil of the temple was rent in twain"—"the middle wall of partition" between Jews and Gentiles was "broken down," and thus they were "made both one." "Our Savior Jesus Christ" had "abolished death," and had brought LIFE and IMMORTALITY to light through the gospel"—the saints were begotten again unto a lively hope by the RESURRECTION OF JESUS CHRIST FROM THE DEAD"—the LIVING JESUS was VICTOR over "DEATH" and the "GRAVE"—old things had passed away, BEHOLD, ALL THINGS HAD BECOME NEW."

On confirmation of this truth, that the seventh-day Sabbath was to cease at the resurrection of our Lord from the dead, is the fact, that out of the whole number of times the Sabbath is mentioned in the New Testament, it is never spoken of by either Christ or any of the apostles as a precept, or command; but it is only spoken of as an historical fact. And it is thus worthy of special attention that, whenever the seventh-day Sabbath is mentioned in the New Testament, it is always to be found in the five historical books, and never ONCE found in the epistles of any of the apostles. And hence, as I have before stated, so I again repeat, that in no instance is the Sabbath spoken of by either Christ or his apostles as a command or precept. I know that our Savior said that he was "Lord of the Sabbath day"; and this shows that he had the power to change it whenever he pleased. It is true, that in the Acts of the apostles we find mention made of the apostle Paul speaking to the Jews in their synagogues on the Sabbath; but never do we find any of the other apostles holding meetings on the seventh-day Sabbath. And there is but one single instance where we have an account of any of the apostles holding a meeting on that day, which appears to have been for a season of mutual worship among themselves; and that is the one mentioned in Acts 16: 13, where it is said:—"And on the Sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither."

The passage in 17th chapter of Acts 2d verse, where it is said: "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures"; only shows that Paul was in Thessasalonia, in a Jewish "synagogue," and his "manner was," when he could get an opportunity, he would "reason with them out of the Scriptures; opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead"; and although they were ever so much offended with him, he would "preach unto" them "that this Jesus" "is Christ." And the apostle's "manner," in thus going into Jewish synagogues on the Sabbath, was very much like my "manner," when I believed in the seventh-day Sabbath; for I attended a great many more meetings on the "first day of the week" than on any other, for the very good reason, that it was much easier to get the people out to meeting on this day than on the day that I then believed was the Sabbath. In Acts 18: 4, it is said: "And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks." Where was Paul at this time? At "Corinth." Who was he with? He was with a "Jew named Aquila," and "his wife Priscilla." "And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them and wrought: (for by their occupation they were tent makers.) And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks. And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ. And when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, he shook his raiment, and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles."—Acts 18: 1–6.

The apostle did not find this very pleasant "seventh-day" worship, did he? These were not his brethren that Paul was with on this occasion, were they? "And when they opposed themselves, and BLASPHEMED," Paul left them, saying,—"From HENCEFORTH I will go to the GENTILES." Do we have any account that the apostle after this had any more meetings on the seventh-day Sabbath? Never! This was the last. But we do find him holding meetings with his brethren after this; but their meetings for worship were on the "first day of the week," (Sabbaton.) Acts. 20: 7.

P. S. When I sent my second No., I was in hopes I could close my argument on this subject with this No.; but I am unable to do it without making my article too lengthy for one paper. Hope the readers of the Crisis will have patience with me, and I will close with my next. T. M. P.

For the World's Crisis.

COULD N'T FIND IT.

BRO. GRANT:—Dear Sir, accept my thanks for the package of tracts you sent me. I have been from home some, talking to the people, and circulating the tracts; and have met with strong opposition. Some ministers have taken up the Bible in my presence to show that the soul is to be re-united to the body at the resurrection; but, as might be expected, they could not find the place,—thus showing the wonderful amount of ignorance, even among ministers, respecting what is written in the Scriptures. They believe it, or think they believe, because "it is in the Bible"; but, when they look for the place, they cannot find it. Yet, still, they believe it, as firmly as if it were in the Bible. I remain yours in truth and love, WM. BOTHWELL.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, March 8, 1864.

DISCUSSION.

We have arranged to hold a discussion at Lyceum Hall, Lynn, Mass., with Eld. Moses Hall, of Battle Creek, Mich., commencing Tuesday evening, March 22nd, to continue four evenings.

QUESTION. "Has man in his nature an immortal principle, which, after the death of the body, is capable of returning and communicating with the inhabitants of earth?"

Aff.—Moses Hull. Neg.—Miles Grant.

Eld. Hull has been known for some years as a leading man among the Seventh-day Adventists. Within a few months he has joined the Spiritualists, and is being made quite prominent among them. He has been lecturing on Spiritualism, in Boston, for some weeks. We shall expect an interesting discussion.

THE TRACT FUND.

We are rejoiced to see the tract fund becoming an object of interest among our readers. This is a very favorable symptom of good. In this simple way a great work may be accomplished, and no one be burdened; indeed we shall all feel the better for what we do for the benefit of our fellow men. Let the refreshing streams come in from all directions, as when the Jews gave money to rebuild the temple. Give us the means to scatter tracts like autumn leaves. The people are greedy after them. We have never seen them more anxious to read than now. They are sighing for something not found in popular churches. Shall they have the light? We think we hear a tremendous response, "YES, if it is in our power to help send it." Let the quarters and dollars come in an overwhelming shower. Let us "sow beside all waters." Our work will soon be done. Shall it be "well done?" We have reason to thank the Lord that the way is open for us to use our spare money where it can hardly help accomplishing much good. Come, sit down this evening and write us a note and send the offering,—"Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver."

PITTSFIELD. N. H.

Our late meetings in Pittsfield were very interesting. That church is doing well. There are a goodly number of real living christians, who are known and read of all men. The community appear to be as much interested in the great truths of the Bible as at any time in the past, and apparently more so. The people are astonished at "the signs of the times." Many are convicted that we have the truth, but the fear of reproach keeps them in bondage, and is depriving them of a blessed hope, and great peace.

Some of our meetings were seasons of deep heart-searching, and produced some very noble confessions of faults, accompanied with a determined purpose, in the Lord, to live better than ever. They act like those who have counted the cost, and are willing to pay the price.

We had pleasant interviews with Bro. C. S. Emerson, S. S. Mooney, and Bro. Glidden, who preach the word.

On Lord's day, Feb. 28th, it was estimated that the Town Hall was crowded with some six hundred attentive listeners. The people looked thoughtful and solemn. In the evening we had a pleasant communion season. Three requested prayers. We trust the work is onward in that place. Many are fearful that the Lord is coming, who do not feel ready to meet him. The fear of man keepeth them from acting. In the midst of all the strong evidence showing that the coming of Jesus is near, there are many professed watchmen in our land, who are crying "peace and safety," —"good time coming,"—"do not be worried about those who are preaching the end of the world," etc. If it were not so, we should not know we were "in the last days," because this is to be one of the signs, when we are near the end.

THE WAR.

The Union army has met with some reverses lately in Florida, while there seems to be an advance in the neighborhood of Richmond. On the whole, we see no "silver lining" yet to the cloud that hangs over our nation. Our progress is only in the downward road to destruction.

The Boston Journal of March 1st, remarks: "It must be admitted that the opening of the spring campaign—if it can be regarded as having opened—is not quite so favorable as had been anticipated, although it presents nothing to dampen our hopes of the future. The reverse in Florida is not only to be deeply regretted for the losses involved, but it is mortifying from the apparent fact that we have still officers in responsible commands who appear to have learned nothing from all their experience in the war."

THE RISING STORM IN EUROPE.

Observing men are now quite well satisfied that a general war is about to open in Europe. They see but little hope of peace. All their efforts to control the war elements are about to result in a hopeless failure. They might as well attempt to stay the hurricane by a legislative enactment. The time appears to have arrived for the "winds" to "blow."

This is the time, for christians to lift up their heads, for their redemption is at hand. They are occupying a sublime position in this world's history. Praise the Lord for the blessed hope! that is like an anchor to sustain us in the coming storm.

Had it is believed and hoped that the Danes, like the Poles, will continue the war in the hope that ultimately they may receive help. By continuing the war Prussia may claim annexation of the Duchies as a compensation, and then France, claiming such an act as a violation of the treaty of London, may hold up the torn pieces of that treaty as an argument why she too ought to have a compensation for this aggrandizement of Germany on the North, and then will commence the march of the French army to the Rhine.

It is certain that, if the Danes decide to continue the war for the recovery of Schleswig, as they say they do, and if they continue it especially with any degree of success, the war in the spring will become general from one end of Europe to the other."

SPIRITUALIST NATIONAL CONVENTION.

At the late convention of Spiritualists in Boston, it was resolved to hold a "National Convention" during the coming summer, at some central point in the West. A committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements. They are talking of great events to be accomplished through the agency of spirits and their mediums. We think the time is at hand for strange developments. Let us beware of the snare of the devil, and all his "seducing spirits." Now is the time to keep near the Lord, if we would be safe from the wiles of the adversary.

Every one, who wishes to meet the Son of man at his coming, should beware of the principles taught by the spirits who claim to be the spirits of our deceased friends. All who make such claims may be reckoned as deceiving and lying spirits. They tell the truth at times, to gain the confidence of those they would deceive, as do other liars; but they are not to be trusted for one moment. They are very active at the present time, and as confident of success as they are active. Christian, gird on your armor. Do not sleep now, lest you be caught in Satan's snare.

"RELIGION OF THE DAY."

The following description of the religion of the day is from Bonar. We think the representation is not overdrawn, but short of the sad reality. He says:—

"The religion of the day is an easy-minded religion; a religion without conflict and wrestling, without self-denial and sacrifice; a religion which knows nothing of the pangs of the new birth as its commencement, and nothing of the desperate struggle with the Devil, day by day, making us long for resurrection-deliverance, for the binding of the Adversary, and for the Lord's arrival. It is a second-rate religion,—a religion in which there is no largeness, no grandeur, no potency, no noble-mindedness, no elevation, no self-devotedness, no all-constraining love. It is a hollow religion, with a fair exterior, but an aching heart, —a heart unsatisfied, a soul not at rest, a conscience not at peace with God; a religion marked, it may be, by activity and excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness of a wound hidden and unhealed within, and hence unable to animate to lofty doings, or supply the strength needed for such doings. It is a feeble religion, lacking the sinews and bones of hardier times,—very different from the indomitable, much-enduring, storm-braving religion, not merely of apostolic days, but even of the Reformation. It is an uncertain religion; that is to say, it is not rooted in certainty; it is not the outflowing of a soul assured of pardon, and rejoicing in the filial relationship between itself and God. Hence, there is no liberty of service, for the question of personal acceptance is still an unsettled thing; there is a working for pardon, but not from pardon. Hence all is bondage, heaviness, irksomeness. There is a speaking for God, but it is with a faltering tongue; there is a laboring for God, but it is with fettered hands; there is a moving in the way of his commandments, but it is with a heavy drag upon our limbs. Hence the inefficient, uninfluential character of our religion. It does not tell on others; for it has not yet fully told upon ourselves. It falls short of its mark, for the arm that drew the bow was paralyzed."

The foregoing corresponds with Paul's description of "the last days." Let each reader ask himself, am I helping on this lamentable state of things?

NEW TRACT.—"Our Country; what is to become of it?" To be had of W. Z. Harbert, Philadelphia. Price, per copy, 5 cts.; per dozen 50 cts.; per hundred, $3.00. This is a good tract for the times.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS IN FEBRUARY.

The prospect of 4,000 new subscribers in 1864 is brightening. Brethren are taking hold of the work in earnest. Never with more energy than now. January brought in 270 names, which was more than any previous month, and February a larger number still—360. Seven-ninths of these, or 280, were obtained by the efforts of friends whose names appear below. 630 in two months. This is certainly a very large and encouraging increase, and gives promise of what, with the help of the Lord, we may expect in the remainder of the year.

"How many more, in each of the ten months to come, will it need to make up the 4,000?" Only 337.

"But we obtained more than that, last month." Yes—360.

"Well, we can do that again, if we try, and overrun the 4,000."

You can; and more, if you WILL. You can, at least, do this—let no month to come fall short of the month past. Keep it up! It is the Lord's work. More volunteers are called for. Won't YOU enlist, and do what you can to push it along. Can't you get a subscriber to-day? TRY! Get another tomorrow. Another next week, and so on. Send on the money, and call for your premium. No time to lose. Time is short. Be up and doing. W. B. H.

TRACTS.

"As God hath prospered him."—1 Cor. 16: 2.

Such is the gospel rule of giving for all religious purposes. Who lives up to it? Do you? "Weighed in the balances and found wanting," will be the final verdict on one half the professors of christianity. Perhaps you don't understand this rule. Let me explain it. You are worth $500; you give $10 each year to the cause of your divine Master. Very well. Now suppose you in the same year are so prospered of God that you come to be worth $1000. Your substance is now doubled: the rule demands that you double your gift. Hence if you take heed to the inspired apostle you will give $20 instead of $10. And your gifts to the cause of God will increase in the same ratio as your worth increases. Suppose you are worth 50,000, and you give $1000 per annum. Then if you come to be worth $100,000, your gifts to God should be $2000. Else how will your benevolence keep pace with your accumulating wealth?

Again: your income or earnings this year amount to $400. You give of it $20. Next year you earn $800. Then you should give of the same $40,—all things being equal. Now you are enlightened, so figure up your worth, christian brother, and go by the Scripture rule.

Perhaps you will ask, "Thou that preachest a man should give, dost thou give? Answer. Ten years ago I established a rule of systematic benevolence. I said I would give all the way from $2 to $6 each month for religious and charitable purposes. I have done so according to my ability and prosperity. In the year 1863, my donations of this kind amounted to about one ninth of all my income. And I call myself a poor man. These facts you would never have known were it not for setting you an example. Hence I come with an unblushing cheek and an unfaltering voice and ask you, poor christian, well-to-do christian, rich christian, Have you heard the voice from heaven which demands that you "GIVE" "as God hath PROSPERED you? And hearing, will you dare to DISOBEY? D. T. T.

P. S.—Here they come. Five new ones helping me beg for the best cause under the sun. Well done, brethren T., M., B., C., and W. Stand aside, you stingy christian (?), or you'll get buried under a shower of two-thousand quarters.

From Bro. D. D. Chaffee.

BRO. GRANT:—When I first saw Bro. D. T. Taylor's tract assessment on the readers of the Crisis, I said to myself, I will send one dollar, which is twenty-five cents each for my household; but deferring a little, I began to think of my business prospects, which are not as good this season as usual for want of sledding to get in timber, and thought I might need the dollar for other purposes. But I am reminded by the milking principle in his last article, how well it has worked in times past, —one instance in particular.

After hearing a sermon once, I said it was worth a dollar to me, and at once paid it, besides fifty cents for my ride to meeting, and on my way home I picked up a turtle which I sold for just enough to pay the whole. And now I am reminded that not a dollar has come into my purse since I have deferred paying my tract assessment, but rather it has been drying up. So here goes the dollar. Come, brother and sister, file in, file into the tract column. Your Bro, D. D. CHAFFEE.

South Wilbraham, Mass.

P. S.—My wife adds thirty cents.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

BRO. GRANT:—You may put my name among the list for the Tract Fund, counting me among the two thousand of the poorest christians who read the Crisis, for I feel none need be so poor but that they can pay twenty-five cents; and so I will pay fifty, half for me, and the other half for some one that loves tea and money better than they do tracts. For my part I have lived ten years without drinking one cup of tea to my knowledge, and seldom drink any thing but water. It was a great sacrifice, and I thank God I was enabled to make it for his glory, and said I would drink no more till the Lord come; and when I see so much as has been written in the Crisis on tobacco and tea, I wonder there can be one left that will use it. I never saw the moment that I was sorry, and could I sacrifice it for others I would gladly do it; but I feel others can if they will. And now let us all send in our mite and heed what Bro. Taylor says in the Crisis of Feb. 9th.

Roxbury, Ct. SUSAN E. TEEPLE.

BRO. F. HOUSE, Dalton, Wis., writes:—"Seeing a call from Bro. Taylor for each of the subscribers to the Crisis to pay twenty-five cents to the Tract Fund, I cheerfully respond with twice the amount, hoping that all others will do likewise, and send in the amount before the first of April, so that these messengers of truth can be scattered over our land, that souls may be led to come out on the side of the Lord and live in the enjoyment of the hope of the soon coming of our Lord. [illegible]

BRO. GRANT:—Our devout Bro. Taylor, whom I never saw, suggests that two thousand of the poorest christians that read the Crisis send you "twenty-five cents" for the Tract Fund. I got my porte monnaie. It contained just twenty-five cents. I cheerfully enclose it, hoping I shall meet at least one in the promised land saved by reading the little heralds. SALLIE SNELL.

PROGRESS REPORTED.

"And still they come"! Men and women, young and more advanced, parents and children, still they come. In addition to all who have been converted, the number of whom I do not know, between thirty and forty were forward for prayers on last Saturday evening. All praise to God! Last evening there was the most perfect "jam" that I think I ever saw in and around a house of worship. When I got to the house I found every avenue obstructed with the swaying, crowding masses. In a loud voice I repeatedly demanded entrance, and commenced pushing and crowding this way and that, to the no small danger of certain modern "inventions" of a hidden nature which the women have "sought out," and at last reached the pulpit, where I found Rev. H. G. Day, and Dr. Hikock, President of Union College, waiting for me. I spoke on the angels gathering the saints at the last day.

My labors are abundant, and my health pretty comfortable. Thanks be to God. And thanks to Dr. A. M. Higgins of Palmer, Mass., through whose skill and kindness I found relief. If any of my friends are troubled with nervous diseases, I advise them to give him a call. EDWIN BURNHAM.

For the World's Crisis.

WANTED, A PASTOR,—

A good man, an efficient man, a laborer. One who loves to build up, not tear down; one who will gather, not scatter. One who studies,—a workman, not ashamed. One who loves the Holy Spirit and believes in revivals. One who has no hobby but Christ's speedy coming and kingdom, and a readiness for the same. Church from forty to fifty souls. House of worship holds four hundred. Salary from four hundred to four hundred and fifty dollars per annum. Village one of the largest and pleasantest in Vermont. Is on a railroad. A rare chance to do good, to work, to endure, to suffer, to play the peace-maker, to act the financier and get a burdened and struggling, but true-hearted and sacrificing church out of a debt of $1200, of which under an energetic pastor $600 could be lifted in a single day.

You now know all that is needed at present. Are you the man, my brother? Will you come and preach, pray and work for this people one or two months right off? Brethren Couch, Cole, Fenn, Burbank, Pratt, and others, what do you say? Will you at once open correspondence with one interested for our good cause in a very important and central place? Address D. T. TAYLOR, Castleton, Vt.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CAUSE IN MONTREAL.

DEAR BROTHER GRANT:—It is with great pleasure I address you. You must not think that on account of my silence I have forgotten you, nor have I forgotten the glorious meetings we had here in Montreal during the time of your preaching. Eternity alone will reveal the amount of good that was done through your instrumentality; and I am happy to inform you that God still continues to bless us as a church; and also that there is a gradual increase both of membership and congregation; and from the impression you have left behind, I feel persuaded had you been enabled to stop with us another week the wall of partition would have been broken down, and many, who now believe the doctrine you preached here, but have not joined us, would have come out with us, and boldly proclaimed the truth. We have on our books forty-seven names of those who have declared for Jesus; and there are others who are seeking the "pearl of great price." The Spirit of the Lord is amongst us, and is making many glad.

Last Sunday, Bro Porter, from Danville, visited us, and preached in the morning and evening on the coming of Christ, and the necessity of being ready to meet the Bridegroom. In the afternoon, at half-past two o'clock, we had prayer and conference meeting; and had you heard the testimonies of the brethren and sisters, you would have rejoiced, and your heart would have danced for joy. There was no delay, but one rose after another to speak of the goodness of God to them, and they also thanked God that he ever directed your footsteps to Montreal.

There was the infidel who had refused to receive the word of God, the skeptic fast following in his footsteps, and many who had made an outward profession of religion, but secretly believed it to be a cunningly devised fable, who bore testimony to the truth; and the burden of their prayers was, that God would bless Bro. Grant for being the instrument in his hand of awakening them out of their sleep, and arousing them to a sense of their danger. They now can rejoice in God as their Father and their friend. They stated in their experience that they had sat under the preaching of ministers in various places, but never felt the power of the truth as they do now. Ministers and people call this "infidelity," and you an "infidel." Is this "infidelity" that converts infidels? that makes men and women who hated God and his word love him and delight in his word? If so, it is the "infidelity" preached by the apostles, and taught by the prophets; and, with the help of God, we mean to know nothing else but this "infidelity," and still to continue in the truth, as revealed in God's word.

Among the many cases that have come under our notice, is one of a man who has lived an avowed infidel for many years, and his boast was that in his discussions with christian professors, he was always the victor. Having heard that an "infidel" was to deliver a lecture in Nordheimer's Hall, he thought he would go and hear it, in order that his views might be strengthened; but to his great surprise, he found this "infidel" the only person that ever expounded the Bible satisfactorily to his mind. He continued to go through the lectures, and the discussion that was held, and became convinced that if there was any truth in the Bible, the "infidel" understood it, whilst those who opposed him proved by their claims to [illegible] [illegible]. He still continues to [illegible] although he has not yet [illegible] says he is convinced that there is a reality in the religion of the Bible, but no consistency in that of the theology of the present day.

My Dear Brother:—I would say in conclusion on this subject, there still continues a growing demand for your tracts, especially the "Rich Man and Lazarus," and "What is Man?" We have not one left, and when we inquire for them, they have lent them to their friends and acquaintances, so the Lord is still continuing his work and making the hearts of his people to rejoice.

Our sisters have commenced a course of visiting each other and praying with each other. They carry tracts with them, and when opportunity presents itself, speak a word for God. Our members are in earnest, and God is blessing their labors. I remain your affectionate brother in the Lord,

WM. JOHNSTON.

N. B. The brethren in Montreal request any Elder passing by Montreal to stop a short time with us. Our cry is like that of the man of Macedonia, "Come over and help us!"

For the World's Crisis.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Since writing my last in November, I have been engaged in the mill six days in a week, and gone out on the Sabbath; hence have become a seventh-day believer. Working after four months' confinement, it was a privilege to answer some of the calls, and visit the battle fields of former times.

Boston, Lowell St. Found a standing army, armed and equipped. Had a good time. At Portsmouth, found them on good ground, ready to take hold. First Sunday morning thirty-seven good warm rounds were fired after preaching was over, before twelve o'clock. House full day and evening. Monday evening, Bro. Cole stopped on his way home from Elliot, and opened his battery. We had an old-fashioned shout in the camp. Astonished the rebels by surprise, and took a good number of prisoners.

We continued the meeting every evening during the week, interest increasing every day. Quite a number that had skulked into other ranks in the rear to get rid of the fire of the enemy for fear of the speech of people, came up again, loaded and fired publicly, and felt blessed in doing duty in the right position and place. They found God the Captain of our salvation would pay only such as stood up for the truth as they had received it.

Three in private conversation told me they had tried to get rid of the cross, and were in darkness; had no feeling, and were good for nothing any where. Wanted instruction, which was given as follows: God gives a dispensational truth to be preached, and those that receive it must hold up the light, or skulk back into the dark. Such must come out publicly and confess it to be blessed again. Several did it, and they had feeling enough, and a blessing followed which put new life into the meetings. On inquiry, it was found that there were as many such skulkers in the city as there were those who stood out for the truth and helped sustain it. It is so in many other places. Such will long for oil soon. But we saw a disposition in many to return during the meeting.

The second Sabbath was one of deep interest. The house was running over full in the morning, although a man by the name of Hull had scattered handbills stating that he had been a prominent Second Advent preacher for many years, and would tell all about his wonderful experience, in getting into Spiritualism, the next Sabbath in the Temple; but it seems by report that he was disappointed in not seeing more out in the forenoon, and dissolved their meeting for the sake of coming to ours, prepared to take notes. My subject was—"God's Mediums," the prophets, that wrote foretelling future events correctly, the angels being the spirits that communicated or moved their pens, etc. Then took up Spiritualism as the counterfeit which God said should come down in the last days in the form of Antichrist, which had been witnessed in that city, etc. I did not know Hull was in the house, supposing he was holding forth at the Temple.

After preaching I gave an opportunity for exhortation, as usual, when Hull arose and began to speak about his experience in the Advent cause, and told great things about what he was going to say at the Temple in the afternoon. I then mistrusted it was the Hull who was to preach in the Temple, and felt called upon to follow his remark, not knowing certainly that it was him, or anything I was going to say, only to call his remarks a piece of ill-manners, and if he was the Hull advertised, I never saw or heard of him before, and I had been acquainted with all their publications for twenty-two years, and had not seen his name, but believed him a disciple of Ann White's visions. When he cried out, "I never knew her." Bro. Young from East Boston spoke and said, it was Ellen White, which I corrected, and he made no reply. Victory began to turn, and the children began to shout. I felt I was speaking for God then, and told the people that he never came any nearer being a Second Adventist than one of Moses' disciples by keeping the seventh day and following Ellen White's visions, and called on the congregation to look at his head and face and they could see at a glance what he was. Some stood up to look, when he dropped his eyes and his brass caved in and the children gave another shout. I then felt from God to answer him in the language of Paul to one of the same stamp, looking him in the eye: "O full of all subtlety and mischief, thou child of the devil," etc., which caused another shout that drowned my voice, and I stopped. I advised all who wanted to hear the man to go to the Temple, for they would not do us any good, and their seats were wanted for others. This ended the forenoon meeting, he leaving with his host muttering, Grant was a gentleman, but I was a clown, so I understood. But I felt so clear in God, I was as willing to be called a clown by him as a gentleman.

P. M. House was completely packed, desk and all. Had a blessed time talking about Moses' prophet, which was Christ. See Acts 3: 22, 23. This subject interested the people very much. They stood up patiently. At four P. M., we retired to the water for baptism, which God recognized by blessing the candidates, and convicting sinners. Sunday evening, at the last meeting, more came, in spite of Hull's advertisement. Some said two hundred went away who could not get a place to stand in the house, while I took up the perils of the last days, one of which was to be the spirit of Jannes and Jambres. 2 Tim. 3: 8. This was the Spiritualism of the last days that [illegible] witnessing in this city; and if [illegible] Hull was once an Adventist, and had gone into Spiritualism, it only fulfilled 1 Tim. 4, where some in the last days would depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, etc. Thus ended eight days battle at Portsmouth, that gave a victory to the truth. The committee said the cause stood better than it had for ten years. Many see the difference between truth and error.

Next went to Lee. Found some good ones, but have been induced to hitch on to a sectarian load they cannot draw up hill. Doubling teams are of no use unless they can work together.

Next to Exeter. A few stood clear, hoping the coming protracted meeting would prove a blessing; but there are some elements there that will let, or hinder, the work of God until they are taken out of the way.

Next to Haverhill. Found a few holding on. Stopped with Bro. Timothy Cole. He has just been sick. Glad to see he is gaining, for he is needed in the vineyard. He contends for the Spirit of truth to set the word home; had good accommodations; felt like old times with Bro. and Sr. Cole.

Next went to Salem. This is a church that stands on the principles of the gospel, willing to live and let live, and go forward in every good word and work; but they need reviving.

Next to East Boston, another old battle-field, where we have had many a victory by storm. They hold their position, and must make another attack to get another victory.

Sunday, at Lowell St. Found them armed and equipped ready for another attack soon. This church stands on the principles they first started out on. As a band they keep clear of distracting hobbies, and are willing every one should work out what God works in. They like a variety, and few places are as free as this for a raw country preacher. I had a blessed good time with them, which ended a trip of three weeks, the first I have had since last fall.

I go home to attend to my business in the mill, going out on Sabbaths near by, and returning on Mondays. Those wishing my books must direct to me at Chicopee Falls, Mass., as there are none at the Crisis office.

Correspondence.

From J. L. Hopkins, San Francisco, Cal.

BRO. GRANT:—I now acknowledge the receipt of your kind letter received some months ago; also you and the brethren's kindness in sending the Crisis to enlighten my darkness and aid me in scattering a little light here in San Francisco, and on this coast. On receipt of some numbers of the Crisis, the first that came to hand, I was astonished on reading an article on the destruction of the wicked or no immortality out of Christ. I certainly thought you folks held great heresy. Well, it has taken me upwards of twelve months to see into this truth, as I begin to call it now. A few weeks ago, I was meditating on 1 Cor 15: 18,—"Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." I then felt to receive your views as the truth of God; hence the necessity for a resurrection. Heretofore, my views have been much with the Episcopal brethren on the subject of the second advent of Christ; now, since I see the immortality question, I feel to go in with you Advent brethren. I have been originally a Methodist; but when I learned the doctrine of the Lord's coming, I had to leave them, and walked right out, and ever since have been endeavoring to spread this truth abroad. For some few weeks past, I have been speaking on Sundays, on the street opposite one of our large hotels. I had to give up the City Hall, so few attended. I am now in the street till the Lord opens some other place. The last two Sundays, I spoke on the life and death question, in connection with the coming of the Lord, and some of my religious friends, thought certainly that I had got into great error. It was bad enough to believe in the second coming of Christ, as some of them think; but to believe in the annihilation of the wicked, was going over into lunacy. I conclude, praying the Lord's blessing to be with you till the coming of Jesus.

Yours in the blessed hope,

J. L. HOPKINS.

Bro. Hopkins is editing and publishing a paper in California, showing "the end of all things is at hand." We send him a lot of tracts to scatter among those seeking light. It is cheering to know that the Lord is raising up faithful men in various parts of the world to give the note of warning to the slumbering virgins. Events are ripening rapidly, and soon we may expect to see the Prince of Peace in all his glory and beauty. May the Lord bless Bro. Hopkins in his efforts to spread the light in California.—ED.

From J. B. Luther.

BRO. GRANT:—In searching after the truth, I was induced to subscribe for the Crisis three months. I have now received its weekly visits for about one year, and I feel to rejoice in the light it has thrown on my pathway, for its truth has made me free indeed. O, what joy it has brought to my poor soul, while traveling through this wilderness world, amid the perils of these last days, to hear of the kingdom of God and the soon coming of our blessed Savior, who brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

When I gave heed to the precious truths of the Bible, some of my pious friends told me I was gnawing the bone of contention. Bless the Lord, I have always found it meat in due season. While contemplating the reward that is promised to God's dear children, my heart longs to be there, where my joy shall be full, where I can see the dear Redeemer, who has done so much for me, and all the saints that sleep in Jesus.

We are wearing away, and the pleasures of earth are transitory; but, if we are Christ's, then we are Abraham's seed, and heirs, according to the promise, to an inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that will never fade away. The promise is that the meek shall inherit the earth. O, how comforting the thought. We may fall a prey to the enemy death, yet we shall come again from the land of the enemy and return to our own border. But when shall this glad day be ushered in? When Jesus comes to reign on the throne of his father David, and to gather his elect from out of all nations into the paradise of God.

O what joys are in store for God's dear saints, just think of it. Eden's lovely bowers [illegible] the river of life, its waters clear as crystal, [illegible] the tree of life, on either side of the river, [illegible] and it yielding its fruit every month; [illegible] —eat of the fruit of the tree of life, and never die; and drink of the water of the river of life, and live forever!

Seeing we look for such things, let us be diligent, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless. There is peace in believing, and joy in the Holy Ghost. But how much of the grace of God we need to keep us amid the perils of these last days!

I ask an interest in the prayers of God's people, that I may be kept from the evils that are in the world, and be saved in the kingdom of God when Jesus comes.

Hertford, C. E. J. B. LUTHER.

From Sr. M. Mathews.

BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN THE LORD:—I left Canada Feb. 5th, and rode in Nahum's chariot down through old Vermont among the roughest sort of men, drunken, swearing soldiers! O, thought I, if this is the sort of men it takes to "support the Union," let the Union go.

Now I want to say a word about Whitakerville. The people seem willing to hear the truth. Congregations are large and attentive. There are a very few pilgrims here. But they have been neglected by most of the preaching brethren, and sadly injured by some that have visited them, in the following manner: Appointments have been given in the papers by preachers, the people have come out, and when the time came a disappointment came with it. So people in general have lost confidence in Advent preachers, concluding that he whom the Lord calls to preach is also called to keep his engagements.

If any of God's ministers believe in going out into the "highways and hedges," here is a good place to labor. But they need not come here full of pride and popularity, but in the Spirit of Christ and his "good religion," as Bro. Boutell calls it.

Another thing, they do not want anybody here that contradicts the doctrines Christ and his apostles used to teach,—they are just so particular. They believe "the soul that sinneth shall die," and that "there shall be a resurrection both of the just and the UNJUST."

Sunday, Feb. 14th, Bro. Frank Streeter, from Northfield, Mass., came and helped on the work. He has not been preaching long, but the church here were satisfied that he had not "missed his calling." I am glad God is still calling out young, strong, healthy, sensible men to publish the good news of the kingdom. Brethren, let them have your sympathies.

My address will be, for a while, Athol, Mass., care of Eld. Geo. A. Streeter.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. NEWELL S. TUCK writes from Albion, Me.:—"You will find —— enclosed for the paper another year. I am satisfied that I can do without the money better than without the paper. It is the only paper I know of that advocates the doctrine of Christ and the apostles in its simplicity. I am glad we have such a weekly visitor, for truly it is received with joy, and affords comfort and satisfaction while perusing the letters from our brethren and sisters in the Lord. I hope the Lord will bless us all and guide us by his unerring counsel through this world of sin and temptation, and afterward receive us into the kingdom of God."

Bro. L. VON ESCHEN writes from Eau Claire, Wis.:—"The cause of the Lord is gaining ground in this part of the great field. Quite a number have lately enlisted in the army of the Lord, and the people generally are more awake. The Spirit is doing its work. Believers are strengthened and blessed, and feel more determined to overcome, so as to be ready to receive the crown to be had at the appearing of Christ. Truly, this is a comfort. Your Bro. in Christ."

Bro. J. O. PARKER writes from Bell Centre, Crawford Co., Wis.:—"We are almost alone in our belief, in this place. There are some of almost every belief, and of no belief. We very much need a gospel preacher here, one who will preach the truth. If such a one is to be had, we heartily invite him to come and labor with us."

Bro. I. DAMMAN writes from Lincolnville, Me., March 4th:—"The Lord is at work here. There is much interest to hear on the present state of things. Some six or more have expressed interest in their soul's salvation. God pity the people, is my prayer."

For the World's Crisis.

IS THE TWO-HORNED BEAST PAST OR FUTURE?

If his rise be yet future, the vials are also in the future, all of them; because the pouring out of the first vial caused a grievous sore to fall on those who have the mark of the beast and those who worship his image. So that the two-horned beast must be in existence and must have set up the image previous to the pouring out of the first vial. And if the first vial be not poured out, certainly the sixth is not, and the spirits of devils have not yet gone forth; and the deepest students of prophecy are under a great mistake in an important point; and last, though not least, the Lord is not so near as we hoped, as the pouring out of the vials must occupy considerable time.

Again, if this important prophecy be fulfilled in the past, by what or whom was it fulfilled? Was it the papacy? Was not the papacy the mouth of the first beast who was to continue forty-two months? so it could not fulfill the part of another beast until after that time expired. Has the papacy played so conspicuous a part in history as is ascribed to the second beast since the termination of the 1260 days in 1798? I think all will say no. Then if the papacy fulfills the prophecy it is yet future.

But the first and second beasts are contemporary, because the two-horned beast performs his miracles in the sight or presence of the beast. Rev. 13: 14. But, says one, his number is 666, which can apply only to the name Lateinos. Question: Is it not clear that the name of the first beast is meant,—it is called the name of the beast, not the name of the image of the beast, and the mark of the beast, not of the image. But says another, "Daniel speaks of only four beasts, and if the two-horned beast be not Rome, then there is a fifth beast." Yes, Daniel speaks of four universal empires, but John divides the fourth one, and calls some of the divisions beasts. Rev. 17: 9-11, also 11: 7. [illegible] the same thing, and is supposed to symbolize France. Now if France may be a beast, may not Spain or Great Britain also deserve that appellation?

Has the part of Revelation been fulfilled by the holy alliance of Europe as supposed by some? To this view I would object, that two kingdoms unless united under one ruler could not be a two-horned beast. Again it is the beast and his image, not images, as their several ecclesiastical establishments would be.

After much careful study and earnest seeking for truth, I am come to the following conclusions:

1st. That this prophecy has been for the most part fulfilled in the past.

2nd. That it has not been fulfilled by the papacy.

3rd. That it begun to be fulfilled some time before the 1260 days terminated, and consequently before Rome lost her power over the nations.

4th. That we are under the pouring out of the sixth vial, and that the Lord is near.

These few hints I would modestly present to the readers of the Crisis, asking for them a candid investigation; and may the Lord give us the light we so much need, and enable us more to realize that the word as regards this world is almost fulfilled, and that the great day is almost upon us. O may we all be ready! Yours in hope,

Massena, N. Y. WILLIAM MORPHY.

Obituaries.

RUTH ESTELLE DURKEE.

Died, in Danielsonville, Ct., Feb. 5th, 1864, of diphtheria, Ruth Estille, youngest daughter of Charles and Esther Durkee, aged thirteen years and twenty-one days.

Another leaflet has fallen a victim to that terrible disase diphtheria. A lovely flower nipped in the bud, was doomed to droop and die. Estelle was an affectionate child, of keen susceptibilities, and a mind far riper than her years. She was the idol of the family; the object around which centred the hopes of a doting father, the anxieties of a christian mother, and the admiration of loving sisters. But death loves a shining mark, and Estelle, not unlike other fair flowers, faded neath the blightings of earth. But we trust, when Eden smiles again, she will bloom with more than earthly freshness and beauty, for the sleeping dust will not be forgotten by Him who once said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." May this deep affliction be sanctified to this bereaved family; that they may make a family entire in the kingdom of God. Sermon by Bro. Wm. A. Fenn. ANN E. BENNETT.

HERMON SMITH.

From infancy he presented a thoughtful mind in reference to the salvation of mankind, often asking questions about the dear Savior who came to save little children. The Bible was his chief delight. For more than a year he wished that he might be baptized and be all ready when the Lord shall come. The hearts of the parents are sad, yet with the Shunamite woman they can say, "It is well with the child." On the arrival of the Young Pilgrim, he was ready to peruse its pages with eagerness. A few days previous to his death, when thought to be dying, he revived and saw them weeping; "Do not feel bad. If I live it will be right. If I die it will be well with me." The Sabbath School was his delight.

And now, little children, may you all live so that if you fall asleep in Jesus you will come up in the resurrection. G. B. WHITFORD.

ANDREW STANFORD.

Died, near Ottawa, Ills., Mr. Andrew Stanford, aged sixty-three years and two months.

The circumstances of Mr. Stanford's death were truly distressing. He had occasion to ride some distance from home to see about his calves that were in a corn field. Night came, but he did not come home. It was very cold, and snowing. His daughter went for help to search for him, but did not succeed; and they were obliged to spend the night alone in awful suspense. In the morning he was found in the field dead.

Sr. Stanford's confidence is strong in God's promises. Mr. S. was friendly to her faith, and was willing to help in the cause. She needs the prayers of God's people. His funeral was attended by Eld. Zenas Colman, Baptist minister in this city. LUCY M. WARD.

JAMES ALLDRIDGE.

Our dear young brother died in hope of a glorious immortality. The writer was blessed with the privilege of being by his bedside at the time of his departure. He very much enjoyed a season of prayer in the evening, often responding "Amen." In answer to the question if the Lord was near him, he said, "This great hope sustains me." At four o'clock in the morning he sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. A dear wife and child are bereft of a kind husband and affectionate father, and other relatives mourn his loss.

E. BELLOWS.

ROBERT REDDING.

Died in South Bend, Ind., Feb. 1st, 1864, Robert Redding, aged sixty-eight years.

Bro. R. was a member of the M. E. church for over thirty years, and was a good working member. Some twelve years since he changed his views on the nature of man and the destiny of the wicked. For a time he knew of none who held similar views. But on hearing Bro. and Sr. Mansfield, he recognized the new views he had embraced, and united with the Advent church in Buchanan, Mich., of which he continued an active and worthy member till his decease. He died in the full faith and hope of immortality at the coming of Christ.

J. V. HIMES.

JOHN SPENCER.

Died, Sept. 14th, 1864, at Camp Denison, Ohio, of the seventh regiment R. I. Vols., John Spencer, son of Jonathan Spencer, of Exeter, R. I., aged thirty-eight years, one month, twenty-four days.

John was a young man of good habits, and much esteemed by all who knew him, always possessing a kind and even disposition, which much endeared him to those of his acquaintance. His death is a great bereavement to his aged parents, on whom hung their earthly hopes in their decline of life. In his last sickness he professed to find peace in Jesus. His body was brought home and interred in the family yard on the old homestead. Funeral services were held at Fisherville. Discourse from 2 Tim. 4: 8. E. BELLOWS.

LOUISA HEWITT.

Died in Hartford, Ct., of consumption, Louisa Hewitt, aged eighteen years and six months.

Louisa fell asleep in Jesus. She loved the Savior, and the next sound that will break upon her ear will be the archangel's trump, then mortal will put on immortality. O blessed hope! A. H.

GREAT GUNS.—The pair of great guns which government is having cast—one in New Jersey and the other in Pennsylvania—are to carry shot weighing about one thousand pounds each, which will penetrate the iron armor of vessels as a rifle-ball will go through a sheet of tin. The weight of each will be in the vicinity of 110,000 pounds, and the cost of each about $30,000. They are to be smooth-bores, but the Ordnance Bureau is now having "rifled" on the James plan all the smooth-bore heavy guns on the fortifications around this city.

LONDON, Feb. 20. The Paris correspondent of the Times says that Napoleon will not fail any opportunity given him to march French troops to the Rhine.

Twelve Austrian men-of-war are ordered to sea to protect German merchantmen.

French policy appears to be settling in favor of Denmark, and some of the journals utter warnings to Prussia.

The Germans were repulsed on the 18th in a general attack on the whole line of the Danish position.

THE WAR IN DENMARK.

A Copenhagen telegram says the German troops have entered Jutland in considerable force. The Germans attacked the Danish outposts along the whole line on the 18th, but after several hours engagement, were repulsed, but occupied all their former positions.

A Danish iron-clad monitor attempted to destroy the bridge thrown over to Egernsund, but was not successful.

A Danish frigate in the English Channel has overhauled numerous vessels, including an American barque.

War risks were being paid on belligerent vessels in England.

The Frankfort Diet has resolved that an embargo shall be placed on Danish shipping in all German ports, in consequence of the Danes having laid an embargo on all German shipping.

The Austro-Prussian note to the minor German States declares that they do not recognize the necessity of a Federal reserve being stationed in Holstein. Should such a want arise, the Great Powers would place at the disposal of the Diet a sufficient reserve for execution purposes. It is expected that this note will aggravate the prevailing indignation of the minor States at the high-handed proceedings of Austria and Prussia.

ITALY.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says that rumors not unlike those afloat preceding the Italian war are in circulation. Now, as then, it is said, agents are in France buying arms and munitions of war, of all descriptions, for account of the Italian Government, and naval stores are purchased by them with the permission of the French government. It is consequently conjectured that an attack on some port of the Adriatic is contemplated by the Italian Government.

POLAND.

The insurgents attacked the Russian garrison at Konskie and drove the Russians out of the town. The Russians were then attacked by other insurgents and defeated with heavy losses.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 20. The Paris correspondent of the Times asserts that Napoleon will not fail by any opportunity given him to march on the Rhine.

There is little credence in the alleged intention of France to recognize the Confederates.

FOUR DAYS LATER.

Liverpool, Feb. 24th, Queenstown 25th.

The London Morning Post's city article says the reports from Paris are still more positive that confidential negotiations are progressing between England and France for the joint recognition of the Confederates, and if England refuses France will act alone.

It is reported that the Mexican financial plans are matured. They include a plan of £20,000,000 sterling.

A Hamburg telegram announces that the Prussians have evacuated Jutland, but a Berlin paper says they retained possession of Rodling, with orders not to advance beyond that point. The Germans are busily engaged in demolishing Dannerwerk at Schleswig.

On the 22d the Prussians attacked the whole Danish lines at Duppel. The Danes were driven but finally reoccupied their former positions. It is asserted that Denmark is about to announce the blockade of all Schleswig-Holstein ports.

The Times thinks it probable that the spring will see a revolution in Germany.

☞ The Clarion (Penn.) papers state that a fatal disease has broken out in that county. The disease is noted by a sudden trembling of the body and arms, which is followed by slight symptoms of fever, and paralysis of an arm and the lower limbs, with severe pains in the back, and finally the vision becomes affected. Physicians are unable to determine its character. It is neither typhoid nor spotted fever.

CONFERENCE IN BOSTON.

The church of the Lord Jesus Christ worshiping at Lowell Street Chapel, Boston; to those of like precious faith, and who wait for the Son of God from heaven, greeting:—

Beloved in the Lord, we give thanks to our heavenly Father, who hath loved us and blessed us with all spiritual blessings, that through his grace we trust we are enabled to continue steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, and fellowship, and in the breaking of bread, and in prayers, and that God in his rich mercy yet is pleased, as we trust, to count us as members of his little flock, and to grant us peace and unity among ourselves, and some degree of prosperity as a church of Christ.

We give thanks to God also, that we have been so kept by the power of God, that we have not been moved away from the hope of the gospel, but that we have been enabled to continue in the faith rooted and grounded, holding fast those principles of the doctrine of Christ, repentance from dead works, and faith toward God, the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment; and that in the patience of hope we do yet wait for the coming and kingdom of our Lord, believing that yet a little while, and he that shall come will come and will not tarry, and that now the just shall live by faith.

And as the signs of the times indicate that we are among the predicted perils of the last days, and that we are approaching those scenes of final trouble such as never was, which shall convulse the world with sorrow and distress, we have thought it good to invite our brethren in Christ and the preachers of his word, who are interested in these momentous themes, without distinction of sect or name, to meet us at our place of worship, at the CORNER OF LOWELL and CAUSEWAY STREETS, BOSTON, on Tuesday evening, April 5th, 1864; and to continue with us over the coming First Day of the week:

To unite in worship and thanksgiving to God for his abundant mercies to all men, and us who have learned his will and tasted that he is gracious:

To offer up our prayers, and supplications and intercessions for all men; for kings and all that are in authority, that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty; for the peace and prosperity of mankind, and the spreading abroad of the gospel among the nations; for the church of Jesus Christ, that they may all come to the unity of the faith, and may be enriched in every christian grace, and preserved blameless till the appearing of the Lord, being delivered from the devices of evil men and the power of lies, and the delusions of Satan;

For the ministers of the word of God, that they may be preserved from errors of faith which distract and divide the church, and from sins of practice which dishonor the Lord and his truth; that God may mercifully deliver them from ignorance and prejudice, give them great understanding in the mysteries of his word, and great boldness and an open door for the declaring of the same; and also to unite in praying the Lord of the harvest that he may send forth laborers into his harvest, who shall be men of God, men of faith, of zeal; men of patience and love, purity and power; men who fear the Lord and hate covetousness, and that thus he may preserve unto us the faithful ministration of his word to the end:

To listen to the proclamation of the truth of God for the edification of the church, and to the preaching of the glad tidings of the salvation and kingdom of God, and to give heed to the sure word of prophecy, which is as a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise:

To exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching, thus confirming the souls of the disciples that they may be of good courage, even though they must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God:

To invite sinners to Christ, the refuge from approaching wrath; to warn the perishing of their impending danger, and point them to their great deliverer, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world:

To encourage each other in the great work of saving men and proclaiming the gospel in the regions beyond, thus sounding out the word of the Lord: and,

To remember the death of Christ in the breaking of bread and the drinking of the cup which he has given us, by which to testify our grateful recollection of his sorrows, and to show forth his death till he shall come.

For these objects we invite our brethren, and sisters, and the servants of the Lord, and shall make them welcome to our worship, our homes, and our hospitalities; trusting that we may thus be blessed and comforted together. And we desire the prayers of God's people that the good hand of God may prosper us in our meeting together; that we may gather in harmony, and love, and quietness, that we may be mercifully preserved from all confusion and strife, from vain jangling and bitterness of speech, from all perverse disputations and words that edify not, and from all sectarian narrowness of spirit, and that endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, we may honor and glorify our heavenly Father, and make ready for the marriage of the Lamb and the approaching kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.

On behalf of the church:

H. L. HASTINGS, GEO. T. ADAMS, } Elders.

J. G. HAMBLIN, GEO. T. ADAMS, J. S. NILES, M. H. PIPER, S. HOVEY, J. B. RICH, GEO. E. FOSTER, } Committee.

Bro. and Sr. Mansfield will be present to minister in the word of truth, and will commence evening meetings on Tuesday, March 15th. All the Brn. and Srs. of northern and middle Ohio are earnestly invited to be present, as business of importance to the cause of truth will come before the meeting. By order of the church.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—

Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive one third the value of the money sent, in any of our books and tracts they may select. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollars' worth; for twelve dollars, four dollars' worth, etc.

Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

LINES ON THE DEATH OF [illegible] CRAMER.

By her Teacher, [illegible]

Another lovely flower is gone,
Cut down in early bloom,
Has drooped and faded from our view—
It rests within the tomb.

Her gentle voice is hushed in death,
The voice we loved so well,
But still it cannot be forgot,
'Tis locked in mem'ry's cell.

Yes, those who knew her loved her, for
Her love she gave to all,
And when we think she's passed away,
The burning tears will fall.

Yet parents do not call her back
To this sad world of pain,
For though she now is laid to rest,
You soon shall meet again.

Your hearts by grief are sadly rent,
You mourn your darling one,
But look above and humbly say—
"Thy will, not ours, be done."

For there alone is balm to heal
The bleeding, broken heart,
Ah! when you meet your child again,
You never more will part.

No, never part, for when Christ comes
Your darling you will see,
Derive sweet comfort from the thought,
That short the time will be.

* * * * *

Then meekly 'neath this sorrow bow,
And kiss the chast'ning rod;
Let this affliction draw your souls
Nearer to heaven—to God.

For the World's Crisis.

WHERE ARE WE DRIFTING?

At any time it is well for us to inquire seriously, Where are we drifting? But in this perilous hour, when there is so little of the genuine that, of seeming necessity, the counterfeit must be allowed to pass current, we have need to be especially on the alert.

I have beheld with much solicitude, during the last six years, our tendency as a people toward church organization, as it is called. In this time we have lost much love of God, and gained much love of church organization. In our younger days as a people our motto was "Christ"; for a few years past it has been "The Truth"; but it is fast sliding into "The Church." The past change is clearly marked, and the present tendency to a change is no less so. Yet the transition is so gradual, and the idea of such a change is so unwelcome to the natural pride of a people, that few seem aware of it, and less still are burdened with the thoughts of it.

We read in the New Testament of churches in various places, and understand according to the signification of the original that they are simply congregations of believers. We read also of appointing elders in those congregations or churches, but we no where read of organizing those congregations, as it were, into churches. We read also of a Conference held by the apostles and elders; but so far as we can gather from the New Testament, the twelve apostles in all their ministry did not do so much Conference business, by a half, as we have done in either one of the last six years. I am aware that some of our gatherings called Conferences are wholly devoted to prayer, exhortation, and preaching—religious mass meetings—and I would that all were so, for such conferences are what we need; but most of them are devoted prominently to legislation on the things of God.

They would be recognized as "The Advent Christian Conference," bounded by State or other limits; hence all churches within these limits not co-operating would be regarded as outsiders instead of brethren, after a few Conferences, and all preachers who could not co-operate would be treated very much like dissenters, while the Conference would insensibly take the Advent Christian cause within its limits into its own hands after a little.

This tendency to organization every where seems to partake too much of vain glory. A mutual co-operation of brethren in large gatherings for prayer, exhortation and preaching,—similar to Conferences, except the Conference business,—would prove to our profit without ostentation; but the organization of Conferences for conference business seems too much like an attempt to force from society the acknowledgment that we are a church among other churches, and entitled to a proper rank with them. Our Master "made himself of no reputation," but this looks too much like a vain strife for a reputation. In keeping with this feeling, some felt tenderly the slight when Dr. Baird, in his "Religions of America," did not enumerate us as a people, or a denomination.

The reasons urged for organization are various, but they may be reduced to three; viz., that the body may be more united; that the church may be saved from the intrusion of impostors by keeping them out, and the burden of delinquents by turning them out; and that she may have a better command of the resources and talent of the church. That organization will unite all those who co-operate, it is quite evident. But such an arrangement would not fail to unite the worldly, the proud, the covetous, and all who co-operate. May such a union be called a "christian union"? When a church takes this step, she always leaves some of her better members behind protesting against such a course, while the proud and worldly are pushing the matter on, determined to be "like other churches."

That the talent of the church will be more at the command of the church, I am free to allow; but I must also insist that those who enter the ministry at the call of a Conference are seldom called of God. A Conference generally judges a man by his talents, but God never does. The resources of a church might be more generally called out by a systematic organization of the body, but if God was allowed to call on his servants as he wanted them, there would be less squandered.

As to impostors in the church, there is no organized church but abounds in those who preach for hire, and handle the word of God deceitfully; and as to delinquents, they are seldom turned out unless they are too poor to be of pecuniary benefit, or too devoted to resign the right of believing God's word for themselves.

I ask, then, has organization saved other churches? It has kept up their existence, it is true; but such an existence is generally a burden, and often a reproach to the cause of Christ. When once a church has become fully organized, the protection and prosperity of that church begins to intrude itself upon the pastors as their special, if not their sole duty. The prosperity of the church is estimated according to the increase of its members, their character not considered; while [illegible] is protected by turning out those who love God and his word more than they do the church. There is no more [illegible] [illegible] the Church for Christ in our de[illegible] votions, yet every church slides insensibly into this fault soon after she becomes organized.

I know my brethren fondly hope to escape these evils so characteristic of other churches. But where is the room for hope? Has any one church redeemed herself spiritually by organization? Has not the reverse been true rather? Have they not uniformly made this period in their history the point where they commenced to substitute the Church for Christ? Why then hope that we shall be the solitary exception to this universal rule? Do we hope to profit by their misfortunes, and evade the rock on which they split? Trust it not! it is a snare of Satan. We have no more holiness than they had, no more wisdom than they had, with the folly of a hundred such mistakes before them, while our arguments are identically the same as urged by those who have used them plausibly, but failed lamentably.

We once rejoiced in a liberty from all shackles, but I fear that we are now forging them for others. It cannot be wisdom in us to devote ourselves in these days of our barrenness to building up what we in the fear of God in our better day sought to demolish! In the absence of that heavenly wisdom and trust in God which we then had, are we better judges of the necessary aids and probable hindrances of a spiritual people? Did not the truth then appear manifest, that "by one Spirit are ye all baptized into one body," and "are all made to drink into one Spirit"? And was not that the true christian union? But why are we without that union now? Dare we say that we have the "self-same Spirit"? It is manifest that we have not, and therefore are not baptized by it into "one body." Shall we then seek some other union as a substitute? God forbid! We want none other than a christian union.

Then let us each and all get the Spirit of God in our hearts, and we shall find no need of any other bond of union. Let us each as branches unite ourselves to Christ the vine, and we shall find ourselves "drink into one Spirit" and bear similar fruit. We shall then put away this pursuit of the wrong object, and make Christ our all in all. I trust that this day is but just before us, but I look for it to come through persecution, when "organization" will be thrown to the winds. May our God in mercy hasten the day.

A SKETCH.

I have recently been reading a brief sketch of the various adventurers who have been sent out to make new discoveries in the Polar seas. Some were induced to go from the mere love of travel and adventure, others from an intense desire to acquire useful knowledge respecting various sciences, while another class were influenced solely by their ambition to gain great honor, and obtain the large bounties offered to those who should acquire information respecting certain lands and passages. All who enlisted in this work knew they were subjecting themselves to great hardships, and imperilling their lives in pursuit of the desired object.

Those adventurers of more modern date were warned by the intense sufferings, and often death, of their predecessors, so that they did not rush blindly upon their fate; but the various motives which were brought to bear upon their minds induced them to risk all hazards for the attainment of the desired object. Often they were reduced to the last extremity for want of food, or almost perished with the severe frosts. Usually these explorers were so hedged in by the ice of those frozen regions, that they were obliged to wait through the long and dreary winter before they could sail to a warmer clime. Sometimes they built themselves houses upon the land, and dwelt in them, with the snow piled up all around them, and the cold so intense as to cover their beds and garments with frost, even when a large fire was burning in their huts. For several months the sun would be hid from their view, and they had no light but that of the snow and stars.

And for what were they thus sacrificing all the comforts of home and companionship of friends? What were they to gain by subjecting themselves to all these miseries? Some wanted to gain important information, that would enrich the mind; others gained for themselves great honor, an enduring fame; while a few won the bounty offered by their sovereign. But all the advantages reaped by those who were fortunate enough to endure the hardships, and escape the dangers, were of brief enjoyment. A few years and all had to be relinquished, and they yield themselves to the power of death. They found no Eden land when exploring far distant shores; but desolate and icy regions, where there was naught to entice them to linger. They found no "Tree of Life," of which if a man eats he shall never die; but a barren soil, where no refreshing fruit could grow. They found no mines of gold and silver, yielding a rich recompense to the toiling miner; but snow, and frost, and icebergs towering high.

In making these explorations, the Arctic adventurer was unaided by a chart, and the magnetic needle, upon which they so much depended for direction, often wavered and failed to turn due north, as is its wont.

From these voyagers we may learn a profitable lesson. The undaunted courage they manifested, the indomitable perseverance with which they sought to gain their object, the patience with which they endured their sufferings, while the reward of their toil was of a mere temporary character, ought to shame us who are seeking a better, even an heavenly country, who expect to gain an everlasting kingdom extending over the entire earth, no longer barren with its perpetual snows and icy bands, or arid sands, but clothed with unfading verdure. Where no chilling winds nor poisonous breath will bear disease and death to earth's inhabitants, but the balmy zephyrs that waft o'er Eden's plains will be fraught with immortal health, and be laden with the sweet perfume of flowers that

Fruits, of richness such as ne'er belonged to a sin-cursed earth, will grow in profuse abundance, and every delight, every pleasure that an immortal mind can desire, will be the eternal portion of those who gain the blessed port of Paradise. The Son of God will be there with his ransomed flock, and lead them with a rod of love, and peace shall be his sceptre. Resplendent with a glory exceeding the sun's noon-tide splendor, a glory irradiating gems of every hue, and pearls such as ne'er shone on monarch's brow, will be the palaces of earthly kings, or the combined treasures of every worldly sovereign.

And all this loveliness, all this glory, all this wealth, is to be the portion of every successful voyager. To aid them in gaining this "happy land," an unerring Chart is given to every one who sails on board the "Old Gospel Ship Zion," and all may learn the directions and waymarks, and know when they are nearing the harbor.

And now shall not we who are so near to the "better land" that we can through the Telescope discover the mountain tops, already radiant with the excelling glory, be of good courage, and endure the brief hardships with cheerfulness, knowing we soon shall gain the heavenly world, and immortal life with its attendant joys? HOLINESS OF HEART.—No. 6.

This perfection of holiness is not attained in a moment, in a day, nor by the first dedication of one's self to God. When one fully and heartily repents of all his sins he is as readily forgiven and his transgressions are cancelled. When the heart is thus purified it is prepared for holiness; but it is the holiness of the child and not of the full-grown man.

True holiness is a plant of slow growth. But when it is properly nourished it is, like the evergreen, perpetually growing. Such holiness is within the reach of all men who come within the sound of the gospel. It is the grace and gift of God, but it must be accepted by man. To become holy the selfish will must yield to the divine. Obeying God contributes to man's highest enjoyment. Dedicating ourselves to him, consecrating our best power to his service, holiness will be promoted, and the cause of God extended and our enjoyment increased.

Holiness is the law of God, the law of life, the law of divine contentment. Guided by this rule, being diligent and devoted in duty, engaged in human improvement, enlisted in the great and good work of reform, persevering to the end of the christian race, there remains a promise of a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory in the world to come! Certainly these are inducements of no little importance. These are characteristics of greatness in man which demand a careful consideration.

Man is a creature of probation. Every power he possesses may as readily prove the instrument of his downfall as the source of his happiness. Controlled by the power of reason, directed by judgment and incited by holy motives, man is found on the side of mercy, building up himself in the act to benefit society.

Sin defiles the soul, is polluting in its touch, distressing in its nature, and dreadful in its consequences. Holiness eradicates sin and turns our faculties to better employments, inspires the soul with noble purposes, and gives man the highest aim of life.

How holy must the christian become? Is there a limit beyond which we cannot advance? Is there any point beyond which we cannot go? May we ever expect to be so thoroughly sanctified that temptation will not reach us? Is there any indication in the Bible that we shall get to be too good if we continue to walk in Christ as we have received him?

Is sanctification the natural result of the new birth? Does the Bible teach us that sanctification is a separate work not confined to but following after genuine conversion? Is it an entire new work that christians must perform? Bible holiness we would understand, enjoy and defend. Just such sanctification as this demands, we claim nothing less will meet the demand; and any thing beyond this is not required. A. A. LASON.

HAVE YOU FAITH?

We have arrived at a day and age of the world, when it is needful for a christian to exercise a large degree of faith. Has it not been always needful for a follower of Christ to exercise much faith? Yes, for the apostle tells us that "without faith it is impossible to please God." See Heb. 11: 6. And he further tells us what faith is (Heb. 11: 1), "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

We are living in dark and perilous times, all around us is total darkness to the natural eye. Is it not needful, therefore, that we should have the evidence of things not seen in order to carry us through this darkness? For every day as we are nearing the judgment, we find that every thing looks darker and darker to the world, and men's hearts are failing them for fear and for looking after those things that are coming upon the earth. The reason is, they do not possess this faith or evidence of things not seen.

Dear reader, have you this faith, or are you groping about in the darkness? Examine yourself, and if you find that you have not, come to Christ and obtain it before it is too late. And you that have obtained it, exercise it daily, and try to convince those around you of the things that are speedily to overtake them. C. H. SWEET.

OFFEND NOT.

"It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones."

Think what an awful thing it must be, for a man to have a large millstone hung around his neck and to be carried to the sea, and thrown in, never to rise again until God calls him to be judged. It mattered not to him who spake these words, how many dear friends he would have, or how they would mourn, or suffer at his departure. Yet, it was far better that this thing should happen unto him, than that he should offend one of God's little ones. O! how careful ought we to be that we offend not, neither in word nor deed, "for the same is a perfect man." Think of Jesus while on earth, who is our example.

If a brother or sister comes to us, and asks us not to do a certain thing, that we are doing every day (and know it is wrong), because it offends them, how can we do the same thing, and still call ourselves the friends of Jesus? How many of us are doing the same things, and say we cannot resist the temptation. O! it were better for us that these things should happen unto us than that we offend one of these little ones. Think of this, brethren, and when they ask you to fight, tell them—Not for this country, but of God, which is sharper than their two-edged swords. For it were better that you be killed, hung, or handcuffed and cast into prison, than that you should have murder in your heart, or even hurt; for none such can ever enter the kingdom of God.

May God grant us grace to withstand all until Jesus comes. N. DIXON.

PURITY OF HEART.

Christ says in his sermon on the Mount, "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God." And he taught the necessity of purity of heart always, both by precept and example. The Spirit commands that we follow in his steps, and even says that those who have the hope of seeing Christ and being made like him, purify themselves even as he is pure. (1 John 3: 3.)

Now if this is true, and who will doubt it? we will have to be a little more anxious about our salvation than we have been, most of us. We will have to work out our salvation in the old-fashioned way, viz., with fear and trembling. Yes, we must love God with all the heart and mind, and then we will love to do his will—all of it—then the God of all grace will give us grace as we need, to serve him acceptably. And if we are required to make our hearts as pure as Christ's heart, we shall have to be free from sin, for "in him was no sin."

"But," says one, "that is impossible." I reply, It is not impossible, for would God ask us to do that which he knew to be impossible?

Many are the passages in the New Testament Scriptures that might be brought forward to prove the necessity of purity, perfect purity of heart, and many of the noble examples might be noticed to show the peace and joy there is in this path, but there is no use in talking to those that love self better than Christ. And to them that love Christ better than self a word is sufficient.

THE BIBLE.

The Bible! oh, the Bible!
How lofty is the name!
To sleep it lulls all trouble,
And eases every pain.

The Bible! oh, the Bible!
The stony heart it thaws!
That book it has no rival,
Such high and holy laws.

The Bible! oh, the Bible!
It suits each sinner's case,
It points him to the Lamb on high,
And to a throne of grace.

The Bible! oh, the Bible!
How soothingly it speaks!
When every earthly comfort fails,
It gives us fresh relief.

Then come, unhappy thirsting souls,
And here your thirst assuage,
And see what beauty it unfolds
On every precious page.

Oh, christian, love your Bible more,
And pray whene'er you read,
'Tis thus you'll find each promise sure
In every time of need.

PLAN OF ASSOCIATED LABOR.

1. Our work begins with the evangelist. He goes out and proclaims the gospel of the kingdom, gathers souls to Christ, and organizes them into churches. These bodies constitute the ground-work of the cause.

2. Churches, with pastors and evangelists, unite and form themselves into conferences. These act in their associated capacity in plans of labor in the states, or section of states where they are located, to spread the truth, and save souls. This work is already well begun among us.

3. The state, or local conferences, by chosen delegates may form a central, or general conference. This body may take the charge of what is general, and is of importance to the prosperity of the body at large; such as the employment of general evangelists to proclaim the coming kingdom in new fields of labor, where state or local conferences do not, or may not be able to co-operate, and to spread the gospel of the coming kingdom, in conjunction with local conferences. In this way we may act together and bring out all our strength in united and systematic effort.

We are as yet weak and few in this state; and so we are in all the Western States. Our churches and conferences are yet in their infancy in this great field. But with united and vigorous action, we cannot fail to become a strong and efficient people.

We respectfully ask the attention of the brethren of other states to the above suggestions, as to a plan for future united effort. We would respectfully ask each minister, church and conference, carefully and prayerfully to consider this matter, with reference to their individual and associated action, when the time shall come.

In conclusion, we invite each conference to consider this subject at their next session, and appoint five delegates to meet in general conference, some time in the coming autumn, in Buchanan, as may be hereafter appointed; then and there to consider the general state of the cause, and take such action as in their judgment shall best subserve its interests.

Adjourned to 2 o'clock P. M. Conference met, and was opened by singing and prayer, as per adjournment.

Resolution on the new paper was discussed at considerable length, in which there was much interest manifested for its establishment.

* * * * * *

The committee presented the following circular address, which was adopted:

CIRCULAR ADDRESS.

To the Advent Brn. and Srs. in Michigan and Indiana, greeting:

Beloved Brn. and Srs.:— . . . . The great object of this new movement, beloved brethren, is to prepare a people for the coming of the Lord; that at his glorious epiphany there may go up a shout from a multitude of redeemed ones, through all this western world, who shall say: "Lo this is our God; we have waited for him. We will rejoice, and be glad in his salvation."

Now, what we want and pray for is, that every brother and sister and friend of the truth, and a pure and holy christianity, shall come heartily and fully to the rescue. Come praying in the Holy Ghost, come with a disposition to labor and sacrifice, if need be, for the support and advancement of the truth; yea, the crowning truth of revelation. Let us, dear brethren and sisters, put forth a commendable effort to save perishing men, ere the night of eternal death close in upon them and they are lost forever.

While Bro. Himes labors in the West, as he has in the East, with all upon the altar, and with an eye single to the glory of God and the best interests of mankind, we certainly can bid him God speed, and by our prayers, labors and sacrifices—all watered by our tears, and refreshed by the grace of God, help him to greatly multiply the number of earnest, watching, waiting christians, who shall rejoice with us in the grand restitution of all things, by the personal coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The times are eventful, and full of interest, especially to the student of prophecy. The judgments of God are falling upon the world, and the statesman, the politician and the watchman are all inquiring, "What do these things mean?" Soon Christ will come, and the destiny of the world will be decided. What we do, must be done quickly. Let us all press the battle of truth against error to the very gate of the enemy; and soon the victory will be ours, and the crown of glory will be given to the faithful. Your brethren in Christ, A. N. SEYMOUR,
Chairman of the Committee.

For the World's Crisis.

"GREAT IS THE LORD, AND GREATLY TO BE PRAISED."

BRO. GRANT:—I was thinking this morning of the infinite wisdom and power of God in making all creatures that inhabit the earth. He made the beasts and birds, and every living creature that hath breath. He spake the word, and trees and plants sprang up in spring-like beauty. He gave to every leaf its shape, and to every shrub its form. He made the great waters, and all that passes through the sea. He stretched out the heavens like a curtain; he laid the foundation of the earth. Look also at man, who was "fearfully and wonderfully made" of the dust of the earth, endowed with such noble powers of mind.

In view of all this, we can say, like the prophet, great and "marvellous are thy works," Lord God Almighty. The universe is full of thy glory; who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods; who is like thee glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders? Yet notwithstanding all his great power and might, he humbleth himself to be mindful even of me, a poor worm, who has disobeyed [illegible] unbelieving. O, I will now [illegible] before his gracious throne. I will pay my vows that I have made. I will try, by his help, to keep all his holy and righteous law, and to run in the way of his commandments; then he will enlarge my heart. I will hide his word in my heart, that I may not sin against him. I will invite all to start anew with me for the kingdom, and make full consecration of ourselves to God, that we may by works of piety glorify him in our bodies and spirits which are his; for we know that our life is uncertain; we know not when our time is. The Master has said, "Watch."

I have heard, since I commenced this, that Bro. Locke has fallen in death. His venerable form lies in the dust. That voice which cheered and comforted our hearts a few weeks ago, when he broke bread with us, is silent. I remember his appeals to the old and young, admonishing them to be faithful and stand up for Jesus. But we shall hear his voice no more, until the hour cometh when all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

E. Concord, N. H. E. HUTCHINS.

TO THE CHILDREN.

Children, would you like to hear
A word about your Savior,
Who though gone is ever near,
Viewing our behavior;
Keeping us from danger, too,
Driving 'way our sorrow,
Through his holy word a view
Giving of the morrow?

Jesus' arms are open yet,
As when he so gracious
Took up in his arms and blessed
The little child Ignatius.
"Writer, will you please explain
How I can come to him,
That throughout his endless reign
I may love and view him?"

Yes, dear children, listen now
Love, believe, obey him,
Read his word, 'twill tell you how
All these debts to pay him.
Jesus loves to hear you pray,
Jesus loves to bless you,
Soon he'll come as comes the day,
And with his glory clothe you.

HELP YOUR MOTHER.

"Georgia, come and make some yeast," said Mrs. Grey to her daughter. It was Saturday morning, and there was a great deal to be done; for Mrs. Grey's family was large, and she kept no servant. Georgia made the yeast, and then left the kitchen and went to her chamber to read in a new novel which her beau had lent her.

"Georgia! Georgia!" called her busy mother several times; but there was no Georgia to be found. She then tried Jane. "Here, Jane, come and see to the fire; my hands are in the dough. I wish you wouldn't all get off out of sight and hearing, when there is so much to do. What is Agnes about?"

"Finishing the book-mark," was the reply.

"Go and tell her to put that right away, and sweep the parlor and set it to rights. Find Georgia, and tell her to do up the chamber-work, and do you stay here to help me."

"Yes, mother," was the obedient reply.

The girls all obeyed their mother's orders. They never thought of doing otherwise; but they never thought of doing anything without orders. The whole care of everything rested on their mother quite as much now when she was fifty years of age, feeble and very weary, and the mother of three healthy, full grown daughters, as it did when she was in her prime, with a band of little ones around her. Perhaps the first fault had been her own; perhaps she had not rightly trained her girls; but they were old enough now to amend their mother's mistake. They knew very well how miserable her health was; but they did not seem to realize, as everybody else did, that unless she could be quite relieved from care and labor her life would soon be over. Every day she groaned with weariness, and at night and in the morning her limbs were so stiff she could hardly bend them.

"Mother, why in the world don't you make the girls do more?" asked her husband almost every day of his life; and as often Mrs. Grey replied, "O, they do a great deal! They are always willing to do all I ask them. They are a great help to me." Just like a mother! She can always be wofully imposed upon, if her children are thoughtless and mean enough to do it, and she will never own that she is imposed on. She will shield her children to the last.

The Grey girls were always willing to do what their mother bade; but they were not always ready.

"Come, Jennie, 'tis your turn to build the fire for supper to-night. Run out and do it; 'tis almost six o'clock," Mrs Grey would say.

"Yes, in a minute." In ten, fifteen, or twenty minutes, Mrs. Grey would speak again.

"Yes, mother, I'm just going."

But it would be sometimes nearly dark before there would be any actual move, and the father and brothers would be home from their day's work, hungry, and, of course, cross, when they saw that the supper was behindhand. It is vain to deny Parson Chaplain Quint, that as a general thing, a hungry man is a cross one. All woman-kind can testify to this serious and suggestive fact. Poor Mrs. Grey was so tired of perpetually repeating directions, and of the effort of causing them to be seasonably and properly carried out, that she often and often did the work herself, when she felt hardly able to crawl, rather than to try to get the girls to do it. O, how thoughtless and unfeeling those daughters were! They quietly allowed the mother to do all that she would: but they were rewarded. They loved their mother, and they were not really very cruel or wicked girls. Could they have had one glance a few months forward, how utterly changed would have been their conduct. But not one of us can see a moment before us.

Suddenly the devoted mother was missing from her post in the kitchen. She was to be waiter and drudge no more. She died; but, had she been cared for and cherished as she should have been, she might have been the companion and comforter of her husband and her children for many happy years. When they saw the tired feet at rest, the worn hands folded, the dim eyes closed at last, self-reproach took hold upon them, and they wept. They felt that they might have kept her. They remembered all their lazy, careless ways, and how worn out with care and toil they had allowed their mother to become! [illegible] they had heard her utter came back to them, and they were filled with remorse for all that they had failed to do. The weeks and months [illegible] showed them more and more plainly what they had lost and how guilty they had been. But it was too late to make amends. All they could do was to lay the lesson to heart and try to improve by it. This they all did, and they cherished the memory of their dead mother, so they [illegible] of the Grey girls will but take warning by their punishment, they may perhaps escape a similar one. There are few agonies more hard to bear than to look on a dead face, most near and dear, and feel that our treatment has hastened the parting hour. God save us from all that!—Springfield Republican.

RELIANCE ON GOD.

Willie V. was the only son of his parents. When very young his mother began to teach him about God and heaven, and his mind seemed to drink in all the sweet things she told him, just as the flowers receive into their bosoms the drops of dew that give them strength and beauty. Before he was three years old, he would often sit gazing into the sky, and would say:

"Willie's watching for the holy angels, and waiting to hear them sing!"

The lesson that his mother endeavored to impress most deeply upon his young heart, was that of faith in God. Faith in him for all things whatsoever, and that for Jesus' sake he would bestow upon him all necessary good.

When he was four years old a terrible shadow settled down upon him, and by the time Willie was seven, their home and everything was taken from them, and they were thrown upon the charity of friends. Soon Willie's clothes and boots began to wear out, but his mother was too poor to purchase new ones. On one occasion he came to her, saying:

"Mother, can't I have some new boots? My toes are all out of these. The snow gets in and I am so cold."

A tear filled the mother's eye, when she answered: "Soon, Willie, I hope to give them to you."

He waited patiently several days, until one morning, as he stood at the window watching the boys play with their sleds, he sobbed:

"Oh! mother, it is too hard! Can't I get some boots anywhere?"

"Yes, Willie, you can."

"I can," he exclaimed eagerly. "Where? where? Tell me quick."

"Do you not know, my son?" replied his mother. "Think now."

Willie stood for a moment as if in deep thought, then with a smile looked up into his mother's face and said: "Oh, I know. God will give them to me, of course. Why didn't I think of that before? I'll go right off and ask him."

He walked out of the parlor into his mother's room, she quietly following him, and standing concealed from his view, she saw him kneel down, and covering his face with his hands, he prayed:

"Oh, God! father drinks: mother has no money; my feet get cold and wet. I want some boots. Please send me a pair, for Jesus' sake. Amen."

This was all. He often repeated his pitiful petition, and the best of all was, he expected an answer to his prayer. "They'll come, mother," he would often say, encouragingly; "they'll come when God gets ready."

Within a week, a lady who dearly loved the little boy, came to take him out walking. He hesitated for a few moments, but soon determined to go, and they started off. At length the lady noticed his stockings peeping out at the toes of his boots, when she exclaimed:

"Why, Willie, look at your feet! They will freeze. Why didn't you put on a better pair?"

"These are all I have ma'am."

"All you have! But why don't you have a new pair?" she inquired.

"I will just as soon as God sends them," he confidently replied.

Tears filled the lady's eyes, and with a quivering lip, she led him into a shoe store near by, saying: "There, child, select any pair you please." The boots were soon selected, and a more happy, thankful boy never lived.

On his return, he walked to the centre of the room where his mother was sitting, and pulling his pants up until you could see his fat knees above the tops, he said:

"Look, mother, God has sent my boots. Mrs. Gray's money bought them, but God heard me ask for them, and I suppose he told Mrs. Gray to buy them."

There he stood with an earnest, solemn light in his eye, as though he were receiving a new baptism of faith from heaven, and then quietly added—

"We must always remember how near God is to us," and kneeling at his mother's feet, he said: "Jesus, I thank you very much for my boots. Please make me a good boy, and take care of mother. Amen."

Willie is now fourteen years of age, and is a consistent member of the church of Christ. In all things he trusts his Savior, and every desire of his heart he carries directly to God, and patiently awaits an answer, and it always comes.—Sunday School Journal.

AN OBEDIENT BOY.—A boy was tempted by some of his companions to pluck some ripe cherries from a tree his father had forbidden him to touch. "You need not be afraid," said they, "for if your father found it out, he is so kind he would not hurt you." "That is the very reason," replied the boy, "why I should not touch them. It is true my father may not hurt me; yet my disobedience, I know, would hurt my father, and that would be worse to me than any thing else."

Was not this an excellent reason?

PERILOUS TIMES.

Gloomy and dark are the heavens above us;
Sad are the scenes that greet us below;
Vainly we trust in the dear ones that love us,
Earth has a sorrowful boon to bestow.

Time marches onward, and bold is his tread;
Perils are thick'ning, and dangers abound;
Over the earth a dark mantle is spread,—
O that the knell of confusion might sound!

Mighty hosts rush to the battle-field now;
"War" is the cry, and it reaches to heaven,
O Prince of Peace! that to Thee all might bow.

Fierce grows the conflict, the snares are all spread,
Bolder the foe as his longitude fails;
Saints of the highest, now lift up your heads,
Christ is your Captain; o'er all he prevails.

"Stand up for Jesus," for Truth, and for Right;
Stand, though it lead where the martyrs have been;
Bolder and braver stand, Jesus your might,
Conquering self, and Satan, and sin.

After the battle the angels will come,
Cleansing the field where the enemy fell,
Earth, renovated, like Eden shall bloom,

THE SCARLET-COLORED BEAST.

(Concluded.)

I will now proceed to an investigation of the third proposition:

"And shall ascend out of the bottomless pit."

It is evident from this text that the scarlet-colored or red beast, must have been in the bottomless pit, at the period of time occupied by John when he was in the wilderness (which I have shown to be in the sixteenth or seventeenth century), or else he could not have ascended out of it, when he appeared again upon the stage of action. Now as we read that "power was given him (papal Rome) over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations;" and as I have shown that papal Rome finally "swallowed up" all infidel or pagan forms of government; it is evident that the government, or form of government symbolized by the scarlet-colored beast, must have been chained in that iniquitous papal system of government, during the time it is represented in the prophecy as in the bottomless pit; and it is further evident that this iniquitous system of ecclesiastical government, which is without truthful foundation, must be what is symbolized by the bottomless pit. Hence when we look over the history of Europe, since the seventeenth century, and find a nation standing up in defiance of the papal government, and commencing to execute judgments upon it; I think we may be sure we have found the beast or government that is ascending out of the bottomless pit.

In the eleventh verse the angel informs John concerning the beast as follows: "And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." Question, what beast is it that "was, and is not?" let the eighth verse answer, "The beast that thou sawest was, and is not."

Again, what beast was it that John saw? Let the third verse answer: "And I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast." Thus we are assured, when taking the three verses together, that the scarlet-colored beast is the eighth; and as the eighth beast could not have appeared upon the stage of action, in the sense of the prophecy, to carry the woman along to judgment, until after the seven kings, who are represented as committing fornication with her, had "fallen," it is evident that the scarlet-colored beast could not have commenced to ascend out of the bottomless pit until the end of the 1260 days (years) of papal supremacy; for the seven kings (or heads) were to be connected with her during that time. Again, this "scarlet-colored" or "eighth beast," was to ascend out of the bottomless pit; and we read in the eleventh chapter concerning this same beast, that when the "two witnesses" (which were to testify, clothed in sackcloth, during the 1260 years of papal supremacy) "shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them."

From this text, it is evident that this beast could not have commenced to ascend out of the bottomless pit, until the two witnesses had finished their testimony, clothed in sackcloth; which was fulfilled during the 1260 years of the wilderness state, or of the papal supremacy. And again, it is almost universally admitted, that the "two witnesses" were slain by the French nation, soon after the breaking out of the French revolution; and, if so, it appears to me to be positive proof that infidel France, commencing about the time of the outbreak of the revolution in A. D. 1789, must be the government symbolized by the scarlet-colored beast, which John saw and which was to ascend out of the bottomless pit. And we are assured from all history, that the French nation commenced to execute judgments upon the woman (the apostate church) soon after the breaking out of the revolution (which was about the time of the ending of the 1260 days of papal supremacy), and has continued most of the time, from that date until the present, to sustain and control the woman, sometimes inflicting upon her sore chastisement, ("judgments"), causing her much anguish and sorrow,—I think it further positive evidence that the French nation, commencing about the above-mentioned time, is the one symbolized by the red beast, at its second appearance upon the stage of action, and referred to by the eighth beast, which was to sustain or carry the woman along while she is receiving her judgments, and until her final overthrow.

Again, we read that this eighth beast "is of the seven;" and as I have shown that infidel France is the government symbolized by the scarlet-colored or eighth beast, I shall not need to produce argument to prove that this (infidel) form of government came up in a nation (the French) which was "of the seven", for it is universally admitted that the French nation (then called the Franks), under the reign of the Carlovingian dynasty, was the second of the seven heads.

That the French government did become disconnected from the apostate church, in A. D. 1789, at the breaking out of the French revolution, is evident from the fact, that in that year they abolished all privileged orders, and also freedom of conscience, and liberty of the press was decreed to all the subjects throughout the empire. (See Blair's Chronological Tables, page 683.) And a few months later, the so-called Reign of Terror commenced, all forms of religious worship were exterminated from the empire; showing that they had no more affinity towards the church of Rome, than for the Protestant church; and a few years later, when the Reign of Terror had ended, all religionists were permitted by the government to return to the empire and worship unmolested. And although the Catholic religion was established as the religion of the empire, yet it was shorn of all political authority by the pope; and in no sense was there any union between the French government and the government of Rome, for the purpose of compelling men to adopt the Catholic faith.

The historian says, that the universal principle of Napoleon I. during his reign, was free toleration to all his subjects in matters pertaining to the conscience. And finally, after his overthrow, the very principles of the Holy Alliance, by which France was governed, and permitted to exist as a nation, were averse to all persecution; and although some armed mobs of Catholics, and outlaws, persecuted and even put some Protestants to death; yet it was not allowed by the government, and was soon suppressed.

Hence it will be seen that France has never been a papal government, in the sense that the seven heads were to be, since the breaking out of the Revolution in A. D. 1789. But the pagan and infidel spirit has been the leading characteristic of the people. One or two quotations will show that very soon after the commencement of the revolution, during the Reign of Terror, papacy was overthrown and paganism revived.

"The once sacred ceremonies were derisively parodied. They dressed an ox or an ass in pontificial ornaments, and paraded these abominations through the streets; they drank wine from the chalice, and shut the church. They wrote upon the gate of the place or sepulchre, someil eternue (eternal rest.) In a few months the immense material of Catholic worship,—cathedrals, churches, monasteries, presbyteries, towers, belfries, ministers, and ceremonies—had disappeared. The representatives in mission were themselves astonished at the facility with which all this apparel of ancient institutions had vanished. . . . The philosophers of the commune resolved in the middle of November, to accelerate this movement in Paris. . . . They desired to possess themselves of the temples, to offer them a new worship, a kind of renewed paganism, whose dogmas were but images, whose adoration was but a ceremonial, and whose divinity supreme, was but reason become in its own person its own God, and adoring itself in its attributes." Lamartine's History of the Girondists. Vol. 3, page 294.

Again, the same historian says, page 298, "The commune desired to replace the ceremonies of religion by other spectacles, to which the people flocked as they do to all novel sights. The profanation of sacred places—the parody of mysteries—the eclat of pagan rites—were the attractions of these pomps."

From such historical facts as contained in the above quotations, I think it must be evident that France, very soon after the commencement of the revolution in A. D. 1789, was fast changing from a papal to a pagan or infidel nation; and if so, then it is evident that the eighth beast must have commenced to ascend ("ascendeth") out of the bottomless pit, at about the time of the above-mentioned date; if so be (as I have endeavored to show) that the French nation is the eighth beast.

There is one other feature, spoken of in the prophecy as having transpired in connection with the rise of this beast out of the bottomless pit; which if we can show commenced its fulfillment at the breaking out of the revolution, I think will prove beyond a doubt that the French nation is recognized in the prophecy as the eighth beast, as early as at the commencement of that eventful period. The text referred to reads as follows: "And all they that dwell upon the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

We are assured in this text, that "all the world" shall wonder when they behold this beast, [illegible] no longer in self-defense, but as the great aggressor and spoiler of Europe. It exhibited a prowess which shook all the States of Christendom to the centre. . . . All Europe stood in amazement and perturbation at the events that were passing. The prodigious increase of power by France, and the revolting purposes to which she applied it, began to arouse a universal dread for the independence of nations and the existence of social order or public morality. It was natural that kings and aristocracies should regard even the first outbreak of the revolution with dislike and apprehension. Now, from the frightful features it had assumed, this feeling was partaken by the whole world and prevailed even among the most democratic communities. The enlightened citizens of the United States shared it with the ignorant populations of Sarmatia or Roumelia, consequently, upon the first reverse sustained by France all the nations of the earth seemed to rush simultaneously to quell her. The sympathies of mankind were enlisted against her, for she had shown how hideous was the spirit by which she was actuated. The friends of freedom and of human amelioration blushed that they had nourished her virgin struggles for liberty by approbation, and despaired of the sacred cause with which they had once associated her name." Redhead's History of the French Revolutions. Vol. 2; pp. 76 and 113.

To my mind the above quotation settles the question beyond a doubt, that the form of government symbolized by the scarlet colored beast, (which the angel assures us was the eighth beast) commenced to ascend out of the bottomless pit, at the outbreak of the French Revolution.

Again, we read that this beast "shall ascend," and also "ascendeth," out of the pit, showing that it takes a space of time for the beast to extricate himself from it; therefore the question may be asked, At what point of time may this beast be said to have completely extricated itself from the bottomless pit? and I answer: It appears to my mind, that when this nation had attained a fixed government, it may be said to be completely out of the pit, and I understand it to have attained a fixed government, at the coronation of Napoleon I., A. D. 1804.

From this point of time, the military element was the leading characteristic of the French nation; and, like the form of government symbolized by the great red dragon (Pagan Rome), Napoleon's great aim and object was to bring into submission to his government all other nations or governments, whether civil or ecclesiastical; hence we find him as ready to make war upon the papal government of Rome ("the woman"), to bring it in subjection to him, as upon any civil government of Europe; yet the character and principles of Napoleon, as pertaining to religious matters, found free toleration. The historian says, "It was one of the first principles of Napoleon, that perfect freedom of conscience in religious worship should prevail in every State over which he had any control." And although the Catholic religion was established as the religion of the empire; for, (says the historian) "Napoleon judged that a national faith, as a mere element of social order, was indispensable to a community," yet it was shorn of all its former power over the affairs of the State.

Concerning this point, the historian says: "The Gallican church was anew constituted on the former principle of a spiritual union with Rome, but shorn of its territorial basis, and in all temporal matters, and in the administration of religious affairs, made dependent on the civil government of France. The First Consul, in fact, only allowed the pope such sway as was consistent with his own dominion over the church as an institution of the State, and its absolute freedom from foreign interference and influence." Redhead's History of the French Revolutions. Vol. 2, p. 161. Hence it will be seen that the pope was made the vassal of the Emperor Napoleon, and that he was in no way united with the pope in the policy to make war against those who did not hold the faith of the Catholic church. Therefore the Bonaparte dynasty, under the reign of Napoleon I. could not have been the government symbolized by the seventh head; for the seven heads were to be united with the "woman," (apostate church), in the policy of making war against the saints and overcoming them.

Therefore, from all the evidences on this subject, I think the view that I have taken, i. e., that the French nation or government,—commencing about the time of the breaking out of the revolution—during all its changes of rulers until it shall finally go into perdition; is the one symbolized by the scarlet-colored beast, which is also the eighth beast.

Finally, if the view I have presented is in harmony with the prophecy, that is, that the form of government symbolized by the "great red dragon" of the twelfth chapter, was cast into the "bottomless pit" by the strong arm of Charlemagne in A. D. 804; and that this form of government assumed a place again upon the stage of action, in its full capacity, (as symbolized by the red beast of the seventeenth chapter) at the coronation of Napoleon I., in A. D. 1804, then it will be seen that the dragon, or the form of government symbolized by the dragon, was chained in the "bottomless pit" 1000 years.

Again, as there are those who believe that the wounding of one of the seven heads, and the disappearing of the beast into the bottomless pit, symbolize the same thing or event; I will close this article by briefly referring to that subject. I do not understand, as will appear from what I have written upon those subjects, that the bottomless pit condition of the beast (red beast) has any thing whatever to do with the wounded condition of one of the seven heads. But as most of those with whom I am acquainted who hold to the above view take the position that the Bonaparte dynasty, under the reign of Napoleon I., was the seventh head; and that when that dynasty was overthrown in A. D. 1815, the head was "wounded as it were to death," and was also at that time cast into the bottomless pit,—I will suggest concerning that position, that if we refer to the eighth verse of the seventeenth chapter of Revelation, we shall find that the angel assures the Revelator that the beast which is to go into the bottomless pit, is already in the pit, when the sixth head is upon the stage of action.

Hence it cannot be in harmony with the prophecy, to argue that the beast did not go into the bottomless pit, until after the sixth and seventh heads have fallen. This I have said on the supposition that the Bonaparte dynasty, under the reign of Nopoleon I., is the government symbolized by the seventh head, which, as will appear from what I have written, I cannot now possibly believe.

THE FIRST DOMINION—WHAT IS IT?

"And thou, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion."—Micah 4: 8.

What dominion is here promised to Christ? The prophet calls it the "first dominion"; hence, some infer that reference is made to the dominion that God gave to Adam at creation, while on trial. But stop, "let us reason together"; this cannot be so, unless reference is made to the mere territorial dominion, for the "second Adam" is never to take the first Adam's position as a probationer for endless life, he having already obtained that; but will at once, at the establishment of his kingdom, stand where Adam would have stood, if he had not fallen, at the end of his trial; and the saints, too, will at once "put on immortality," and be "equal to the angels," thus occupying a position which Adam never attained unto, he being a "little lower than the angels,"—a position which Adam was on trial for. Thus the kingdom of Christ, instead of being a return of Adam's trial paradise, will contain a King and subjects, who, at its very beginning, will stand upon the platform of immortality, which Adam never reached; and its surroundings will doubtless correspond with this superior state. Is it wise to insist that Adam's trial dominion, which contained probationers under command to "multiply," the marriage covenant, beasts under command to "multiply," the tree of death, etc., is to be Christ's dominion in the future? No, no! Christ will not be put on trial again, nor will the saints.

Neither will Christ's dominion, like Adam's, include the marriage covenant; there they "neither marry nor are given in marriage." Adam's dominion contained not a single deathless man; Christ's will. Adam's dominion contained only those who were to "multiply"; but not so with Christ's. Adam's trial dominion contained beasts, birds and fishes, for the benefit of probationary man while obeying the command, "Multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it;" but it does not therefore follow that Christ's dominion will be filled with multiplying and dying beasts—unserviceable to immortals—nor will it help the matter to claim immortality for them, for such a class never were in Adam's dominion, besides if they should be in Christ's they would soon overstock the kingdom with their deathless posterity, as none could die.

Hence, I conclude that only the territorial dominion of Adam will come to Christ, minus its mortal appendages, occupying the very position that it would have occupied after the command to "multiply and replenish the earth" should have been complied with, at the end of man's trial; provided he had not fallen before his trial ended. Though there is a chance to infer that man could have eaten of the tree of life at any time, the inference would either cut short the command to "multiply," or allow that man could have multiplied in his immortal state; and if so, why not in his future immortal state? Adam was permitted to eat of the tree of life at some time, optional with God—not with Adam.

GOD WILL NOT LIE.

"God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?"—Num. 23: 19.

If I did not believe that this declaration were true, in the fulfillment of all that God hath spoken, then I might believe that his word might have its fulfillment according to the fanciful interpretation of some writers, who are engaged in trying to prove that the literal word of the Lord does not mean what it says, and who yet profess to believe the PLAIN WORD.

Some think that the terms Israel and Jews can be applied to Gentiles in their literal fulfillment as well as to God's ancient covenant people Israel. Such logic is about as consistent as to call an Englishman an Irishman or American. If such writers can tell us by what way the ordinances of the sun, moon, and stars can cease to shine and perform their regular course as God hath ordained, then we may trust their wisdom in telling how Israel will cease from being a nation before the Lord forever. Or if they can measure heaven above, and search out the foundations of the earth beneath, then we may believe their interpretation, that God has forever cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done. —Jer. 31: 35-37; 33: 19-26.

Will some one tell us who are those spoken of in Jer. 31: 8, 9 (if not Israel as God says), and if the immortal saints are to be gathered weeping, etc.; and when gathered, if they will come and sing in the height of Zion, and flow together to the goodness of the Lord, for wheat, and for wine, and for oil, and for the young of the flock and of the herd; and their soul shall be as a watered garden; and they shall not sorrow any more at all." We fully believe that the covenant spoken of in this chapter and others Paul was a faithful witness of. He took heed to what the Lord had said, when he called upon the nation to declare in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him and keep him as a shepherd doth his flock (ver. 10). We think Paul's admonition is very necessary for some now, to "not be wise in their own conceits." Rom. 11: 25.

Here Paul faithfully proclaims the new covenant that will be made with Israel; also in Heb. 8: 8; and although Paul was a minister of the new covenant to be made with Israel, it does not prove that that covenant had then gone into effect, any more than a proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom proves that the kingdom was then set up.

If Israel does not mean Israel, and Jew Jew; and lion, wolf, lamb, kid, sucking child, asp, etc., do not mean what the words express, then we can no more rely on what God says, and Universalists may be as correct as any. Nevertheless, I believe the word of the Lord is pure, and he will not lie like man, neither will he alter the things that have gone out of his mouth to suit any who do not choose to believe it.

If Jesus the Messiah were here now, he might justly say to this generation and many who profess to believe in his return,—"O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." G. DILLABAUGH.

HASTE THY COMING!

AIR.—"Down upon the Rappahannock."

Haste thy coming, haste thy coming,
For we've long been waiting here,
Long been watching, sighing, mourning,
In thine absence, Savior dear.
But we'll trust thy promise ever,
And we will not sigh in vain,
For we've faith there's nothing surer
Than that thou 'lt return again.

CHORUS.

Haste thy coming, haste thy coming,
Let peaceful scenes again abound,
War and strife then be forgotten,
And the lost again be found.

Haste thy coming, haste thy coming,
End this wicked war and strife,
End this sorrow and this mourning,
Bring our loved ones back to life.
Oh! what scenes of pain and anguish
Meet us as we sojourn here,
Friends are doomed to sigh and languish,
Yes, redemption draweth near.

WHICH IS RIGHT?

Bro. A. Good morning, Bro. M., you are quite a stranger. It is, indeed, a sad and unexpected occasion that has brought us together, but the sudden death of our good brother was well improved by Eld. G——. I think I never listened to a more eloquent discourse. What is your opinion?

Bro. M. I quite agree with you as to the eloquence and power of the delivery; but I must say that I regretted the apostolic teachings were not substituted for the popular theology, and poetical imaginations of man's devising; such preaching conveys no comfort to my mind.

Bro. A. Well, I do say you are hard to suit, but I guess you are alone in your opinion; for my part, I could almost wish to exchange places with our deceased brother, while Eld. G—— depicted the glories of the heavenly mansions, and the rapturous meeting with sainted friends, I could almost fancy I heard the music of their golden harps. Is not all that scriptural?

Bro. M. I confess the picture was a pleasing one, but I think you will find it difficult to show me a "Thus saith the Lord," to sanction all we heard to-day. I have lately been searching my Bible to see what ground there is for the views we have been taught to cherish concerning the state of the dead previous to the resurrection; I can find nothing conclusive about happiness or punishment until "Christ comes again to reward every man according to his work." I know detached passages are often taken, together with inferences drawn from parables, and these are made prominent, even in contradiction of explicit declarations of God's word, which uniformly points to the resurrection of the body and the coming of Christ—as the time of reward. Paul's desire to "be absent from the body and present with the Lord," is continually quoted, but how seldom are we reminded of his still more earnest longing to attain unto the resurrection from the dead.

Bro. A. Why, it seems to me rather arrogant for an humble individual like yourself to profess to understand doctrine better than our ministers and numbers of learned men who have devoted their lives to the study of the Bible, many of whom have died in raptures in view of the glory upon which they were about to enter.

Bro. M. Such impressions may be delusive, being the results of early teaching; an increase of light has shone upon the pages of inspiration in these latter days; those who have not been blessed with the light will not be answerable for its rejection. Death is in the Bible called sleep; our creeds confine the term to our bodies. How far they are right is questionable. When Christ, who is our life shall appear then shall we appear with him in glory." "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." Here popular preachers tell us the soul is satisfied as soon as it "shuffles off this mortal coil," the body [illegible] hindrance to spiritual enjoyment, etc.

Bro. A. I will own there is more Scripture on your side than I supposed; but I should be very unwilling to believe so gloomy a doctrine. I have lost several dear children, and it is an unspeakable comfort to think of them as ministering spirits about my path. What a fine poetical idea it was noticed to-day, "That the door of heaven seemed left ajar," in view of the lovely spirits [illegible] our departed friends,—then those thrillingly beautiful lines that were sung,—

"There's a light in the window for thee."

Bro. M. Yes, brother, but we must learn to prefer truth to poetry, and a "Thus saith the Lord" to all man's creeds or traditions. "Comfort one another with these words," says an inspired apostle in 1 Thess. 4; 13–18. Why are these verses so often overlooked by our ministers, even by those who profess to have returned to apostolic teaching? But I rejoice to know light is advancing on this subject. Many, like the Bereans, are searching "to see if these things are so." It is not to be expected that the majority will embrace these views, but may God give us grace to follow truth even through evil report, "to prove all things, and hold fast that which is good."

Bro. A. Farewell, Bro. M., you and I must agree to differ. M. PARRY.

RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Says one, The Lord will judge the world in righteousness (Ps. 96: 13). What is Righteousness? "All thy commandments are righteousness" (Ps. 119: 172). "Blessed is he that doeth righteousness" (Psalms 106: 3). "Righteousness delivereth from death" (Prov. 10: 2). "Righteousness tendeth to life" (Prov. 11: 13). "The law of God is perfect, converting the soul" (Ps. 19: 8.) "My righteousness shall not be abolished" (Isa. 51: 6). From these texts we conclude that God will judge the world by the ten commandments,—that keeping them converts the soul and delivers it from death.

But what says Paul? "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, . . . for therein is the righteousness of God revealed" (Rom. 1: 16, 17), "even the righteousness of God, which is by faith in Jesus Christ" (Rom. 3: 22), "for if righteousness came by the law, then is Christ died in vain" (Gal. 2: 21). "Having begun in the Spirit, shall we be made perfect in the flesh?" (Gal. 3: 2). "No man is justified by the law in the sight of God, for the just shall live by faith" (Gal. 3: 11). "To Abraham and his seed was the promise made, that he should inherit the earth. And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect" (Gal. 3: 17). "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise, but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgression, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made" (Gal. 3: 18, 19). "If there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law" (Gal. 3: 21). Let us not, then, go about to "establish our own righteousness, . . for Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth" (Rom. 10: 3, 4). What saith the righteousness that is of faith? "The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith that we preach, that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved" (Rom. 10: 8, 9). "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law" (Gal. 3: 13). "Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free" (Gal. 5: 1). "Be filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are of Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God" (Phil. 1: 11). "And be found of him, not having our own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Jesus Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith" (Phil. 3: 9). "For according to his mercy he saves us, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost" (Titus 3: 5).

"Avoid contentions and strivings about the law, for they are unprofitable and vain" (Titus 3: 9). "Mark them which cause divisions and offenses, contrary to the doctrine ye have learned, and avoid them" (Rom. 16: 17). But look into the perfect law of liberty, and continue therein, and thou shalt be blessed indeed (James 1: 25). For "whosoever abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God; but he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath the Father and the Son" (2 John 9). MRS. C. A. KNOWLES.

"BUT THE DAY OF THE LORD WILL COME."

Men may ridicule the day of the Lord, but the unerring word says it will come. This is a positive declaration which all the fustian of theology cannot change. "God hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world by the same Jesus that ascended up into heaven. The Sodomites of the present day reject him, they treat this momentous subject with contempt, nevertheless it will come, they cannot prevent it.

"The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord; the mighty man shall cry bitterly. That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness, a day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high towers. And I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord; and their blood shall be poured out as dust, [illegible] Jesus Christ, but the summons to judgment all must obey, not only those that are living when Christ comes, but also all that are dead. Just and unjust must hear the sound,—Come to judgment! Those who hate the Judge will cry to rocks and mountains to hide them, but the judgment will set and the books be opened. No rocks and mountains can hide, no lawyer can plead for those who said, "We will not have this man to reign over us." All who are in their graves shall come forth, to be either saved or lost. No middle place, no Papist-purifying residence, no etherial phantom, no funeral sermon which makes the narrow way a broad road, can prevent the judgment of Almighty God. When the trumpet shall sound all will be there to receive according to their works; those who have sown to the flesh shall reap corruption, and those who have sown to the Spirit shall reap life everlasting.

But oh! that day,—that day of the Lord will surely come; dreadful day to the ungodly, but unto those who look for him, who have presented themselves a living sacrifice, it will be a day of rejoicing, and their shout shall fill the heavens. This is our God, and we have waited for him,—I have professed to look for that great day for many years, and the questions, Am I ready now? Am I ready for translation? Am I walking with God like Enoch? urge the prayer for more consecration of all that I have and am, that I and my house may serve the Lord, whilst we have any being, that not only every action and word but also that every thought, may be brought into the obedience of Jesus Christ our Lord. My whole being cries out for the living God. When shall I appear before him? He will come. He has promised to come. He is faithful and will fulfill his word. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly! Amen.

"Say ye to the righteous, that it shall be well with him: for they shall eat the fruit of their doings."

"What gracious words are these?
Their sweetness who can tell?
In time, and in eternity,
'Tis with the righteous well."

"Let not your heart be troubled. . . . In my Father's house are many mansions. . . . I go to prepare a place for you. . . . I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also. . . . Because I live, ye shall live also. Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth (to receive as much again) give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." "Fear not, little flock: for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

This commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God, love his brother also." "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth. And hereby (in so doing) we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him. For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God, and whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight. And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment. And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us."

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so (in so doing) shall ye be my disciples. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love. . . . These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you. Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you. These things I command you, that ye love one another. If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. Remember the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying, they will keep yours also. But all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake."

But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. And of some have compassion, making a difference: and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; [illegible]

PERILOUS TIMES.

Sad are the scenes that greet us below;
Vainly we trust in the dear ones that love us,
Earth has a sorrowful boon to bestow.

Time marches onward, and bold is his tread;
Perils are thick'ning, and dangers abound;
Over the earth a dark mantle is spread,—
O that the knell of confusion might sound!

Mighty hosts rush to the battle-field now;
"War" is the cry, and it reaches to heaven;
O Prince of Peace! that to Thee all might bow.

Fierce grows the conflict, the snares are all spread,
Bolder the foe as his longitude fails;
Saints of the highest, now lift up your heads,
Christ is your Captain; o'er all he prevails.

"Stand up for Jesus," for Truth, and for Right;
Stand, though it lead where the martyrs have been;
Bolder and braver stand, Jesus your might,
Conquering self, and Satan, and sin.

After the battle the angels will come,
Cleansing the field where the enemy fell,
Earth, renovated, like Eden shall bloom,

THE SCARLET-COLORED BEAST.

(Concluded.)

I will now proceed to an investigation of the third proposition:

It is evident from this text that the scarlet-colored or red beast, must have been in the bottomless pit, at the period of time occupied by John when he was in the wilderness (which I have shown to be in the sixteenth or seventeenth century), or else he could not have ascended out of it, when he appeared again upon the stage of action. Now as we read that "power was given him (papal Rome) over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations;" and as I have shown that papal Rome finally "swallowed up" all infidel or pagan forms of government; it is evident that the government, or form of government symbolized by the scarlet-colored beast, must have been chained in that iniquitous papal system of government, during the time it is represented in the prophecy as in the bottomless pit; and it is further evident that this iniquitous system of ecclesiastical government, which is without truthful foundation, must be what is symbolized by the bottomless pit. Hence when we look over the history of Europe, since the seventeenth century, and find a nation standing up in defiance of the papal government, and commencing to execute judgments upon it; I think we may be sure we have found the beast or government that is ascending out of the bottomless pit.

In the eleventh verse the angel informs John concerning the beast as follows: "And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." Question, what beast is it that "was, and is not?" let the eighth verse answer, "The beast that thou sawest was, and is not."

Again, what beast was it that John saw? Let the third verse answer: "And I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast." Thus we are assured, when taking the three verses together, that the scarlet-colored beast is the eighth; and as the eighth beast could not have appeared upon the stage of action, in the sense of the prophecy, to carry the woman along to judgment, until after the seven kings, who are represented as committing fornication with her, had "fallen," it is evident that the scarlet-colored beast could not have commenced to ascend out of the bottomless pit until the end of the 1260 days (years) of papal supremacy; for the seven kings (or heads) were to be connected with her during that time. Again, this "scarlet-colored" or "eighth beast" was to ascend out of the bottomless pit; and we read in the eleventh chapter concerning this same beast, that when the "two witnesses" (which were to testify, clothed in sackcloth, during the 1260 years of papal supremacy) "shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them."

From this text, it is evident that this beast could not have commenced to ascend out of the bottomless pit, until the two witnesses had finished their testimony, clothed in sackcloth; which was fulfilled during the 1260 years of the wilderness state, or of the papal supremacy. And again, it is almost universally admitted, that the "two witnesses" were slain by the French nation, soon after the breaking out of the French revolution; and, if so, it appears to me to be positive proof that infidel France, commencing about the time of the outbreak of the revolution in A. D. 1789, must be the government symbolized by the scarlet-colored beast, which John saw and which was to ascend out of the bottomless pit. And we are assured from all history, that the French nation commenced to execute judgments upon the woman (the apostate church) soon after the breaking out of the revolution (which was about the time of the ending of the 1260 days of papal supremacy), and has continued most of the time, from that date until the present, to sustain and control the woman, sometimes inflicting upon her sore chastisement, ("judgments"), causing her much anguish and sorrow,—I think it further positive evidence that the French nation, commencing about the above-mentioned time, is the one symbolized by the red beast, at its second appearance upon the stage of action, and referred to by the eighth beast, which was to sustain or carry the woman along while she is receiving her judgments, and until her final overthrow.

Again, we read that this eighth beast "is of the seven;" and as I have shown that infidel France is the government symbolized by the scarlet-colored or eighth beast, I shall not need to produce argument to prove that this (infidel) form of government came up in a nation (the French) which was "of the seven"; for it is universally admitted that the French nation (then called the Franks), under the reign of the Carlovingian dynasty, was the second of the seven heads.

That the French government did become disconnected from the apostate church, in A. D. 1789, at the breaking out of the French revolution, is evident from the fact, that in that year they abolished all privileged orders, and also freedom of conscience, and liberty of the press was decreed to all the subjects throughout the empire. (See Blair's Chronological Tables, page 683.) And a few months later, the so-called Reign of Terror commenced, all forms of religious worship were exterminated from the empire; showing that they had no more affinity towards the church of Rome, than for the Protestant church; and a few years later, when the Reign of Terror had ended, all religionists were permitted by the government to return to the empire and worship unmolested. And although the Catholic religion was established as the religion of the empire, yet it was shorn of all political authority by the pope; and in no sense was there any union between the French government and the government of Rome, for the purpose of compelling men to adopt the Catholic faith.

The historian says, that the universal principle of Napoleon I. during his reign, was free toleration to all his subjects in matters pertaining to the conscience. And finally, after his overthrow, the very principles of the Holy Alliance, by which France was governed, and permitted to exist as a nation, were averse to all persecution; and although some armed mobs of Catholics, and outlaws, persecuted and even put some Protestants to death; yet it was not allowed by the government, and was soon suppressed.

Hence it will be seen that France has never been a papal government, in the sense that the seven heads were to be, since the breaking out of the Revolution in A. D. 1789. But the pagan and infidel spirit has been the leading characteristic of the people. One or two quotations will show that very soon after the commencement of the revolution, during the Reign of Terror, papacy was overthrown and paganism revived.

"The once sacred ceremonies were derisively parodied. They dressed an ox or an ass in pontificial ornaments, and paraded these abominations through the streets; they drank wine from the chalice, and shut the church. They wrote upon the gate of the place or sepulchre, someil eternue (eternal rest.) In a few months the immense material of Catholic worship,—cathedrals, churches, monasteries, presbyteries, towers, belfries, ministers, and ceremonies—had disappeared. The representatives in mission were themselves astonished at the facility with which all this apparel of ancient institutions had vanished. . . . The philosophers of the commune resolved in the middle of November, to accelerate this movement in Paris. . . . They desired to possess themselves of the temples, to offer them a new worship, a kind of renewed paganism, whose dogmas were but images, whose adoration was but a ceremonial, and whose divinity supreme, was but reason become in its own person its own God, and adoring itself in its attributes." Lamartine's History of the Girondists. Vol. 3, page 294.

Again, the same historian says, page 298, "The commune desired to replace the ceremonies of religion by other spectacles, to which the people flocked as they do to all novel sights. The profanation of sacred places—the parody of mysteries—the eclat of pagan rites—were the attractions of these pomps."

From such historical facts as contained in the above quotations, I think it must be evident that France, very soon after the commencement of the revolution in A. D. 1789, was fast changing from a papal to a pagan or infidel nation; and if so, then it is evident that the eighth beast must have commenced to ascend ("ascendeth") out of the bottomless pit, at about the time of the above-mentioned date; if so be (as I have endeavored to show) that the French nation is the eighth beast.

There is one other feature, spoken of in the prophecy as having transpired in connection with the rise of this beast out of the bottomless pit; which if we can show commenced its fulfillment at the breaking out of the revolution, I think will prove beyond a doubt that the French nation is recognized in the prophecy as the eighth beast, as early as at the commencement of that eventful period. The text referred to reads as follows: "And all they that dwell upon the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

We are assured in this text, that "all the world shall wonder when they behold" this beast. Therefore I will quote very briefly from history, to show, that all the world did wonder when they saw the events that were passing in the French nation, soon after the commencement of the revolution.

"In 1793 the French Republic stood forth no longer in self-defense, but as the great aggressor and spoiler of Europe. It exhibited a prowess which shook all the States of Christendom to the centre. . . . All Europe stood in amazement and perturbation at the events that were passing. The prodigious increase of power by France, and the revolting purposes to which she applied it, began to arouse a universal dread for the independence of nations and the existence of social order or public morality. It was natural that kings and aristocracies should regard even the first outbreak of the revolution with dislike and apprehension. Now, from the frightful features it had assumed, this feeling was partaken by the whole world and prevailed even among the most democratic communities. The enlightened citizens of the United States shared it with the ignorant populations of Sarmatia or Roumelia, consequently, upon the first reverse sustained by France all the nations of the earth seemed to rush simultaneously to quell her. The sympathies of mankind were enlisted against her, for she had shown how hideous was the spirit by which she was actuated. The friends of freedom and of human amelioration blushed that they had nourished her virgin struggles for liberty by approbation, and despaired of the sacred cause with which they had once associated her name." Redhead's History of the French Revolutions. Vol. 2: pp. 76 and 113.

To my mind the above quotation settles the question beyond a doubt, that the form of government symbolized by the scarlet colored beast, (which the angel assures us was the eighth beast) commenced to ascend out of the bottomless pit, at the outbreak of the French Revolution.

Again, we read that this beast "shall ascend," and also "ascendeth," out of the pit, showing that it takes a space of time for the beast to extricate himself from it; therefore the question may be asked, At what point of time may this beast be said to have completely extricated itself from the bottomless pit? and I answer: It appears to my mind, that when this nation had attained a fixed government, it may be said to be completely out of the pit; and I understand it to have attained a fixed government, at the coronation of Napoleon I., A. D. 1804.

From this point of time, the military element was the leading characteristic of the French nation; and, like the form of government symbolized by the great red dragon (Pagan Rome), Napoleon's great aim and object was to bring into submission to his government all other nations or governments, whether civil or ecclesiastical; hence we find him as ready to make war upon the papal government of Rome ("the woman"), to bring it in subjection to him, as upon any civil government of Europe; yet the character and principles of Napoleon, as pertaining to religious matters, found free toleration. The historian says, "It was one of the first principles of Napoleon, that perfect freedom of conscience in religious worship should prevail in every State over which he had any control." And although the Catholic religion was established as the religion of the empire; for, (says the historian) "Napoleon judged that a national faith, as a mere element of social order, was indispensable to a community," yet it was shorn of all its former power over the affairs of the State.

Concerning this point, the historian says: "The Gallican church was anew constituted on the former principle of a spiritual union with Rome, but shorn of its territorial basis, and in all temporal matters, and in the administration of religious affairs, made dependent on the civil government of France. The First Consul, in fact, only allowed the pope such sway as was consistent with his own dominion over the church as an institution of the State, and its absolute freedom from foreign interference and influence." Redhead's History of the French Revolutions. Vol. 2, p. 161. Hence it will be seen that the pope was made the vassal of the Emperor Napoleon, and that he was in no way united with the pope in the policy to make war against those who did not hold the faith of the Catholic church. Therefore the Bonaparte dynasty, under the reign of Napoleon I. could not have been the government symbolized by the seventh head; for the seven heads were to be united with the "woman," (apostate church), in the policy of making war against the saints and overcoming them.

Therefore, from all the evidences on this subject, I think the view that I have taken, i. e., that the French nation or government,—commencing about the time of the breaking out of the revolution—during all its changes of rulers until it shall finally go into perdition; is the one symbolized by the scarlet-colored beast, which is also the eighth beast.

Finally, if the view I have presented is in harmony with the prophecy, that is, that the form of government symbolized by the "great red dragon" of the twelfth chapter, was cast into the "bottomless pit" by the strong arm of Charlemagne in A. D. 804; and that this form of government assumed a place again upon the stage of action, in its full capacity, (as symbolized by the red beast of the seventeenth chapter) at the coronation of Napoleon I., in A. D. 1804, then it will be seen that the dragon, or the form of government symbolized by the dragon, was chained in the "bottomless pit" 1000 years.

Again, as there are those who believe that the wounding of one of the seven heads, and the disappearing of the beast into the bottomless pit, symbolize the same thing or event; I will close this article by briefly referring to that subject. I do not understand, as will appear from what I have written upon these subjects, that the bottomless-pit condition of the beast (red beast) has any thing whatever to do with the wounded condition of one of the seven heads. But as most of those with whom I am acquainted who hold to the above view take the position that the Bonaparte dynasty, under the reign of Napoleon I., was the seventh head; and that when that dynasty was overthrown in A. D. 1815, the head was "wounded as it were to death," and was also at that time cast into the bottomless pit,—I will suggest concerning that position, that if we refer to the eighth verse of the seventeenth chapter of Revelation, we shall find that the angel assures the Revelator that the beast which is to go into the bottomless pit, is already in the pit, when the sixth head is upon the stage of action.

Hence it cannot be in harmony with the prophecy, to argue that the beast did not go into the bottomless pit, until after the sixth and seventh heads have fallen. This I have said on the supposition that the Bonaparte dynasty, under the reign of Nopoleon I., is the government symbolized by the seventh head, which, as will appear from what I have written, I cannot now possibly believe.

THE FIRST DOMINION---WHAT IS IT?

"And thou, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion."—Micah 4: 8.

What dominion is here promised to Christ? The prophet calls it the "first dominion"; hence, some infer that reference is made to the dominion that God gave to Adam at creation, while on trial. But stop, "let us reason together"; this cannot be so, unless reference is made to the mere territorial dominion, for the "second Adam" is never to take the first Adam's position as a probationer for endless life, he having already obtained that; but will at once, at the establishment of his kingdom, stand where Adam would have stood, if he had not fallen, at the end of his trial; and the saints, too, will at once "put on immortality," and be "equal to the angels," thus occupying a position which Adam never attained unto, he being a "little lower than the angels,"—a position which Adam was on trial for. Thus the kingdom of Christ, instead of being a return of Adam's trial paradise, will contain a King and subjects, who, at its very beginning, will stand upon the platform of immortality, which Adam never reached; and its surroundings will doubtless correspond with this superior state. Is it wise to insist that Adam's trial dominion, which contained probationers under command to "multiply," the marriage covenant, beasts under command to "multiply," the tree of death, etc., is to be Christ's dominion in the future? No, no! Christ will not be put on trial again, nor will the saints.

Neither will Christ's dominion, like Adam's, include the marriage covenant; there they "neither marry nor are given in marriage." Adam's dominion contained not a single deathless man; Christ's will. Adam's dominion contained only those who were to "multiply"; but not so with Christ's. Adam's trial dominion contained beasts, birds and fishes, for the benefit of probationary man while obeying the command, "Multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it;" but it does not therefore follow that Christ's dominion will be filled with multiplying and dying beasts—unserviceable to immortals—nor will it help the matter to claim immortality for them, for such a class never were in Adam's dominion, besides if they should be in Christ's they would soon overstock the kingdom with their deathless posterity, as none could die.

Hence, I conclude that only the territorial dominion of Adam will come to Christ, minus its mortal appendages, occupying the very position that it would have occupied after the command to "multiply and replenish the earth" should have been complied with, at the end of man's trial; provided he had not fallen before his trial ended. Though there is a chance to infer that man could have eaten of the tree of life at any time, the inference would either cut short the command to "multiply," or allow that man could have multiplied in his immortal state; and if so, why not in his future immortal state? Adam was permitted to eat of the tree of life at some time, optional with God—not with Adam.

GOD WILL NOT LIE.

"God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?"—Num. 23: 19.

If I did not believe that this declaration were true, in the fulfillment of all that God hath spoken, then I might believe that his word might have its fulfillment according to the fanciful interpretation of some writers, who are engaged in trying to prove that the literal word of the Lord does not mean what it says, and who yet profess to believe the PLAIN WORD.

Some think that the terms Israel and Jews can be applied to Gentiles in their literal fulfillment as well as to God's ancient covenant people Israel. Such logic is about as consistent as to call an Englishman an Irishman or American. If such writers can tell us by what way the ordinances of the sun, moon, and stars can cease to shine and perform their regular course as God hath ordained, then we may trust their wisdom in telling how Israel will cease from being a nation before the Lord forever. Or if they can measure heaven above, and search out the foundations of the earth beneath, then we may believe their interpretation, that God has forever cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done. Jer. 31: 35-37; 33: 19-26.

Will some one tell us who are those spoken of in Jer. 31: 8, 9 (if not Israel as God says), and if the immortal saints are to be gathered weeping, etc.; and when gathered, if they will come and sing in the height of Zion, and flow together to the goodness of the Lord, for wheat, and for wine, and for oil, and for the young of the flock, and of the herd; and their soul shall be as a watered garden; and they shall not sorrow any more at all." We fully believe that the covenant spoken of in this chapter and others Paul was a faithful witness of. He took heed to what the Lord had said, when he called upon the nation to declare in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him and keep him as a shepherd doth his flock (ver. 10). We think Paul's admonition is very necessary for some now, to "not be wise in their own conceits." Rom. 11: 25.

Here Paul faithfully proclaims the new covenant that will be made with Israel; also in Heb. 8: 8; and although Paul was a minister of the new covenant to be made with Israel, it does not prove that that covenant had then gone into effect, any more than a proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom proves that the kingdom was then set up.

If Israel does not mean Israel, and Jew Jew; and lion, wolf, lamb, kid, sucking child, asp, etc., do not mean what the words express, then we can no more rely on what God says, and Universalists may be as correct as any. Nevertheless, I believe the word of the Lord is pure, and he will not lie like man, neither will he alter the things that have gone out of his mouth to suit any who do not choose to believe it.

If Jesus the Messiah were here now, he might justly say to this generation and many who profess to believe in his return,—"O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." G. DILLABAUGH.

HASTE THY COMING!

AIR.—"Down upon the Rappahannock."

Haste thy coming, haste thy coming,
For we've long been waiting here,
Long been watching, sighing, mourning,
In thine absence, Savior dear.
But we'll trust thy promise ever,
And we will not sigh in vain,
For we've faith there's nothing surer
Than that thou 'lt return again.

CHORUS.

Haste thy coming, haste thy coming,
Let peaceful scenes again abound;
War and strife then be forgotten,
And the lost again be found.

Haste thy coming, haste thy coming,
End this wicked war and strife,
End this sorrow and this mourning,
Bring our loved ones back to life.
Oh! what scenes of pain and anguish
Meet us as we sojourn here;
Friends are doomed to sigh and languish,
Yes, redemption draweth near.

WHICH IS RIGHT?

Bro. A. Good morning, Bro. M., you are quite a stranger. It is, indeed, a sad and unexpected occasion that has brought us together, but the sudden death of our good brother was well improved by Eld. G——. I think I never listened to a more eloquent discourse. What is your opinion?

Bro. M. I quite agree with you as to the eloquence and power of the delivery; but I must say that I regretted the apostolic teachings were not substituted for the popular theology, and poetical imaginations of man's devising; such preaching conveys no comfort to my mind.

Bro. A. Well, I do say you are hard to suit, but I guess you are alone in your opinion; for my part, I could almost wish to exchange places with our deceased brother, while Eld. G—— depicted the glories of the heavenly mansions, and the rapturous meeting with sainted friends, I could almost fancy I heard the music of their golden harps. Is not all that scriptural?

Bro. M. I confess the picture was a pleasing one, but I think you will find it difficult to show me a "Thus saith the Lord," to sanction all we heard to-day. I have lately been searching my Bible to see what ground there is for the views we have been taught to cherish concerning the state of the dead previous to the resurrection; I can find nothing conclusive about happiness or punishment until "Christ comes again to reward every man according to his work." I know detached passages are often taken, together with inferences drawn from parables, and these are made prominent, even in contradiction of explicit declarations of God's word, which uniformly points to the resurrection of the body and the coming of Christ—as the time of reward. Paul's desire to "be absent from the body and present with the Lord," is continually quoted, but how seldom are we reminded of his still more earnest longing to attain unto the resurrection from the dead.

Bro. A. Why, it seems to me rather arrogant for an humble individual like yourself to profess to understand doctrine better than our ministers and numbers of learned men who have devoted their lives to the study of the Bible, many of whom have died in raptures in view of the glory upon which they were about to enter.

Bro. M. Such impressions may be delusive, being the results of early teaching; an increase of light has shone upon the pages of inspiration in these latter days; those who have not been blessed with the light will not be answerable for its rejection. Death is in the Bible called sleep; our creeds confine the term to our bodies. How far they are right is questionable. When Christ, who is our life shall appear then shall we appear with him in glory." "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." Here popular preachers tell us the soul is satisfied as soon as it "shuffles off this mortal coil," the body is a "clog or hindrance to spiritual enjoyment," etc.

Bro. A. I will own there is more Scripture on your side than I supposed, but I should be very unwilling to believe so gloomy a doctrine. I have lost several dear children, and it is an unspeakable comfort to think of them, as ministering spirits about my path. What a fine poetical idea it was, noticed today, "That the door of heaven seemed left ajar," in view of the lonely, afflicted wife of our departed friends,—then those thrillingly beautiful lines that were sung,—

Bro. M. Yes, brother, but we must learn to prefer truth to poetry, and a "Thus saith the Lord" to all man's creeds or traditions. "Comfort one another with these words," says an inspired apostle in 1 Thess. 4; 13-18. Why are these verses so often overlooked by our ministers, even by those who profess to have returned to apostolic teaching? But I rejoice to know light is advancing on this subject. Many, like the Bereans, are searching "to see if these things are so." It is not to be expected that the majority will embrace these views, but may God give us grace to follow truth even through evil report, "to prove all things, and hold fast that which is good."

Bro. A. Farewell, Bro. M., you and I must agree to differ. M. PARRY.

For the World's Crisis.

RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Says one, The Lord will judge the world in righteousness (Ps. 96: 13). What is Righteousness? "All thy commandments are righteousness" (Ps. 119: 172). "Blessed is he that doeth righteousness" (Psalms 106: 3). "Righteousness delivereth from death" (Prov. 10: 2). "Righteousness tendeth to life" (Prov. 11: 13). "The law of God is perfect, converting the soul" (Ps. 19: 8.) "My righteousness shall not be abolished" (Isa. 51: 6). From these texts we conclude that God will judge the world by the ten commandments,—that keeping them converts the soul and delivers it from death.

But what says Paul? "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, . . . for therein is the righteousness of God revealed" (Rom. 1: 16, 17), "even the righteousness of God, which is by faith in Jesus Christ" (Rom. 3: 22), "for if righteousness came by the law, then is Christ died in vain" (Gal. 2: 21). "Having begun in the Spirit, shall we be made perfect in the flesh?" (Gal. 3: 2). "No man is justified by the law in the sight of God, for the just shall live by faith" (Gal. 3: 11). "To Abraham and his seed was the promise made, that he should inherit the earth. And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect" (Gal. 3: 17). "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise, but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgression, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made" (Gal. 3: 18, 19). "If there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law" (Gal. 3: 21). Let us not, then, go about to "establish our own righteousness, . . for Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth" (Rom. 10: 3, 4). What saith the righteousness that is of faith? "The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith that we preach, that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved" (Rom. 10: 8, 9). "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law" (Gal. 3: 13). "Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free" (Gal. 5: 1). "Be filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are of Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God" (Phil. 1: 11). "And be found of him, not having our own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Jesus Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith" (Phil. 3: 9). "For according to his mercy he saves us, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost" (Titus 3: 5).

"Avoid contentions and strivings about the law, for they are unprofitable and vain" (Titus 3: 9). "Mark them which cause divisions and offenses, contrary to the doctrine ye have learned, and avoid them" (Rom. 16: 17). But look into the perfect law of liberty, and continue therein, and thou shalt be blessed indeed (James 1: 25). For "whosoever abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God; but he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath the Father and the Son" (2 John 9). MRS. C. A. KNOWLES.

"BUT THE DAY OF THE LORD WILL COME."

Men may ridicule the day of the Lord, but the unerring word says it will come. This is a positive declaration which all the fustian of theology cannot change. "God hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world by the same Jesus that ascended up into heaven. The Sodomites of the present day reject him, they treat this momentous subject with contempt, nevertheless it will come, they cannot prevent it.

"The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord; the mighty man shall cry bitterly. That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness, a day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high towers. And I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord; and their blood shall be poured out as dust and their flesh as dung. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy; for he shall make even a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land."—Zeph. 1: 14-18.

The sure word of the Lord proves that it will be a day of terror to those who love not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, but the summons to judgment all must obey, not only those that are living when Christ comes, but also all that are dead. Just and unjust must hear the sound,—Come to judgment! Those who hate the Judge will cry to rocks and mountains to hide them, but the judgment will set and the books be opened. No rocks and mountains can hide, no lawyer can plead for those who said, "We will not have this man to reign over us." All who are in their graves shall come forth, to be either saved or lost. No middle place, no Papist-purifying residence, no ethereal phantom, no funeral sermon which makes the narrow way a broad road, can prevent the judgment of Almighty God. When the trumpet shall sound all will be there to receive according to their works; those who have sown to the flesh shall reap corruption, and those who have sown to the Spirit shall reap life everlasting.

But oh! that day,—that day of the Lord will surely come; dreadful day to the ungodly, but unto those who look for him, who have presented themselves a living sacrifice, it will be a day of rejoicing, and their shout shall fill the heavens. This is our God, and we have waited for him,—I have professed to look for that great [illegible] for many years, and the questions, Am I ready now? Am I ready for translation? Am I walking with God like Enoch? urge the prayer for more consecration of all that I have and am, that I and my house may serve the Lord, whilst we have any being, that not only every action and word but also that every thought, may be brought into the obedience of Jesus Christ our Lord. My whole being cries out for the living God. When shall I appear before him? He will come. He has promised to come. He is faithful and will fulfill his word. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly! Amen.

For the World's Crisis.

"STRONG CONSOLATION,"

"To us who have fled for refuge to the hope set before us in the gospel."

"Members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." How can we but grow up into Him our living Head, and be like him, and see him as he is?

"He'll not live in glory, and leave us behind."

"Say ye to the righteous, that it shall be well with him: for they shall eat the fruit of their doings."

"What gracious words are these?
Their sweetness who can tell?
In time, and in eternity,
'Tis with the righteous well."

"Let not your heart be troubled. . . . In my Father's house are many mansions. . . . I go to prepare a place for you. . . . I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also. . . . Because I live, ye shall live also. Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth (to receive as much again) give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." "Fear not, little flock: for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

"Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. . . . If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. This commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God, love his brother also." "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth. And hereby (in so doing) we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him. For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God, and whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight. And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment. And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us."

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so (in so doing) shall ye be my disciples. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love. . . . These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you. Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you. These things I command you, that ye love one another. If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. Remember the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying, they will keep yours also. But all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake [illegible]

But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. And of some have compassion, making a difference: and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh.

Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God [illegible] dominion [illegible] Your [illegible] rifice, in Jesus Christ, to God.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Tuesday, March 15, 1864.

DISCUSSION.

We have arranged to hold a discussion at Lyceum Hall, Lynn, Mass., with Eld. Moses Hull, of Battle Creek, Mich., commencing Tuesday evening, March 22nd, to continue four evenings.

QUESTION. "Has man in his nature an immortal principle, which, after the death of the body, is capable of returning and communicating with the inhabitants of earth?"

Aff.—Moses Hull. Neg.—Miles Grant.

Eld. Hull has been known for some years as a leading man among the Seventh-day Adventists. Within a few months he has joined the Spiritualists, and is being made quite prominent among them. He has been lecturing on Spiritualism, in Boston, for some weeks. We shall expect an interesting discussion.

CLOSE OF THE VOLUME.

It will be observed that this is the last number of the Volume. Now is the time to renew your subscription. We trust all are ready to say "continue my paper another year, if time lasts." We shall endeavor to make "our paper" still more interesting, as we approach the end of the present dispensation. Please let us hear fom you immediately. Do not put off writing, as the burden will only grow heavier. You will feel the best to do it at once, and have it out of the way, besides making us glad. Let every one try to send a new subscriber. Let us ALL go to work with renewed zeal to spread the light and truth.

Many are doing nobly already, and the more they do for the Lord's cause, the richer they feel. Come, dear Brn. and Srs., let us make a general rally to arouse every body to get ready for the coming of Jesus. We feel assured that we are right in looking for his speedy coming. Our faith was never stronger than now. Praise the Lord, we are almost to the land of promise. Let us gird on the armor, and be true to our high calling. "Stand up for Jesus." Do not sleep now. Awake! awake!

O Lord, arouse every child of thine to watch in this hour of peril, lest the enemy take them in his snares. O bless thy children every where with courage to do their whole duty in these last moments of time, that they may be ready for "the marriage of the Lamb."

SPIRITUALIST CONVENTION.

The Spiritualists have recently held a large convention in Mercantile Hall, Boston, on Feb. 24th, 25th and 26th. They are gaining ground rapidly. They are very jubilant over their great success. Their ranks are fast filling up with those who hold the first positions in the social and political world,—men and women of intelligence. They have become disgusted with the fashionable, popular religion of the day, and have been driven to a semi-infidelity, thence into Spiritualism; from which but few, we fear, will ever be delivered.

A prominent Spiritualist lecturer, who was once a preacher of the gospel of the kingdom, and the second coming of Christ, remarked to us a short time since, that the conflict is now "between Spiritualists and Adventists." He said the churches could not meet them, because their views were very similar. We replied, that we were well aware of the truth of his statement; and that the great question of the age is, "Did the Lord or the Devil tell the truth, when talking with our first parents?" The Lord said to Adam, "Thou shalt surely die." Now if Adam was immortal, as the spirits say, then of course he could not die, and Satan had the truth. We can see no chance to come to any other conclusion. And it is very evident that the great Deceiver is making his master effort now to convince all men that he told the truth, so as to destroy the confidence men have in the Bible. The Spiritualists admit the Bible does not teach the immortality of the soul, hence "the new revelation," given by the spirits, is necessary to convince men of this doctrine. Every thing rests on this. If the demons cannot succeed in making us believe that man is immortal, they can get ho foundation on which to build. Their whole system falls to the ground at once, when we reject Satan's lie to our first parents.

We have great reason to thank the Lord for the light that shines from his word in these last days, to expose the Satanic "fables" that are being scattered through the world at the present time. Every one who sees the light should hold it up with boldness. It is too late to be half-hearted in this matter. We should step out boldly for the truth and right, at the risk of all things earthly.

One important feature of the convention at Boston was talk about "ORGANIZATION." They think the time is at hand for active measures for their object. It was advocated that the present existing laws of the country should be abrogated, instead of making more. Mr. Loveland said, "Our first work will be to abrogate laws." They are laying plans to unitize the world into one great body, and say the "first thing is to remove obstructions." It was remarked that the object of the convention was to provide a "platform" for future operations.

A prominent speaker in the convention remarked "There is no judge outside of you." This he made very emphatic.

Moses Hull remarked that since he had become a Spiritualist, he had learned that he was "immortal." He said, "Men are not dead."

It was stated in the convention that "many prominent men at the Capitol, (Washington) are becoming interested in Spiritualism." He said he "went through infidelity to get into Spiritualism." This we found was the experience of most of them.

A noted speaker, H. C. Wright, remarked, "there is no authority in the world outside of my soul. I acknowledge no other." Dr. Gardner said in the course of his remarks, "I do not believe the Bible." He is well known as one of the leading Spiritualists in Boston. He claimed that one of their resolutions, which he and others strongly advocated, struck "at the foundation of all the religions of the day." It appeared to be the general sentiment of the conference, that there is no standard of right and wrong. Each should do what is right in his own eyes, without regard to God or the Bible.

Mr. Spence said, "I have no use for the word God. Mr. Wright says, 'Every one has a God.' I have none."

Spiritualism ends in Atheism,—denying Father and Son. It is making rapid progress in all lands. Those who hold to the natural immortality of man will find it hard to resist its onward march. We have great reason to thank the Lord for the bright light that now shines upon his word. Let us walk in it, and let it shine.

THE MAN OF WONDER.

All the world are wondering at Napoleon's movements. He talks one way, and acts the opposite. No one can tell what he will do next, but all are expecting some new developments soon. Things are in motion about him, and kings tremble when he stirs. All things betoken a crash among the nations, in which he will be the prominent actor.

The Boston Journal of March 8th says:—

"We have our foreign files to the 24th ult. The purposes of France are the subject of much speculation. There is said to be great quiet around Paris, but intense activity in the remote arsenals and dockyards. The correspondent of the London Herald gives currency to the report that there are 400,000 men under arms, who could easily be placed on a war footing, and so perfect are the means of transport, that an army of 150,000 men might be concentrated on any given point almost before the knowledge that they had been set in motion had become general."

MORE PATRIOTISM THAN RELIGION.

In these "last days" patriotism seems to taken the place of christianity, in the hearts of the people. "Our country" first, and the service of the Lord when you can't serve the devil any longer. One thing is certain, the "power" of godliness is seldom seen among its professors. The "form" remains, but the vitality has departed. Ceremonies abound, but they are worldly. They are only shadows of the reality. "From such," says the apostle, "turn away."

These thoughts passed through our mind while reading the account of the reception by the State and city authorities of Mass., of the thirty-second regiment and other troops, when they returned from the war, and arrived in Boston, Sabbath, Jan. 17th. The Boston Journal says it was "one of the most signal occasions of spontaneous and heartfelt popular enthusiasm which it has for a long time been our lot to record."

The troops arrived in Boston at half past eleven o'clock, A. M. The Journal says:—

"On the moving of the column from the railway station, it is undoubtedly within bounds to say that there were ten thousand people occupying Kneeland, Lincoln, Beach and other contiguous streets, while doors, windows, housetops and every other accessible or available spot from which a view of the soldiers might be obtained, was completely taken up by the expectant throng. Loud cheering arose on all sides from the time when the troops first filed out of the depot building, during and until the end of their route; and it is no more than the truth to assert that along their whole course the greetings took the form of a popular ovation, and that they enjoyed a perfect marche de triomphe through the city."

"McCartney's (First Massachusetts) Battery, the members of which are at home on a furlough having re-enlisted, were engaged in firing a salute from the hill near the flag staff, as the battalion was passing from Boylston street to the State House.

In front of the State House there was a very great crowd, composed mainly of the most intelligent, wealthy and honored citizens of Boston. The column halted, and after a brief period of waiting, His Excellency the Governor appeared, accompanied by his military staff, the Adjutant General, Surgeon General, and other officers; also attended by a large number of Senators and Representatives, Mayor Lincoln, Hon. Josiah Quincy, Jr., Hon. Peleg W. Chandler, Rev. Dr. Neale, Peter Sinclair, Esq., Col. F. J. Parker, and many others.

The procession with its accession of guests moved to Faneuil Hall, where they arrived at quarter past 1 o'clock."

IN FANEUIL HALL.

After prayer by Dr. Neale, the Mayor requested "those near the tables to 'fire and fall back.'" (Cheers.)

The Mayor said that without consulting Col. Prescott, he would give the order, "Attend to your rations."

The men fell to with alacrity and demonstrated that they fully understood and appreciated the order. The band played patriotic tunes at intervals until the cessation of the rattling of knives and forks evinced that the clamorous appetites had been appeased."

Next in order was a speech from Gov. Andrew, When speaking of those who had died on the battle-field he said they were "no longer obedient to any earthly voice," but had "already ascended to join the Great Commander." At the close of his speech there was "prolonged applause;" then followed "Hail to the Chief," from the band. At the close of the exercises, nine cheers were given.

From Boston, the troops marched to Charlestown, where they met a most enthusiastic reception. The Journal says of it:—

"Following the generous reception of the soldiers in Boston, the Stone Light Guard, Company I, of the 32d regiment, in command of Lieut. Warren, was tendered a formal welcome to their native city. It was an extraordinary demonstration, participated in by the City Government, the local military and fire departments, and the citizens generally. All the public buildings in the city were decorated with flags, and the residences of the Mayor and other distinguished citizens were also ornamented by buntings, flags, etc. All day long the streets were filled with people, and their shouts and cheers of welcome when the company arrived were almost deafening. The escort of the veterans from Faneuil Hall to Charlestown, over the Warren bridge, was the largest ever witnessed in the city. The whole was in command of Mr. Barney Hall, Chief Marshal, and, besides various bands of music, consisted of the Charlestown Artillery Company, Capt. Howard; the City Guards, Lieut. Walter Everett; the Charlestown Cadets, Capt. George Chapin; the Hamilton Guards; the various members of the City Government; the fire Department, Chief Engineer David S. Tucker; a calvacade of citizens, also a large number on foot, the procession concluding with the honored veterans of Company I of the 32d regiment (the Stone Light Guard) in command of Lieut. Lucius F. Warren."

VALUABLE WORKS.

The works of Dr. Wm. A. Alcott, on Tea, Coffee and Tobacco, should be read by every one. They are worth many times what they cost. If you have never read them, send to Bro. G. F. Locke, East Weare, N. H., and order them at once. The work on Tea and Coffee, single, is 15cts., postage two cts., and the one on Tobacco is the same; but the two will be sent, postage paid, for 30cts.

THE TRACT FUND.

BRO. GRANT:—Thinking the request of Bro. Taylor a very good one, I cheerfully avail myself of the privilege of complying with it, and send twenty-five cents each for two of the readers of the Crisis. I consider the Tract Cause a good one, and that it should be sustained by every lover of truth. I believe it to be a successful way of spreading light. The truth is what we need now. May it be spread far and wide. For they that gain a thorough knowledge of Bible truth have in possession a richer treasure than earth can give. I have been for some time past in search of truth, and would not part with the little I have gained for any earthly object. I do not value the sacrifice I made for the truth.

I am much interested in reading the Crisis, and cheered by letters from those of like faith. To such I would say, be faithful until our great Deliverer comes. Then how joyful will be the meeting of the scattered flock, to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the kingdom. LUCY ANN HALL.

TRACTS.

BRO. GRANT:—Enclosed, please receive $10.00, to be appropriated in aid of the Tract Cause, which will make up the twenty-five cent subscription of those who are too poor or too penurious to pay it for themselves; and may the blessing of the Lord and the saving power of the Holy Spirit attend it and all the efforts of the Society to extend the knowledge of God's truth and salvation to the perishing.

The tokens of the speedy return of our long absent Lord are thickening, and I do rejoice in the prospect that this weary pilgrimage, this long, dark night of sorrow and trial, is about to close and give place to that rest and glory for which we wait.

Praying that God may still bless you and your faithful fellow laborers abundantly, and speedily give you the "crown of glory that fadeth not away," I remain as ever,

Your Bro. in hope, Z. WHITNEY.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

"GIVE, AND IT SHALL BE GIVEN TO YOU."

BRO. GRANT:—I have seen the call for fifteen hundred dollars for the Tract Fund. Jesus says, "Give, and it shall be given unto you." May God help us to do with our might what our hands find to do, doing it for Jesus. Giving will not impoverish us, neither will withholding enrich us. May none who are looking for Jesus, and love his appearing, be found guilty of withholding the Lord's money. Enclosed please find forty cents for the Tract Fund. Yours in love, WM. L. CARROLL.

FOR THE GOOD CAUSE.

BRO. GRANT:—I like Bro. Taylor's twenty-five cent idea much. It is the true way of raising money. More contribute, more are interested, more are blessed, and more money is raised. I enclose $1.00, not so much to pay for some who are not able to do so, as to help make up for the more numerous class who are careless or think it too small a matter for them to attend to. God bless the good cause. WILLIAM STARK.

BOOKS—A NEW PROGRAMME.

I have long felt that more must be done to circulate books among the people. Tracts are the light skirmishers; books the heavy armed troops. Tracts pioneer the way; books help complete the work of instructing those whose interest is once awakened in the things of the kingdom of God.

Occupied myself with multiplied cares and labors in connection with the spread of divine truth, I have earnestly pressed this matter upon the attention of the Christian Publication Society, and have held back from this department of labor, in the hope that they would go forward and occupy this field. . . . . They, however, decline to assume the responsibility necessary, and hence I must, as usual, do what no one else will do. . . . . I shall need help in the work, but help will come, and come just at the right time, if I am guided by the Lord.

DIFFICULTIES.

1. The cost of paper and book-binding of course depends largely upon the cost of cotton used in the manufacture. A book costing $1 a few years ago would cost $1.50 or $2.00 now. The price of books has advanced in that proportion. Labor has also advanced in price, and hence books must keep up with the times. But if I advance the prices of books, I diminish the sales, and so defeat my own object. To reduce the price of books is, under these circumstances, simply preposterous in a business point of view. It would prove a very bad speculation. Nevertheless, in view of the demands and necessities of the case, I have concluded to do what I can to meet the emergency. And in unfolding my purpose, let me first give you

A GLANCE AT BOOK-MAKING.

"I wish you would get that sermon printed," said a brother to me one day, after listening to my discourse. "Well, how many copies would you take?" "O, I should want one," was the answer. And so he was so anxious to see it in print, that he would like to have me spend $50 in money, a month's time, run the risk of losing the investment, take the trouble of selling the books, and he would risk ten or fifteen cents in the enterprise—or the price of a single copy! If when a book is printed many are sold, there may be a profit; if but few, there must be a loss.

But says one, "The Tract Society sells books cheaper than you do, and your whole business is a money-making affair." So says my special friend Dr. Demas, and his brother-in-law Diotrephes, who after trying in vain to make their own religion pay well, and failing for want of stock and capital, are in sore affliction to think that any one else can get along better by minding his own business, than they can by meddling with other men's affairs. "A money-making business," eh? Well, why should it not be? Do business men often do business without making money, or desiring to make it, unless they belong to the prevalent race of immaculate politicians and shoddy contractors, in whom patriotism is said to be paramount? If I am forced to do business that no one else dare do for fear of a loss, and if I have gumption enough to do it and live on what other folks would starve upon, pray who is to blame for that? And why should n't I make money? Or is that pleasant occupation to be entirely confined to covetous sinners and worldly church members? If so, who is to care for the poor, help brethren in trouble, buy off preachers when they are conscripted, and their churches will not pay their exemption, and also take care of sick ministers when churches have worked them almost to death, and turned them out like old horses to die, as winter comes on?

But let me explain this matter of publishing a little. The American Tract Society in New York publishes a book called "The Pilgrim's Progress." It would be worth at first, say $300, to write it, and $300 to stereotype it for printing. Then making a thousand books would cost perhaps some $300 more. The retailer who sells the books will also want 30 cts. per copy for his trouble, making $300 more. Now if only 1000 copies are sold, each book must sell for $1.20 to pay these expenses; but the publisher has care, labor, risk of loss, rent, clerk-hire, responsibility, and he must have about 30 cts. for each book for this part of the work. Hence the book must sell at $1.50 to pay expenses. And then if all are not sold, he loses more than he makes. But the book is sold for 40 or 50 cts. How so? Simply by selling a great many. For when the first 1000 is paid for, then there is no more paid for writing or stereotyping the book, but only the expenses of manufacturing and sale. So the future outlay is only 30 or 40 cts. per copy—simply for paper, printing and binding.

Again, Bunyan is dead, so they pay him nothing. Some one who liked the book paid the cost of stereotyping and gave it to the Society. So they have only had the cost of making the books from the beginning, and as they live rent free, and have good salaries, they are able to issue books quite cheaply. But some of their books cost more than this, and are sold higher, and they have now advanced their prices to meet the rise in the prices of materials and labor. Now, without their resources, their donations, buildings, printing presses, binderies, etc., etc., I still feel disposed to issue books about as cheap as they do, provided brethren will help in the matter. And notwithstanding high prices, hard times, and depreciated currency, I propose to enter the field and publish

BOOKS CHEAPER THAN EVER.

Let me then state what my intentions are not.

1. I do not wish to issue books as a speculation. I am too busy for this. I have other work to do; but I publish books, as I always have, because the church and world need them, and if I do not do it no one else will.

2. I do not wish to make books cheap by making them shabby, so that men will say of me, as I heard a man say of another some time ago, "The most that I can see that looks as if he believes that the Lord is coming soon, is the way that he binds his books." I propose to use good type, good paper, and have the work well done.

3. I do not propose to get up a business which will take all my time, wear me out, and hinder my preaching to sinners; and hence I shall keep no accounts, and do no business on credit.

4. I do not mean to run in debt for making books, thus having to pay higher prices; nor do I mean to trust out half the books to agents and so charge those who do pay enough to cover the loss on those who do not; having to wait years for my money, dun folks enough to earn it, and finally never get it.

5. I do not intend to get a great lot of paper on hand, costing $500 per ton, print a host of books which nobody wants, and keep them on hand and lose my money, or sell a few and make those who buy them give enough to pay for all that remain unsold. On the contrary, in view of all the facts, I make the following

PROPOSALS.

1 To manufacture books in such quantities as may be needed, at the lowest practicable rates.

2. To give copies freely, as usual, to the poor, and also to the stingy.

3. To sell them at the lowest practicable prices.

4. To ask all who wish for them to send in their orders at once, stating how many copies they will take and pay for in advance.

5. To send them out at once, when printed, and not have them lying around on hand for months or years.

6. To get through with the job, use what money I can earn by doing it, as the Lord will, and attend to other affairs as may be duty.

The books will be issued both in cloth and in paper covers, in neat and convenient style, and will comprise a uniform edition of the books which I have written and edited, in five uniform volumes, of over four hundred pages each. These will compose the beginning of

THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.

VOLUME 1. The Voice of the Church, or the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer; or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. 7th Edition. 420 pp. 12 mo.

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proves that the common notion of the world's conversion was unknown to the Church of Christ for 1,500 years. It quotes the views of some four hundred of the greatest theologians known, giving an account of each, and presenting their statements on either side, in their own words. Multitudes of commendatory notices from preachers and papers, of all kinds, might be quoted.

VOLUME II. The Signs of the Times, or a Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings.

Presenting a painful picture of the predicted "perils" of the last days (2 Tim. 3: 1–8); the Selfishness, Covetousness, Hypocrisy, Infidelity, Licentiousness, Cruelty and Criminality of Christendom, as evidenced by STATISTICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE ACCOUNTS of the World's WEALTH; the enormous recent increase of Gold and Coinage; the abominations of SLAVERY; the COTTON TRADE and manufacture,—its origin, progress, and extent; BRITISH TYRANNY in the East Indies—seventy-five millions of men ground in the very dust—thirty millions of people robbed of their homes and lands by British avarice; the OPIUM TRADE; the OPIUM WAR—one thousand Chinese MURDERED DAILY by Christian England's Opium; TWENTY-SIX THOUSAND HEATHEN IDOLS and TEMPLES supported by British Gold; the idol JUGGERNAUT sustained by the British Government; FIFTY THOUSAND Chinese COOLIES kidnapped and carried into Slavery under the American Flag; the AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE—Eighty-three vessels carrying the American flag engaged in it within eighteen months in 1859–60; the PRIDE and BOASTING of the age; the MORALS OF CHRISTENDOM; STATISTICS of Licentiousness, Illegitimacy, Divorces, Child-murdering—its terrible increase in America, Prostitution in London, Paris, New York, etc., Immoral Diseases, Obscene Publications, Foundling Hospitals, etc., the CRUELTIES OF CHRISTENDOM—Wars and butcheries; NAVAL and MILITARY STATISTICS for 1845, 1854, and 1862; the vast increase of warlike preparations; the CARNALITY and SECURITY of the age, and finally, the PROSPECTS OF THE CHURCH OF GOD; the Coming of the Lord; the Resurrection; the New Earth; and the Everlasting Kingdom of God.

QUESTIONS.

1. If the two witnesses are the Old and New Testaments, when did they finish their testimony?

2. If, after they have finished their testimony, the beast kills them, what matter is it?

3. Is the word prophet applied to any-thing but man in Scripture?

4. When did they cease to have spirit and life in them? (11th ver.)

5. If prophets mean men in the 18th ver., why not in the 10th?

6. The beast that kills them is the one that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, that was, and is not, and yet is; and he did not exist as such until 1804–5. How, then, could he kill them in 1793, or thereabouts?

Obituaries.

MISS MARY JANE PARKMAN.

After years of pain and infirmity it pleased God who "giveth his beloved sleep," to grant repose to our Sister, Mary Jane Parkman, who sweetly rested from her labors in Boston, Dec. 23d, 1863, aged thirty-eight years.

She was born in 1825, the daughter of the late John Parkman, Esq., and inherited not only the lesser blessings of wealth and position, but those more noble endowments, superior intelligence, earnest sympathy, and practical common sense, all of which were improved and developed by the most careful culture, both in this country and Europe.

Possessed of strong religious tendencies from childhood, when fourteen years of age the conversation of an elder sister, then recently converted, awakened her to the first stages of a christian life. Her early impressions, however, though marked, were not entirely permanent, and it was not till a few years later that she dated her conversion.

At that time, in company with a friend, she attended a prayer meeting of humble disciples, in an upper room; and being much interested in the study of the Scriptures, she learned from these that eternal life was the gift of God, through Christ; that immortality was brought to light in the gospel; and that without this blessing the sinner must utterly perish. The simplicity of the worship of these disciples, and the hope of gaining and the fear of losing immortal life, combined to fix her mind again on heavenly things, though, from want of a clear understanding of the way of salvation, she struggled on in doubt and darkness for about two years before she attained to an abiding faith in Jesus Christ, and was buried with him by baptism unto death, arising thence to walk with him in newness of life.

Rejecting all denominational names and titles, counting herself as a companion of all them that fear God, acknowledging no creed but the Bible, no name but Christian, and no master but Christ, from this time her heart and hand were with "the Good Shepherd" and his "little flock." The native kindness of her heart, cultured as it had been amid the genial and generous influences of a happy home, gathered to itself new inspiration and devotion from the constraining power of Christ's own love; and having given first her own self unto the Lord, she endeavored thenceforth to serve her generation by the will of God.

Her whole soul entered earnestly and yet wisely into all works of faith and labors of love, while in inward and outward conflicts God trained her heart to exercise "the patience of hope."

Henceforth she lived for others. Now visiting the disconsolate, now providing for the poor, and again lifting up the fallen and the depressed. At one time she opens her rooms and calls in a circle of young ladies, to whom she gives her services as a teacher of those higher branches of study which their limited opportunities had debarred them from pursuing, thus qualifying them for positions which were otherwise unattainable; and again her sympathies flow out to homeless and orphaned children, and her large heart throbs with generous pity for the oppressed and down-trodden bondmen, and she dares by word and deed to show her sympathy with the poor dejected slave, who sits in darkness and in the shadow of death.

Still, though constantly busied in all acts of christian philanthropy, her soul was not at rest. She longed for a deeper fellowship with the heavenly Father, a fuller sympathy with his only begotten Son, a closer and holier walk with God. For this she sought the Lord anew with earnest prayers, and also availed herself of the aid and counsel of such as were more experienced and advanced than herself in the knowledge of the things of God. Thus she was led to devote her whole being more fully and heartily to the Lord, surrendering herself in all things to his will, and seeking to be led more entirely by his Spirit and by his word.

From that period of self-renunciation and more perfect trustfulness, may be dated the happiest and most fruitful years of her religious life. In intimate association with a much loved and congenial christian friend, Miss O—, she established a weekly prayer meeting in the single basement room of an aged colored Sister, "Ma'am White," and there, turning away from those literary and fashionable circles she might have graced so well, while she lived she chose to commune with God and with his little and lowly ones. And she came not among the poor with only the pious words of a tender christian heart, but also with generous deeds of an open christian hand, in the spirit of one who remembered "the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." And though she had at this time partially withdrawn from the more public labors connected with great benevolent associations, it was only under an increasing sense of personal responsibility and stewardship; that she with her chosen associate might be more like the blessed Master, who "went about doing good."

For the last four or five years of her life, amid these pleasant scenes of christian labor, a new thought forced itself upon her mind. Previously possessed of most excellent health, strong, courageous, active and self-reliant, a change came over her. She feared and then knew that she was smitten with a mortal disease, and doomed to a painful and protracted scene of infirmity and anguish, the only possible relief from which depended upon a critical and dangerous surgical operation. She was conscious that death could not be very far away, and might be very near. But this shadow on her sky seemed only to cause her to seek to work more zealously while her day of toil might last.

About three years ago Miss Parkman became, through providential circumstances, especially interested in the teachings of the Scriptures concerning the Coming and Kingdom of the Lord. Previously the current and indefinite ideas upon these subjects comprised the extent of her information; but when her mind was directed to the true hope of the christian and the reasons upon which it rests, —the Resurrection of the dead, the personal and eternal reign of Christ upon a ransomed earth, and the prophetical, social, political and moral signs and tokens of the probable nearness of that day of deliverance and salvation,—a new joy inspired her soul. The isolated truths of life and immortality as brought to light in the gospel, so long cherished by her, now assumed their glorious place and proportion in the divine arrangement; and streams of light flashed in upon her mind. The Bible seemed like a new book, and to a friend she remarked that she had learned more of the word of God during the few months past, than during seventeen years of hearing from the pulpit and reading the Scriptures.

Among those who listened to the expositions of the living oracles, I remember few persons who seemed to feast upon the sacred words with more delight than she. And when she gathered with us in our little Bible class, her interest was intense. Naturally incredulous, and possessed of great quickness of perception, she at a glance looked through shams and fallacies, and was as ready to detect false inferences, weigh arguments, and propound inquiries, as to listen to suggestions and gracefully yield to sound reasonings and inspired declarations. Her keen yet playful humor, coupled with an earnest love of truth, was quite as much gratified in the exposure of an inconsistency or absurdity in her own cherished opinions, as in those held by others; and comprehending the bearings of a subject at a glance, she would often level at a crude idea some shaft of playful logic, which only truth could withstand.

The gospel of Christ, as apprehended by her, was emphatically "the gospel of peace." For many years, in peaceful times, she had felt that christianity and bloodshed were inconsistent with each other. And when the wild clamor of political excitement was merged in the sterner calls of patriotism, heroism, and blood, her views were unchanged by the tide of popular excitement. Carefully re-examining the whole subject, she clearly saw the calling of the church, its dissociation from worldly interests, governments, and strifes, and reached the deliberate conclusion that, whatever the country might claim of citizens and patriots, Christ had called christians "unto peace"; and that, "as pilgrims and strangers on the earth," they should not meddle in its wars and conflicts. Hence, in the face of all opposition, and even to the withdrawal from old and cherished associations, she bore testimony against those "wars and fightings" which are the fruits of the evil passions and ungodly lusts of worldly men.

Her consciousness of the nearness of death led her to think and query much concerning the condition of those who have finished their mortal pilgrimage. With the flimsy and common arguments on various sides of the question she was familiar. But this was not enough. Where such men as Milton and Luther have dissented from the prevalent beliefs, there may be supposed to be weighty reasons for dissent and questions that are not to be disposed of by a paragraph or a sneer. So at times she was perplexed amid the solemn mysteries of the "silent land," and was led to fix her anchor, Hope, more firmly in Jesus who is "the Resurrection and the Life," convinced that whatever of light or shade might be between, when Christ who is our life shall appear to conquer death, then shall his people appear with him in glory.

As the designated day when she was to endure the terrible ordeal which should decide the question of her life or death approached, she gave way to no despondent doubt, but simply labored with fresh zeal. Making dispositions by which, after her death, the larger portion of her fortune should be devoted to charitable and religious uses, she diligently endeavored, as a good steward, yet to work while she had time and opportunity. So, visiting among her poor friends, from whom she tenderly concealed the fact that they might see her face no more, distributing to the necessities of the saints, bestowing gifts with a liberal hand, here money, there food, and on all sides raiment for the needy, and again large Testaments for pilgrims whose eyes were old and dim, she scattered her bounty with a generous hand, and continued her joyful labor to the end.

Her last call was with her dear friend and fellow worker, Miss O—, at my house; and she came to bring her generous contribution, with another from a dear friend of hers, to assist in paying the debts and relieving the embarrassments of one who had for years struggled to the extent of his powers in disseminating the glad tidings of life and immortality through Jesus Christ alone. This business attended to, we read of the Good Shepherd who is with us even in the valley and shadow of death; and then we bowed to supplicate the mercy and support of the Most High, and to commit our cares to Him who careth for us, assured that He whose love had provided for the great concerns of pardon and redemption, would guide in all the lesser matters of health and sickness, life and death, things present and things to come. Afterwards we talked of God's faithfulness to those that consider the poor, of his promise to make all their bed in sickness (Ps. 41: 3), and then we parted in good cheer.

Returning home she expressed herself as perfectly at rest. In that hour of prayer she felt that she had received a marked and especial blessing, and had given up all things into the hands of God, and she felt no anxiety for the result. She spent the hours of evening in making her last arrangements, and when told that she had better rest, replied that she must finish up her work, and so she kept on till all was done, even to the last thing.

The following day the surgical operation was successfully performed, and hopes of her recovery were entertained; but the shock was too great for her strength, and one week later I was summoned to her dying bed. All earthly help had failed; yet she was full of peace and joy. All was well. That for which she had longed and prayed was hers:

"A faith that keeps the narrow way,
By truth restrained and led,
And with a pure and heavenly ray
Lights up a dying bed."

Her parting words were like heavenly benedictions, full of comfort, sympathy, and good cheer. To her aged and estimable mother, who, borne down by grief, after a week's illness followed her to the grave, and to each of her friends, she bore most blessed testimony of Jesus and his grace. To one whom she had regarded as earnestly devoted to the work of God, and whose sacrifices and labors she had formerly thought were even too great, but who shrank abashed and humbled at her solemn words, she said, "Your course is right. Viewed from this stand-point of a dying bed, it is the right course. I want to say this to you with my dying words. You have done none too much; if you sacrifice every thing, even life itself, for Christ, it is none too much. Tell the brethren so from me."

Then amid tearful and loving farewells and words of christian hope and consolation, and prayers to the Good Shepherd to be with her in the dark valley, and snatches of song from her favorite hymns, and sacred promises and words which never fail, she went down amid the shades to the margin of the sullen shore.

"How does Jesus seem differently to you now from when in health?" said her dear Sister O—. "Ten thousand times nearer and more precious; and it is so real now. You know I have had a fear of death, but now all fear is taken away,—nothing but peace and blessedness,—and that sleeping does not trouble me now," was her reply. Recovering a little from a transient delirium, she said to her friend, "Am I really dying?" "Yes, you are dying," was the tearful answer; and then in the true spirit of her noble and unselfish life, she said, "How badly you must feel!" These were her last conscious words; and so, after a few more pangs and throes of sorrow, she sweetly sank to rest, proving in her own blessed experience that

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are;
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

On Christmas day we saw her laid, like Dorcas, in an upper chamber; and though death's cold pallor was upon her countenance, yet an anointed eye could plainly see beneath it the seal of the living God, who had chosen her as his own. And in lowly abodes, in garrets and cellars, and places of sickness, bereavement, orphanage, and tears, widows lamented her as they did Dorcas of old, and showed the coats and the garments which she bestowed upon them while she was yet with them.

At her funeral Bro. Edmonds, her old friend and pastor of many years, read from the sacred oracles those living words which formed the basis of her faith and hope, and the writer tried to say a few words of comfort to the sorrowing friends who gathered there, and so she was laid to rest in good and steadfast hope of everlasting life. Like Bunyan's Pilgrim, of whom he writes, "They laid him in an upper chamber, whose windows opened toward the sun-rising, and he slept there till break of day, and then he awoke and sang, and the name of the chamber was Peace";—so we have laid her to her rest in the chambers of peace, assured that neither life nor death can separate her from the love of God in Christ Jesus, who hath "died and rose and revived again, that he might be Lord both of the dead and of the living"; and rejoicing to know that "whether we live or die we are the Lord's."

May that God of all grace, whose love shone forth so richly in our beloved friend, help us to profit by her example, and cause her mantle to fall upon many others who shall follow her faith. And if, in the place of prayer, and around the table of our common Lord, and amid all the labors and duties of the christian life, we see her face no more, may it please God to bring us to meet with her at last beyond the shades of the dark valley and the surges of the dark river, amid the glories of the resurrection morning, and the calm yet blissful raptures of the Paradise of God.

Correspondence.

From Bro. John T. Dixon.

Bro Grant:—There is a remnant here in Pawling of what was once a large flourishing church of Adventists. It is not for me perhaps to speak of the causes which led to the unhappy divisions in the past, which well nigh destroyed the church as a united body; I might err in judgment, and possibly arrive at wrong conclusions. But I will say that a little church of believers in speedy redemption, who hail not from Mt. Sinai, but Zion; not under a ministration of death, but grace; who believe, like Paul, that "there will be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust"; meet statedly every Lord's day and evening in an "upper room" of Bro. George Woodin's, a mile or more west of Pawling Depot, on north side of Poughkeepsie turnpike; and Bro. D. P. Woodin, who lives near by, bids me tell preaching brethren that he is not so far backslidden that his house is any less a pilgrim's home than in former days. I speak the same for Bro. George Woodin. I know both mean what they say.

I hope preachers passing this way, who are not "hobby riders," will visit this little church and "strengthen the things which remain." Most of them are poor in this world's goods, but I believe some are rich in faith, and aim to so live that they may not "suffer as evil doers," but they are willing to be "made of no reputation" for His sake who, like them, was set at naught by proud Pharisees and all who love the praise of men more than God. For "He made himself of no reputation for us." Brethren, pray for the church at Pawling.

Sister Emeline Mulkins says when she saw Bro. D. T. Taylor's suggestion in Crisis, although comparatively poor, with large family, and making cotton flannel drawers for Army contractors, who pay her the astonishing sum of forty-two cents per dozen pairs, or a little over three cents per pair! she felt that God would bless her in sending you four times twenty-five cents for the fund, with her prayer that many will "go and do likewise."

Sister Adelia Woodin bids me say for her and her husband, Bro. George Woodin, that if any think there is any loss in lodging God's saints, if saints, they are not those who think so. They never felt richer than now. Plenty of meal and flour in the barrel, prophet's chamber and good bed, for pilgrims; latch string to door not pulled in! She sends a dollar for the Tract Fund, and says after she has done all "she feels like an unprofitable servant." Yours in the faith,

Pawling, N. Y. J. T. Dixon.

From Bro. D. Kinney.

Bro. Grant:—Our welcome weekly visitor is a great consolation to the two or three in this place, and we appreciate it as much as a weekly conference meeting, and it is so in fact; for through it we hear our brothers and sisters speak, and tell of their hopes and patient waitings for the blessed Jesus. Yes, poor afflicted ones, some of you deprived of loved ones by the hand of the enemy, and others confined to a sickbed for years, enduring privations, receiving the bread of affliction and waters of adversity, I believe we shall soon see the King in his beauty. Our sympathies are with you. We, too, are poor and despised. The storm will be over by-and-by. Let us be patient.

With the two copies of the Crisis that come to this place we try and circulate and do all the good we can. We lend them to our neighbors that are interested, then mail them to others with the injunction to read, lend, and keep them on the move as long as they hold together. Former influence has rather crowded it out of this place, but from certain signs that in its turn is receiving its round, (which I hope is a deadly one).

We have had some good meetings of late, though few in number. Last Sabbath was a tender season with us. Bro. McClellan preaches for us, and is contributing his mite for the spread of the truth. We have been expecting some of our preaching brethren this winter, but none have come yet.

Yours in Christ, D. Kinney.

From Bro. H. E. Twing.

"Lonely and weary, by sorrow opprest, Onward I hasten, with longings for rest."

Bro. Grant:—Yes, how true. My kind wife, God bless her! has gone to her daily labor, some two miles on foot, to work for her sick husband, who has not seen a well day for fifteen years. Forsaken by a proud-spirited mother and sister, who have no sympathy with me or my faith, yet I love them still. Brethren who used to come to my house every few days, do not come for months, now. Jesus comes still! How cheering! how comforting! hear him. "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee!" precious promise! Cheer up then, my soul, a few days more of conflict, and then how changed will be the scene. Here our cup of grief runs over. In the world to come how changed, no sorrow, no sin, no pain, no death, no funerals, no tears. O praise God! Who would not be there? But a few more storms, a few more trials, and then I rest. O! for grace to endure patiently, without murmuring or complaining at my lot.

My dear brethren pray, in faith for a poor pilgrim soldier, that he may not be overcome in the perils of these last days.

Springfield, Mass. H. E. Twing.

From S. W. Worthington.

Bro. Grant:—The work of the Lord is going on here. About twenty have come out on the side of the truth, and spoken forth the praise of God. The meeting last evening was a time long to be remembered. Praise the good Lord forever. My heart is full of joy.

Yours in the blessed hope,
S. W. Worthington.

From Bro. H. B. Seavey.

Bro. Grant:—Permit me to answer the many inquiries of brethren and sisters through the Crisis in respect to my health.

I am still unable to preach, although my health is better than it has been for some time in the past. Am able to work part of the time, yet still am suffering from congestion of the brain.

I have come to the conclusion to follow the advice of Dr. Jackson and others. Here it is. You must avoid thinking as much as possible, give up the idea of preaching, and make your religion consist mainly in, your efforts to glorify God by recovering your health. You can do this meantime by living simply, spending a good deal of your time out of doors, and being regular in all your habits. It seems a hard task for me, yet it may be for the glory of God, and I would do so in preaching or not preaching, working or not working, living or not living. I am the Lord's. He is mine. I am well in sickness, rich in poverty, bless the Lord! Amen.

Be faithful, dear brethren and sisters, Jesus is soon coming. Yours, waiting in hope of life through Christ, H. B. Seavey.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool, Feb. 25. It is stated that England's proposal for a conference in the settlement of the difficulties between Denmark, Austria and Prussia, with the concurrence of France, will be supported by Russia.

The London Daily News denounces the idea of a conference, while the unjust invasion and butchery in Schleswig is allowed to go on, and draws the conclusion that the conference will either draw England further along on the downward road, and lend sanction to the misdeeds of Austria and Prussia, or will bring her to a crisis, in which she must once more choose between humiliation and war.

The Dresden Journal announces the acceptance by France, of the proposed conference for the settlement of the German and Danish difficulties.

POLAND.

Orders have been issued at Warsaw, that after the 22d of March, all persons of either sex, above the age of fourteen, must, on leaving their houses, be provided with passports, on pain of punishment.

PRUSSIA.

It was rumored at Breslau that 60,000 Prussian troops are to be concentrated on the Polish frontiers.

Rumor says Queen Victoria is about to abdicate and the Prince of Wales to ascend the throne of England as Edward VII.

Copenhagen, Feb. 27. Denmark has expressed a wish to be excused from replying to any proposition for a conference, so long as Schleswig is not evacuated.

Stuttgard. Feb. 27. In to-day's sitting of the Chamber, Baron Von Hugel said, according to the most reliable information, a speedy termination of the war was not to be expected. Denmark was firmly resolved on opposing the most determined resistance to the claims of Austria, Prussia and the Federal Diet.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, March 8. Admiral Lee telegraphed to the Navy Department to-night, from Yorktown, that the expedition sent out to afford relief to any of Col. Dahlgren's command, succeeded in rescuing five of his men near West Point, one of them a body servant of the Colonel, who says the latter was killed in a skirmish. The rebels stripped him of all his clothing and left him lying on the ground naked, and with his ring finger cut off. The rest of his command surrendered themselves prisoners of war after his death.

New York. March 11. The Times Washington dispatch says Admiral Paulding's son, who has just been exchanged and arrived here, states that Jeff. Davis issued the barbarous order to place gunpowder under the prisons in which our prisoners are confined, and to blow them up if Gen. Kilpatrick succeeded in forcing his way into the city.

Col. Dahlgren's body servant arrived here to-night. He confirms the previous statements concerning his death and the barbarous treatment of his remains. He owes his escape to the colored people of the country through which he traversed.

Washington. March 14. An official general order issued by the President to-day assigns to Lieut. General Grant the supreme command of the armies of the United States, and Major General Sherman to take command of the forces lately under Grant. Grant is also directed to assume command in the field, and will control the movements of the Army of the Potomac, through Gen. Smith as commander, in place of Gen. Meade.

The Archduke Maximillan. The Paris correspondent of the London Times says it is very doubtful whether this personage will ever become Emperor of Mexico, so great have become the difficulties in his way. He thinks that the Archduke is in the hands of the Jesuits, and, if they find they cannot use him to restore the odious clerical government which reduced Mexico to its present degraded state, they will have none of him.

☞ It is reported that the rebels intend hanging all the Union soldiers captured by them from Gen. Foster's command, fifty-one in number, half of whom have never been in the rebel service. The native Union troops have decided to take the matter of retaliation into their own hands.

☞ Immense quantities of provisions and quartermasters' stores are now going forward from St. Louis to Gen. Grant's department. A dozen steamers leave every day carrying government freight.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—

Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive one third the value of the money sent, in any of our books and tracts they may select. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollars' worth; for twelve dollars, four dollars' worth, etc.

Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

Miles Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

THE CHRISTIAN'S PRAYER.

AIR.—"The Indian Captive."

Let me go, let me go, where so oft I am blest
By communion with Jesus, whom I love the best;
Where no cares e'er distract, where devotion's fires glow,
To meet with the prayerful, vain world, let me go.

Let me go where the saints who, expecting their Lord,
Often meet to examine the prophetic word,
And the "signs of the times," that the truth they may know;
To meet with my brethren, vain world, let me go!

Let me go, let not sinful enticements prevail
In these dark days when men's hearts with fearfulness fail,
When the churches are cold, and their altar-fires low,
To meet with the pilgrims, vain world, let me go.

Let me go, where the spires of fair Salem I see,
To the top of Mount Pisgah, the best spot for me;
When the world's far beneath with its care and its woe,
To the heights of the mountain, vain world, let me go.

Let me go with the saints when the Savior shall come,
To take all his weary lone wanderers home
To the Eden restored, free from sorrow and woe;
To meet my dear Savior, vain world, let me go.

Let me go, where forever in glory I'll dwell,
And the song of the saved in a glad chorus swell;
Where flowers are unfading, where bright waters flow,
To my home eternal, vain world, let me go.

Let me go! did I hear it, the seventh trumpet blow?
Is not this the last hour of the third angel's "wo"?
Yes! the great clock of time strikes its funeral knell,
My Savior is coming! vain world, oh, farewell!

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

For the World's Crisis.

"CHURCH GAMBLING."

"One of the religious papers tells a story in relation to church gambling, which contains a lesson worthy of repeating. A member of a church went to his pastor and entreated his personal intercession with his favorite son, who had become ruinously addicted to the vice of gambling. The pastor consented, and, seeking the young man, found him in his chamber. He commenced his lecture, but before he had concluded, the young man laid his hand upon his arm, and drew his attention to a pile of splendid volumes that stood upon the dressing-table. 'Well,' said the young man, 'These volumes were won by me at a Fair given in your church; they were my first venture. But for that LOTTERY, UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF A CHRISTIAN CHURCH, I should have NEVER BECOME A GAMBLER.'—Advent Watchman.

The great object is to support modern and useless expenditures in proud and unnecessary improvements, and pay large salaries to ministers. Did they believe the gospel they profess, they would be content to endure privation, and if need be suffer, before they would either consent, or receive money obtained by such means, so apparently at war with the gospel.

O! ye ministers of Jesus, cry aloud, spare not! Lift up your voice like a trumpet against this wickedness, or God will require the blood of souls at your hands.

SOMETHING LIKE GAMBLING.—There was a raffle one night at a fair held by the ladies of the church in ——— for a benevolent purpose. That same night two blacklegs were arrested for gambling in another part of the city. While in the lock-up they naturally set to work to defend themselves as far as possible, and here is their success:—

"Look here, Smith," said one, "I say it is too hard that we poor fellows are caged up here, just for trying to make an honest living with the cards and dice. I don't see, for my part, what right people have to interfere with any man's way of earning his bread, provided he don't steal it from them; and then I should like to know what the difference is between our throwing dice for money, and those 'piscopal' gentry turning a wheel for it; and that's what they did do that same night we were nabbed." "Good, good," said Smith; "if you are sure they did that thing, we will turn the tables upon them, and make them pay us well or we will have them indicted for breaking the laws." "Ah! is that so? then we have them on the hip. That judge will never let his handsome young wife be brought up before the court for law breaking; so let us crack the nut as soon as we can. What's the first step?" "Send for the state's attorney."

Their plan was arranged; the attorney came. The men stated their full determination as soon as they were released from confinement, to file a bill against Mrs. S., her young friend, and all those who aided and abetted in the lottery; for such it was. The lawyer saw in a moment what an advantage they had, but he tried to persuade them (lawyer like) that they could do nothing; they had, however, been too often in the clutches of the law not to know some of its workings; and they maintained their determination. As soon as it was known, a quiver went through the town, the opposing sects rejoiced at the uncomfortable position in which the dignified ladies and gentlemen of the church were placed. The judge was in an agony of annoyance, for he knew the men, and how difficult it would be to turn them from their revenge; but something must be done, and it was done. None knew the bribe which had sealed their lips. Few engaged in that fair will ever forget the fright they received, or be tempted again to engage in a raffle or lottery.

This anecdote gives the legal side of the question. Is there not a higher, more important one still—the moral one? What mother would not pray that her son might be kept from the gambler's terrible fate? What father would not shrink from the image of that son, with haggard look and anxious eye hanging over the fatal cards or billiard ball? Yet where lies the difference between the lotteries of a fancy bazaar, where the fortunate winner gains an article worth $500 for $5, and the youth staking his last eagle on the throw of the dice? It is a difference only of degree. Does the good cause which usually underlies our bazaars consecrate this refined gambling?—Christian Register.

Men do not expect "to gather figs of thistles," but it is a progressional phenomenon of the nineteenth century, to find thistles upon that might under proper scriptural culture be called fig-trees. Think you that the popular establishments of the present day, called churches, especially those guilty of such abominable practices, can escape a worse scourge than "small cords"? Gambling in churches is certainly no less criminal than in the saloons of debauchery, dedicated to the votaries and victims of satan's master art, obtaining money, to say the least, by dishonest means. O! what a burning damnation awaits christian deceptions.

Should this meet the eyes of any guilty of such transactions, in christian kindness let me entreat you to prepare to render an account of your conduct to Him who will shortly and will soon judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom.

RELIGION AND AMUSEMENT.—An excellent preacher, now at rest, said before he died, we foresee that we are to have a dancing and card-playing religion, and I tremble for the church." What he foresaw is fast being realized, and if he had included the theatre among the "worldly amusements" to be tolerated by the church, he would not have been far wrong. Indeed outright gambling seems not to be considered wrong in the best circles, provided the proceeds promote some beneficent scheme.

The attempts now made to stem the current so strongly setting towards amusements once considered worldly and harmful, if not decidedly sinful, are few and feeble. They fail perhaps, more from wholesale and indiscriminate denunciations of all amusements than from any perversity in those to whom they are addressed. There is of course moral peril connected with recreations, as there is indeed with the more serious business of life. But it does not follow that all amusement, or all fun and frolic even, are therefore to be avoided. The accepted philosophy of the world, if not of the church, now is that sport is as legitimate as work, recreation as rightful as worship. The old maxim that the christian must not engage in any thing which turns his mind from serious things is discarded, and the common belief is that the man who enjoys a dance, a game of chance, or any other innocent recreation, can be quite as devout at the proper time and place as one who considers every thing vain and sinful that is not positively religious. Thus we see professors of good standing exhorting well in the prayer-meeting and spending the remainder of the evening at the whist table; punctual upon all the "means of grace," and devoting an occasional evening to an exhibition of tableaux, a theatrical performance, or the coarse humor of the negro minstrels; and lately we have seen our most cultivated and pious ladies taking with a sweet grace the dollars of the ungodly for tickets in raffles, the proceeds to be devoted to the comfort or religious instruction of our soldiers—which is only a return of the days not a generation gone, when colleges and churches were built by lotteries, and the holders of the prizes were considered special favorites of heaven in being "privileged" to bless the world and fill their own purses in the same act. This sort of thing, however, may be very easily carried beyond safe limits, and the good women of the fairs may make themselves responsible for a great deal of moral mischief before they know it.

It is difficult to draw any exact line, and to set down this amusement as sinful and that as innocent, but our christian casuists should not find it impossible to state the general principles governing all such matters so plainly that their application to particular cases will be obvious. In games of skill and chance, chess, checkers, backgammon and such like have long been tolerated in the most puritanical circles, while cards were formerly tabooed, for the then sufficient reason that gambling was chiefly done with cards, and there was consequently danger that whoever should play them might fall into that vice. If that objection has disappeared cards are in themselves as innocent as chess or jackstraws. The practical question is, Does card-playing naturally lead to gambling? So of theatricals; religious people formerly opposed them because of the loose morality of plays and players, and the bad associations of the theatre. The prevalence of tableaux exhibitions and parlor theatricals, and the growing tolerance of the theatre proper among our most precise christians show that the real objection is not to the stage, but to the abuses connected with it. It is very evident that the church is now educating its children to be theatre goers, and that in the next generation the theatre is to be more universally patronized than ever before. In principle there is no more objection to the theatre than to the exhibition of tableaux, and there are necessarily no greater moral exposures there than in any other place where all classes meet for instruction or amusement. The same may be said of all amusements not intrinsically wrong.

What specially needs to be considered by those who endeavor to direct christian opinion is this: If the church (by which we mean all who accept christianity) does not think it necessary or possible to check or turn aside the current now setting so strongly towards public amusements, if it has determined to tolerate them, it should take the direction of them and make them safe by excluding all that is impious and indelicate. The stage will slough off its grossness if its best supporters come from the church and insist upon decency and morality in the performances. But if the church will not attempt to reform and control popular amusements, then it must keep away from them altogether and leave them wholly to the publicans and sinners. This is the manifest alternative.

It is written concerning antiquated teachers and devotees of deception, "The prophets prophecy falsely. The priests bear rule by their means. My people love to have it so. But what will they do in the end thereof?" Now the teachers teach falsely, the people love to and will have it so, and the end will soon make manifest what is to be done with all blind leaders of the blind. Light has become darkness to the multitudes, and what God purposed for light to them he has turned to darkness, and it is gross darkness, thick, gloomy and deathly.

"IN CHRIST."

Bible believers must all agree that mankind can have hope of eternal life only by being in Christ. He is, to all in him, an ark of refuge and safety. Out of him is death; in him is life.

But the inquiry arises, who are out of him and who are in him? This is an important question, for it concerns our eternal life. No sinner can have hope in Christ while in his sins; and the Bible teaches that whatsoever is not of faith is sin. Hence we must certainly conclude that all the unbelieving world to whom the word of faith is come are out of Christ, and that their unbelief is what alienates them from him. How then can they be reconciled to God or grafted into Christ? By faith certainly. Unbelief cuts off; faith unites. See Rom. 11: 20, 23.

"But that is a mistake," says one; "the word says 'baptized into Christ,' and therefore all are out of Christ until baptized." This seems a plausible argument, and might be admitted if the Bible did not teach the contrary. But we read of "believing into Christ," and certainly faith must come before baptism. The following are some passages where the original word in the Greek is "eis," the same that is translated "into" in the passage "baptized into Christ." I will quote from the Emphatic Diaglott. "But to as many as received him he gave authority to become children of God, to those believing into his name." John 1: 12. "That every one believing into him may have aionian life. For God so loved the world that he gave his Son the only begotten, that every one believing into him may not perish but obtain aionian life." John 3: 15, 16. Also read John 6: 40, 47, and where you find "believeth on me" read "believeth into me" and you will have the literal rendering of the original.

A great many more passages might be quoted similar to these, but here are enough. We see by these that we become "in Christ" by faith. Hence, a person must be a brother or sister in Christ before baptism. Faith alone first unites the person to Christ. How then can a person be baptized into Christ if he is already in him? I answer, in the same manner that a person can "grow up into him" according to the directions in Eph. 4: 15. It brings us more deeply into the things of Christ because it is an especial ordinance the obedience to which stamps more deeply upon us that character which we have already obtained by our faith. Let me illustrate. A boat is upon the river. Its occupants have just pushed it from the shore and launched out. A voice calls out, "Push into the stream." The voyager understands the call to mean to create more distance between him and the shore which he has already left. He is already in the stream, but the farther he pushes out the more he is cut off from the sources of help the earth might afford him. So we are to "believe into Christ," "be baptized into Christ," and "grow up into him."

By baptism sins are remitted; not literally, but in a figure. Remission of sins will not take place literally until the resurrection. Forgiveness takes place as soon as a person believes with the heart on Jesus Christ. These two terms are not the same in import. Forgiveness justifies; remission puts away. The man is forgiven but not remitted; for to remit the man would be to put him away. God forgives the man and remits his sins, and where the Scriptures say, "forgive sins," the ellipsis must be supplied,—"forgive the man from his sins." The sin itself must be remitted, and this cannot be done until the High Priest comes forth and blesses his waiting ones and remits or sends away their sins by the scapegoat in antitype.

Baptism also washes away sins in a figure and saves us in a figure, or in other words shows that the person has a clean conscience and expects salvation by a resurrection from the dead. One word on Gal. 3: 27,—"For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." By the words "as many of you," the apostle would discriminate between those who had believed in Christ before baptism and those who had not. Although all may have been baptized, none were baptized into him except those who had first believed into him. Those who had been baptized into him had put him on. How? By being baptized into him? Yes, and also by believing in him, and they were exhorted to put him on by obedience even after baptism. See Eph. 4: 22, 24; and Col. 3: 12, 14. By believing into him we put him on (that is, his character) by faith. By being baptized into him we put him on by baptism. By obedience and continued faithfulness to him we grow up into him by putting off the old man with his deeds, and putting on the new man, which is renewed after the image of him that created him. The apostle says the inner man is renewed day by day.

Seeing these things are true, beloved brethren and sisters, let us live in him, and if we die let us "die in the Lord," and while we sleep we shall "sleep in Jesus," and when we wake we will be "born of the Spirit" out of Christ and his kingdom.

For the World's Crisis.

A BIRTH-DAY MEDITATION.

DEAR PUBLISHER:—I have this day entered the eighty-eighth year of my age, and am nearly past manual labor, therefore, I can think of nothing better at this propitious day to employ myself about, than to sit down and try to write a few thoughts upon the ravages of time and the fruition of eternity for you to lay before your readers, hoping that they may make a solemn and profitable impression upon the minds of those who are careless and thoughtless.

Time, since the world's commencement, has been constantly on the advance, "Conquering and to conquer." No event has retarded its progress and no obstacle has resisted its all-powerful sway. The great, the small, the high and the low, are all subjected to its relentless violence. No sooner does man spring into existence (although the noblest part of creation), than time seizes him in its powerful grasp, and marches him in a hurried pace through the scenes of life, and eventually lands him in the silent tomb.

Let us look at the history of the past. Where are the mighty nations of antiquity, whose inhabitants were as numerous as we can count, and whose power was as vast as we can think? They have fallen. Time has cut them off, and mingled them with the dust of the earth.

All things go to prove to us, that here we have no continuing city. Many with whom we associated in our youthful days, and in whose company we spent many hours of pleasure, have fallen into the cold embrace of death, and are known to us only in memory of the past. And ourselves, although we have active limbs, and are blest with health, and eyes beaming with life and hope, must shortly be borne from the scenes of earth to the obscure tomb. What deep solemnity passes over the mind when we reflect upon what is to follow. That sooner or later we must bid adieu to all beneath the sun. And were it not for the soul-cheering hope of life and immortality beyond the grave, brought to light through the gospel, how dreary would be our pilgrimage.

Although our bodies may moulder back to the dust from whence they came, yet there is hope; for we are assured they shall be raised again at the resurrection and brought before their Judge to give up their account for the deeds done in the body,—"He that has done good to the resurrection of life, and he that has done evil to the resurrection of damnation." Lo! what a scene is here brought forth for our contemplation.

But however alarming this may be to some, yet the christian need not be discouraged, for he is assured of eternal life. He is assured of being set at the right hand of God at that great and memorable day of his coming, and of that happiness which shall never end. "Behold," saith Christ to his disciples, "my sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand." John 10: 27.

It is this soul-cheering hope of life and immortality beyond the grave, that can give us any real comfort while wandering through the dark and dreary scenes of life, and cast a bright and shining light of glory around the dying pillow, and point us to a better world of enjoyments, where peace and happiness shall ever abound. Dear reader, may we look well to these things, and prepare to meet those events that are soon to follow.

Time, we are taught by divine revelation, shall not always last. Eternity will swallow it up. Lo! are we prepared to meet eternity? Are we prepared to meet our Judge? Are we prepared to meet the Savior? Have we on the wedding garment? Have we our lamps trimmed and burning? If we have not, let us make no delay in preparing to meet the Bridegroom when he shall come. Now under the above considerations would it not be well for us to notice and adhere to the following passage of Scripture? "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest." Eccl. 9: 10.

In conclusion, let me make a few remarks:—"Behold," saith the Savior, "I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his works shall be." "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Rev. 22: 12, 13. It matters not with the dead in their graves, whether Christ shall come to-day or to-morrow, or a thousand years hence, for it will be but a day or a night to them before they shall be called forth to meet their Judge. And we who are now living, are but mortals, and our lives are in the hands of God; and we are liable to be cut off at any day or hour. We know not what a day or an hour may bring forth. Therefore, we should strive to make our calling and election sure, as though we knew the day or the hour of his coming. May we all look well to these things in time, lest the door of hope be shut against us.

MEMORIAL OF GEORGE W. [illegible].

For ten months an invalid.

Called out from the world in the morning of life,
By disease laid aside, thus freed from earth's strife,
From the tumult of war, from sin's giddy maze,
He learned e'en in suff'ring his Savior to praise.

The things once a pleasure now ceased to allure,
He turned from earth's foibles to joys more secure;
He felt t'would be blessed "to die in the Lord,"
Escape thus life's perils, and wait his reward.

He trusted the promise made those who believe
In Christ the Life-giver—"though dead they shall live";
Their life hid with Jesus, his voice they will hear,
In His likeness rising, immortal appear.

Be comforted, mourners, rejoice while you weep;
Our friends are not perished who in Jesus sleep;
Sure signs are foretelling the dawn of the day,
When tears from all faces shall be wiped away.

Young friends, ye who loved him and watched his decay,
Give heed to his warnings, begin now to pray;
Defer not repentance till seasons of pain,—
God bless and prepare you to meet him again.

Clark's Mills. A few still trusting in the Lord. Preaching averages two Sundays in a month, from different speakers. Brn. P. C. Rodman and J. J. Northup have been holding meetings for the last two weeks. Sinners have been awakened, and backsliders reclaimed.

Lafayette. Numbers about forty, mostly in good standing. Have three prayer meetings weekly, quite interesting generally. Eld. J. Northup preached to them two Sundays in a month until fall. Since that time have been rather destitute. The following brethren have visited us once each: P. C. Rodman, E. Bellows, J. V. Himes. One has been added to the church, formerly a Baptist. Two have been dismissed. J. T. Arnold, Clerk.

Westerly. Have not had any preaching for three months. Interest very low. Two prayer meetings weekly part of the time. Few attended. Some have made up their minds to serve God and live in the kingdom. E. Slocum, Clerk.

Rocky Brook. Interest of late rather brightened. Bro. Bellows was with us some time, and encouraged us some. Bro. P. C. Rodman has preached to us also. Eld. M. E. Cornell is with us, and is giving us a course of lectures on Prophecy. Good attendance. Hope good will be done. Sunday School still interesting, good attendance as ever.—B. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

Letter from E. R. Wood, Nova Scotia. Battling for God's truth. Seen some willing to embrace it. Baptized one; thought others would follow soon.

Ministering brethren not belonging to the conference were invited to take part in our deliberations.

Letter from Bro. E. Bellows, Evangelist, stating that he was sick and could not attend the conference. Spent the first Sunday since last conference at Gloucester, in connection with Bro. Northup. Two Sundays with the Exeter church. One at the Central. Four evenings at the Summit. One at Lafayette. Received $48.06. Expenses $78.92.

REPORT OF DELEGATES.

A. C. Greene reported the church at River Point. Numbers sixty-nine. Two conference meetings weekly, quite interesting. Two manifested a desire to become christians. Eld. A. Durfee preaches to us once a month. Sunday School not quite so interesting as it had been.

Bro. J. Eldredge reported the church at Gloucester. Since last conference, or at the conference, some five or six had been converted. Since that time no especial interest.

Bro. M. R. Phetteplace reported the church at Foster. Some awake; some cold and indifferent. Bro. Tisdell from Exeter. No special interest. Bro. E. Bellows had preached to them; hoped it would do them good. Bro. Peckham from Central Village, R. I. Not much preaching; not many meetings. United as a body. Not as much interest as there might be.

REPORT OF PREACHING BRETHREN.

Eld. P. C. Rodman: Been at the following places since last conference; Quidnic, Fiskerville. In Danielsonville held meetings with [illegible] sinners converted, backsliders reclaimed. Returned home after an absence of few weeks. From home to Summit, in Coventry, with Bro. J. Northup. Saw sinners converted. From there to Voluntown, Ct. Backsliders reclaimed, sinners converted. Thence to Clark's Mills. Two converted, some reclaimed. Thence to No. Stonington, to attend a funeral, and on to conference.

Bro. Peter Noka. Been laboring most of the time in Providence, at the church on Pond St., where he used to belong, and from which he was expelled for the truths he held. They invited him to preach to them. Thought the Lord had blessed him in so doing. Bro. J. Eldredge. Preached two Sundays in a month at Gloucester; once in Foster; ready to go where the Lord wanted him to go.

Bro. Rufus Pierce. Labors somewhat limited. Been at Charlestown, R. I., with the colored church, to New London, and a place called The Lottery, in Westerly. Stood ready to do the will of the Lord. Bro. M. R. Phetteplace. Been at Mohegan, and The Harmony. Quite an interest at the latter place.

Six o'clock P. M. Met for social meeting. The Lord was with us by his Spirit. Felt it was good to be there. At 7.35 Eld. Durfee spoke on the Order of the Judgment, showing that the judgment was to take place at the coming of Christ on the earth. Subjects to be judged are wicked men and fallen angels.

Friday, 9.45 A. M. Prayer by Bro. Rodman. Report of Bro. Durfee's labors about the same as they had been in the past. Been at Mohegan, River Point, and Foster. Thought there was an increasing interest at Mohegan. Church in Foster needs help.

THE WOMAN WHO NEVER GOSSIPS.

Oh, no, I never gossip! I have enough to do to take care of my own business, without talking about the affairs of others, Mrs. Smith. Why, there's Mrs. Crocker, she deals in scandal by the wholesale. It does seem to me as though that woman's tongue must be almost worn out; but, no, there's no danger of that. If everybody was like me, there wouldn't be much trouble in the world. Oh, no, I never gossip.

But did you know that Miss Elliot had got a new silk, Mrs. Smith? You didn't? Well, she has. It's a real brocade; I saw it myself; and I do say it's a shame for her to be so extravagant. I mean to give her a piece of my mind, Mrs. Smith. You believe her uncle gave it to her? Well, I don't care if he did. Why it's only two months since her father failed, and now to see her dash out in this style, its a burning shame. I suppose she thinks she's going to catch young lawyer Jones; but I think she'll find herself mistaken. He's got more sense than to be caught by her, if she has got a brocade silk dress.

And there's the upstart dressmaker, Kate Manly, setting her cap for the doctor's son. The impertinence of some people is perfectly astonishing. I don't think she's any better than she ought to be, for my own part. I never did like her, with her mild, soft look, when anybody's about. My word for it, she can look cross enough when there ain't.

Then she says she is only seventeen! Goodness knows she's as old as my Arabella Lucretia; and she's—well, I won't say how old, but she's more than seventeen, and I ain't ashamed to say so either; but I think Dr. May's son will have more discretion than to think of marrying her. Some folks call her handsome. Well, I don't. She ain't half so good looking as my daughter Jane. Then she does up her hair in such fly-away curls! and, if you believe it, Mrs. Smith, she actually had the impudence to tell me she couldn't make her hair as straight as my Maria's. Impertinence! If she'd let curling-papers and curling-irons alone, I'd risk but what her hair would be as straight as anybody's.

But what do you think of the minister's wife, Mrs. Smith? You like her! Well, all I can say is, you've got a very peculiar taste. Why, she's as proud as Lucifer—been married a whole week, and hasn't been to see me yet. You presume she has'nt had time? I don't see what the minister wanted to go out of town to get him a wife for, anyway; and then above all things, to get that girlish-looking thing! Why didn't he take one of his parishioners? There's my Arabella Lucretia would have made him a better wife than he's got now. And she's just about the right age for him. What do you say? that Arabella Lucretia is two years older than the minister? I should think it was a pity if I didn't know my own daughter's age, Mrs. Smith! If some folks would mind their own business, as I do, I'd thank them.

THE ART OF GROWING POOR.

Some professors of religion spend more money for oysters each year than for the missionary cause; others give more for tickets to lectures, concerts, new bonnets, etc., than for the preacher. They are always of the kind who complain the most about the church, the quality of the sermons and the coldness of the membership. Giving nothing or next to nothing for the Lord, they find life an awkward thing to them—seldom paying with promptness their debts or accumulating anything in the way of property. As with individuals so with churches. In refusing to give they bring barrenness and deadness on themselves.

Said one of the most eminent of laymen, making a platform missionary address: "I have heard of churches starving out from a saving spirit; but I have never heard of one dying of benevolence. And if I could hear of one such, I would make a pilgrimage to it by night, and in that quiet solitude, with the moon shining and the aged elm waving, I would put my hands on the moss-clad ruins, and gazing on the venerable scene, would say, 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!'"—Scripture Cabinet.

THE WORK LESSON.—The best lesson a father can give his son is this:—"Work; strengthen your moral and mental faculties, as you would strengthen your muscles by vigorous exercise; learn to conquer circumstances; you are then independent of fortune. The men of athletic minds, who left their marks on the years in which they lived, were all trained in a rough school. They did not mount their high position by the help of leverage; they leaped into chasms, grappled with the opposing rocks, avoided avalanches, and when the goal was reached, felt that but for the toil that had strengthened them as they strove, it could never have been attained."

PROPHECY.—In this age of unbelief and changeful events, nothing seems more needful to establish our faith in the truth of divine revelation, and satisfy our minds with respect to the future, than a consideration of the prophecies of Scripture; not one jot or tittle of which will ever fail in its accomplishment.—Lorenzo Dow.

RUM, TOBACCO, AND TEA.

I beg leave to report myself an abstainer from the use of the above named articles. I am satisfied they are making a fearful waste of health, money, and morality. I drank ardent spirits from my childhood till about 1830. I was then twenty-eight years of age, when I joined the Temperance Society, and have kept my pledge. I thank the Lord for that move in the right way. I felt glad that I had overcome an enemy, but soon found I was not a free man. I smoked, chewed, and sometimes snuffed tobacco. The poison so affected me I had to use it very sparingly. Was always sickly, and the doctors could not help me, and never told me I was tobacco-sick; I did not know it myself until I gave up its use for conscience' sake, and to save the cost for the Foreign Mission fund. I immediately recovered my health. Was overjoyed with my deliverance, and ever since have done and said all I can to persuade others from the vile and sinful use of tobacco.

It grieves me to see christians, and especially Advent christians, use tobacco in any way. I am thankful that the brethren and sisters with whom I am united in church fellowship do not use it. There are very few that would pray to the Lord with a chew of tobacco in the mouth, and I think no christian would like to be found by the gathering angels, that will be sent forth to gather the elect, with a pipe, cigar, or tobacco in their mouth, or a glass of rum in their stomachs.

Just a word about tea. As I grew old, my food distressed me, and dyspepsia troubled me, and I grew worse. Bro. Himes' writing on Health in the Crisis, about a year ago, suggested to me that tea might be injuring me. I gave it up, and now find myself wonderfully relieved. I will close by saying that nothing on earth would be inducement enough to lead me back to the old habits. Pray for me, that while I rejoice in a victory over some physical evils, I may not be overcome with a spiritual enemy that goeth about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour.

Yours in hope of speedy deliverance,

ICE CURES DIPHTHERIA.

"Break up a small lump of ice in a towel and put the pieces in a bowl. Take a position slightly inclined backwards, either in a chair or on a sofa. Proceed for half an hour with a tea spoon to feed yourself with small lumps of ice, letting them dissolve slowly in the back part of the mouth, or the entrance of the throat. A single such application will often break up a common sore throat, which otherwise would have a course of two or three days. In case of a bad sore throat, use the ice frequently and freely. In case of ulceration or diphtheria, keep a small lump of ice constantly in the mouth." H. E. TWING.

WHAT IS DISEASE?

Without claiming any originality for our views upon this subject, we will now proceed to explain what disease is, as we understand it. Disease is a vital action, an action performed by vitality which takes food and forms it into the different tissues of the body, but now acting in a different capacity or having a different end in view, hence we call it a "remedial effort."

Let us illustrate the nature of disease by a scene very familiar to those who live in the rural districts—a beautiful farm in the summer time—the housewife is preparing the frugal meal in the kitchen, some of the girls are aiding, some arranging their flower-beds, some amusing the smaller children, one feeding the young chickens, one milking the cows, one enlivening the scene with rich strains of music from the parlor, the boys are dressing the garden, the farmer in another field is driving his mower, the hired hand ploughing the corn, and all is working beautifully and harmonious for the accomplishment of the desired end. This represents healthy or physiological action. The different individuals employed represent the different organs of the body, the sum of their powers, the vitality of the system, and their harmonious action, health. Now, suppose by carelessness or some accident the gate is left open, and the cows, and hogs and geese, and horses, and sheep enter the yard among the flowers and vegetables, and fruits; the maiden among the flowers sees them, recognizes the presence of something that ought not to be there; shrieking, she springs to her feet, the wife rushes from the kitchen into the yard, the girl who is amusing the children forgets her charge and follows, the milk maid in her alarm overturns the pail of white foam, and seizing a stick rushes indiscriminately after hogs, horses and geese; the boys drop their hoes, and with terrible yells attempt to clear the yard of the intruders, the hired hand drops the line and leaves his horse quietly to graze the corn, while he joins in the general assault, and the farmer comes from his work, puffing like an engine, when by the efforts of this combined force the larger animals are driven out at the open gates, the geese are caught and thrown over the fence, and finally the yard is cleared, the excitement gradually dies away and each individual returns to his proper avocation. You will notice that every one of these actions, however misguided or ill directed, is an effort to accomplish the same end—the expulsion of the offender—though the actions themselves may be very different. We also see that the powers which accomplish the end in view, are powers that were not designed for this purpose, being the same which are required to carry on the regular business of the farm, each having sufficient labor to perform aside from this new and unexpected call for exertion; hence while the act of expulsion is proceeding, the regular farm business can be but imperfectly, if at all, performed. This, though not a perfect illustration, will give a very clear idea what we mean by disease. The animals in the yard are the cause of the disease, not the disease itself; the action—the effort to expel them—is the disease. This is an imperfect comparison in this particular; we here represent the cause of the disease to be a living animal, whereas, in diseases common to the human being it is generally dead, inert matter.

We have before stated that the tissues of the body by constant action are rapidly worn out, broken down, or become lifeless, and must be expelled by new and living matter; this useless matter is removed by or through the skin, lungs, etc. Suppose the pores of the skin, by neglect of bathing, a coat of varnish or any other means, become closed so that the matter cannot be thrown off through that channel, what is to be done? The matter is there, it is doing nothing, it can do nothing, it is dead, powerless, but it is in the way and must be got rid of. Every other organ has a duty to perform, a constant duty which requires as great activity as it is fitted or designed for; but it was never intended that the pores of the skin should be closed, (just as in the case above it was not intended that the gate should be left open,) hence no special power or agent was provided to remove this matter in such a contingency, and the only possible way in which it can be removed is by the over exertion of some other organs of the body; and this exertion, this effort, we call disease. Suppose through carelessness, or by any other means, something is taken into the stomach which cannot be used to form bone, muscles, tendons, hair or any of the tissues of the body. Something must be done with this matter. True it is doing nothing, is making no attack upon the domicil of life, but, the stomach is clogged up by its presence, and if it is not removed, cannot perform its functions, hence an effort is made to remove it by the vital powers of the system, and this effort—not the vitality, not the foreign substance—is disease.

Understanding disease in this, its true light, you will be prepared with us to declare it a blessing rather than a curse, and like the boy who wished there was no such thing as lightning because it sometimes injured persons and property, and he could see no good result from it, yet when he understood its real nature and purpose, found it cleansed the atmosphere which would otherwise become unfit for man to live in, and was led to wonder and admire that which only filled his mind with awe and dread. We, when we have penetrated the depth of this subject, so long wrapped in mystery, the solution of which was so long sought afar off among the labyrinths of mysterious providences, will see ourselves in different relations, the scales will have fallen from our eyes, and what before seemed the dark frowns of an unrelenting providence, will be its sweetest smiles. The sweeping house maid is disagreeable to us; if there is but little dirt and the sweeping is carefully performed, the inconvenience is not great; if the dirt has been long accumulating, the dust rises and falls upon the furniture, fills the eyes of all the occupants and becomes a very disagreeable and painful operation, yet the sweeper is a friend, her occupation useful and necessary to our happiness. Disease is but vitality sweeping the house we live in." If the cobwebs have filled all the corners, the dust thickly coated floors and walls, and the thick mould covered the furniture, the commotion will be great and painful, nevertheless the operation is necessary, and though the system may be injured by it, without it, it would become so filthy that it would be untenable.

HEALTH AND DISEASE.

Health, remarks a writer, is the result of the natural performance of all the functions of life. It gives development, beauty, vigor and happiness; and is characterized by strength of body, power and serenity of mind, and a keen enjoyment of all the blessings of life.

Disease, on the other hand, is the result of any disorder of the natural functions. It hinders development, mars beauty, impairs vigor, and destroys happiness. It is characterized by weakness, indolence, pain, misery, or, otherwise, by a stimulated, morbid activity, which speedily brings a wretched life to a premature and painful death.

Health is maintained by a simple, nourishing diet, pure air, exercise, cleanliness, and the regulation of the passions. Men cram themselves with the impure flesh and fat of diseased animals, heating condiments and spices, spirituous drinks, and the poisonous narcotics, as opium, tea, coffee, and tobacco—injuring their digestive powers, and filling their systems with poisonous matter; and to these are added a long list of vegetable and mineral poisons, taken as medicines, not one grain of which can be taken without permanent injury to the human organism; we inhale poisons in filthy streets and unventilated buildings, and these poisons are kept in the system; and the skin—the great purifying organ of the body—is weakened by a neglect of personal cleanliness, which cannot be maintained in healthy action without occasional bathing in soft, tepid water. The poisonous matter thus brought into and kept in the system, weaken its powers, interrupts its functions, and produces a state of disease. Nature makes a violent effort to cast out these evils, and we have pain, inflammations, fevers, and the whole train of acute diseases. The poisons in the system, and the bleedings and poisonings of the doctors, weaken the powers of nature, and we have the less violent, but more protracted agonies of chronic disease. Such violations of the laws of God have filled the world with disease and misery; and the restoration of health, so far as practicable in our false state of society, must be obtained by a knowledge of and obedience to His physiological laws.—Voice of the West.

NIGHT SWEATS.—Night sweats are caused by a weakness in the vital forces, being unable to send off impurities through the bowels and kidneys. Hence the skin is called upon to do extra labor. The true remedy consists in strengthening the kidneys, rousing the liver, and keeping the bowels regular. Drink weak sage or sassafras tea before going to bed. Keep the skin very clean. Take plenty of fresh air by walking in it.

SNOW CAKE.—Mix a little corn-meal and pulverized sugar with the dry flour, and then stir in the snow; bake in a hot oven till well browned.

THE CHRISTIAN'S PRAYER.

AIR—"The Indian Captive."

Let me go, let me go, where so oft I am blest
By communion with Jesus, whom I love the best;
Where no cares e'er distract, where devotion's fires glow,
To meet with the prayerful, vain world, let me go.

Let me go where the saints who, expecting their Lord,
Often meet to examine the prophetic word,
And the "signs of the times," that the truth they may know;
To meet with my brethren, vain world, let me go.

Let me go, let not sinful enticements prevail
In these dark days when men's hearts with fearfulness fail,
When the churches are cold, and their altar-fires low,
To meet with the pilgrims, vain world, let me go.

Let me go, where the spires of fair Salem I see,
To the top of Mount Pisgah, the best spot for me;
When the world's far beneath with its care and its woe,
To the heights of the mountain, vain world, let me go.

Let me go with the saints when the Savior shall come,
To take all his weary lone wanderers home
To the Eden restored, free from sorrow and woe;
To meet my dear Savior, vain world, let me go.

Let me go, where forever in glory I'll dwell,
And the song of the saved in a glad chorus swell;
Where flowers are unfading, where bright waters flow,
To my home eternal, vain world, let me go.

Let me go! did I hear it, the seventh trumpet blow?
Is not this the last hour of the third angel's "wo"?
Yes! the great clock of time strikes its funeral knell,
My Savior is coming! vain world, oh, farewell!

"CHURCH GAMBLING."

"One of the religious papers tells a story in relation to church gambling, which contains a lesson worthy of repeating. A member of a church went to his pastor and entreated his personal intercession with his favorite son, who had become ruinously addicted to the vice of gambling. The pastor consented, and, seeking the young man, found him in his chamber. He commenced his lecture, but before he had concluded, the young man laid his hand upon his arm, and drew his attention to a pile of splendid volumes that stood upon the dressing-table. 'Well,' said the young man, 'These volumes were won by me at a Fair given in your church; they were my first venture. But for that LOTTERY, UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF A CHRISTIAN CHURCH, I should have NEVER BECOME A GAMBLER.'—Advent Watchman.

The great object is to support modern and useless expenditures in proud and unnecessary improvements, and pay large salaries to ministers. Did they believe the gospel they profess, they would be content to endure privation, and if need be suffer, before they would either consent, or receive money obtained by such means, so apparently at war with the gospel.

O! ye ministers of Jesus, cry aloud, spare not! Lift up your voice like a trumpet against this wickedness, or God will require the blood of souls at your hands.

SOMETHING LIKE GAMBLING.—There was a raffle one night at a fair held by the ladies of the church in —— for a benevolent purpose. That same night two blacklegs were arrested for gambling in another part of the city. While in the lock-up they naturally set to work to defend themselves as far as possible, and here is their success:—

"Look here, Smith," said one, "I say it is too hard that we poor fellows are caged up here, just for trying to make an honest living with the cards and dice. I don't see, for my part, what right people have to interfere with any man's way of earning his bread, provided he don't steal it from them; and then I should like to know what the difference is between our throwing dice for money, and those 'piscopal' gentry turning a wheel for it, and that's what they did do that same night we were nabbed." "Good, good," said Smith; "if you are sure they did that thing, we will turn the tables upon them, and make them pay us well or we will have them indicted for breaking the laws." "Ah! is that so? then we have them on the hip. That judge will never let his handsome young wife be brought up before the court for law breaking; so let us crack the nut as soon as we can. What's the first step?" "Send for the state's attorney."

Their plan was arranged; the attorney came. The men stated their full determination as soon as they were released from confinement, to file a bill against Mrs. S., her young friend, and all those who aided and abetted in the lottery; for such it was. The lawyer saw in a moment what an advantage they had, but he tried to persuade them (lawyer like) that they could do nothing; they had, however, been too often in the clutches of the law not to know some of its workings; and they maintained their determination. As soon as it was known, a quiver went through the town; the opposing sects rejoiced at the uncomfortable position in which the dignified ladies and gentlemen of the church were placed. The judge was in an agony of annoyance, for he knew the men, and how difficult it would be to turn them from their revenge; but something must be done, and it was done. None knew the bribe which had sealed their lips. Few engaged in that fair will ever forget the fright they received, or be tempted again to engage in a raffle or lottery.

This anecdote gives the legal side of the question. Is there not a higher, more important one still—the moral one? What mother would not pray that her son might be kept from the gambler's terrible fate? What father would not shrink from the image of that son, with haggard look and anxious eye hanging over the fatal cards or billiard ball? Yet where lies the difference between the lotteries of a fancy bazaar, where the fortunate winner gains an article worth $500 for $5, and the youth staking his last eagle on the throw of the dice? It is a difference only of degree. Does the good cause which usually underlies our bazaars consecrate this refined gambling?—Christian Register.

Men do not expect "to gather figs of thistles," but it is a progressional phenomena of the nineteenth century, to find thistles upon what might under proper scriptural culture be called fig-trees. Think you that the popular establishments of the present day, called churches, especially those guilty of such abominable practices, can escape a worse scourg than "small cords"? Gambling in churches is certainly no less criminal than in the saloons of debauchery, dedicated to the votaries and victims of satan's master art, obtaining money, to say the least, by dishonest means. O! what a burning damnation awaits christian deceptions.

Should this meet the eyes of any guilty of such transactions, in christian candor, let me entreat you to prepare to render an account of your conduct to Him who standeth ready and will soon judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom.

RELIGION AND AMUSEMENT.—An excellent preacher, now at rest, said before he died, "I foresee that we are to have a dancing and card-playing religion, and I tremble for the church." What he foresaw is fast being realized, and if he had included the theatre among the "worldly amusements" to be tolerated by the church, he would not have been far wrong. Indeed outright gambling seems not to be considered wrong in the best circles, provided the proceeds promote some beneficent scheme.

The attempts now made to stem the current so strongly setting towards amusements once considered worldly and harmful, if not decidedly sinful, are few and feeble. They fail perhaps, more from wholesale and indiscriminate denunciations of all amusements than from any perversity in those to whom they are addressed. There is of course moral peril connected with recreations, as there is indeed with the more serious business of life. But it does not follow that all amusement, or all fun and frolic even, are therefore to be avoided. The accepted philosophy of the world, if not of the church, now is that sport is as legitimate as work, recreation as rightful as worship. The old maxim that the christian must not engage in any thing which turns his mind from serious things is discarded, and the common belief is that the man who enjoys a dance, a game of chance, or any other innocent recreation, can be quite as devout at the proper time and place as one who considers every thing vain and sinful that is not positively religious. Thus we see professors of good standing exhorting well in the prayer-meeting and spending the remainder of the evening at the whist table; punctual upon all the "means of grace," and devoting an occasional evening to an exhibition of tableaux, a theatrical performance, or the coarse humor of the negro minstrels; and lately we have seen our most cultivated and pious ladies taking with a sweet grace the dollars of the ungodly for tickets in raffles, the proceeds to be devoted to the comfort or religious instruction of our soldiers—which is only a return of the days not a generation gone, when colleges and churches were built by lotteries, and the holders of the prizes were considered special favorites of heaven in being "privileged" to bless the world and fill their own purses in the same act. This sort of thing, however, may be very easily carried beyond safe limits, and the good women of the fairs may make themselves responsible for a great deal of moral mischief before they know it.

It is difficult to draw any exact line, and to set down this amusement as sinful and that as innocent, but our christian casuists should not find it impossible to state the general principles governing all such matters so plainly that their application to particular cases will be obvious. In games of skill and chance, chess, checkers, backgammon and such like have long been tolerated in the most puritanical circles, while cards were formerly tabooed, for the then sufficient reason that gambling was chiefly done with cards, and there was consequently danger that whoever should play them might fall into that vice. If that objection has disappeared cards are in themselves as innocent as chess or jackstraws. The practical question is, Does card-playing naturally lead to gambling? So of theatricals; religious people formerly opposed them because of the loose morality of plays and players, and the bad associations of the theatre. The prevalence of tableaux exhibitions and parlor theatricals, and the growing tolerance of the theatre proper among our most precise christians show that the real objection is not to the stage, but to the abuses connected with it. It is very evident that the church is now educating its children to be theatre goers, and that in the next generation the theatre is to be more universally patronized than ever before. In principle there is no more objection to the theatre than to the exhibition of tableaux, and there are necessarily no greater moral exposures there than in any other place where all classes meet for instruction or amusement. The same may be said of all amusements not intrinsically wrong.

What specially needs to be considered by those who endeavor to direct christian opinion is this: If the church (by which we mean all who accept christianity) does not think it necessary or possible to check or turn aside the current now setting so strongly towards public amusements, if it has determined to tolerate them, it should take the direction of them and make them safe by excluding all that is impious and indelicate. The stage will slough off its grossness if its best supporters come from the church and insist upon decency and morality in the performances. But if the church will not attempt to reform and control popular amusements, then it must keep away from them altogether and leave them wholly to the publicans and sinners. This is the manifest alternative.

It is written concerning antiquated teachers and devotees of deception, "The prophets prophecy falsely. The priests bear rule by their means. My people love to have it so. But what will they do in the end thereof?" Now the teachers teach falsely, the people love to and will have it so, and the end will soon make manifest what is to be done with all blind leaders of the blind. Light has become darkness to the multitudes, and what God purposed for light to them he has turned to darkness, and it is gross darkness, thick, gloomy and deathly.

S. S. BREWER.

For the World's Crisis.

"IN CHRIST."

Bible believers must all agree that mankind can have hope of eternal life only by being in Christ. He is, to all in him, an ark of refuge and safety. Out of him is death; in him is life.

But the inquiry arises, who are out of him and who are in him? This is an important question, for it concerns our eternal life. No sinner can have hope in Christ while in his sins; and the Bible teaches that whatsoever is not of faith is sin. Hence we must certainly conclude that all the unbelieving world to whom the word of faith is come are out of Christ, and that their unbelief is what alienates them from him. How then can they be reconciled to God or grafted into Christ? By faith certainly. Unbelief cuts off; faith unites. See Rom. 11: 20, 23.

"But that is a mistake," says one; "the word says 'baptized into Christ,' and therefore all are out of Christ until baptized." This seems a plausible argument, and might be admitted if the Bible did not teach the contrary. But we read of "believing into Christ," and certainly faith must come before baptism. The following are some passages where the original word in the Greek is "eis," the same that is translated "into" in the passage "baptized into Christ." I will quote from the Emphatic Diaglott. "But to as many as received him he gave authority to become children of God, to those believing into his name." John 1: 12. "That every one believing into him may have aionian life. For God so loved the world that he gave his Son the only-begotten, that every one believing into him may not perish but obtain aionian life." John 3: 15, 16. Also read John 6: 40, 47 and where you find "believeth on me" read "believeth into me" and you will have the literal rendering of the original.

A great many more passages might be quoted similar to these but here are enough. We see by these that we become "in Christ" by faith. Hence, a person must be a brother or sister in Christ before baptism. Faith alone first unites the person to Christ. How then can a person be baptized into Christ if he is already in him? I answer, in the same manner that a person can "grow up into him," according to the directions in Eph. 4: 15. It brings us more deeply into the things of Christ because it is an especial ordinance the obedience to which stamps more deeply upon us that character which we have already obtained by our faith. Let me illustrate. A boat is upon the river. Its occupants have just pushed it from the shore and launched out. A voice calls out, "Push into the stream." The voyager understands the call to mean to create more distance between him and the shore which he has already left. He is already in the stream, but the farther he pushes out the more he is cut off from the sources of help the earth might afford him. So we are to "believe into Christ," "be baptized into Christ," and "grow up into him."

By baptism sins are remitted; not literally, but in a figure. Remission of sins will not take place literally until the resurrection. Forgiveness takes place as soon as a person believes with the heart on Jesus Christ. These two terms are not the same in import. Forgiveness justifies; remission puts away. The man is forgiven but not remitted; for to remit the man would be to put him away. God forgives the man and remits his sins, and where the Scriptures say, "forgive sins," the ellipsis must be supplied,—"forgive the man from his sins." The sin itself must be remitted, and this cannot be done until the High Priest comes forth and blesses his waiting ones and remits or sends away their sins by the scapegoat in antitype.

Baptism also washes away sins in a figure and saves us in a figure, or in other words shows that the person has a clean conscience and expects salvation by a resurrection from the dead. One word on Gal. 3: 27,—"For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." By the words "as many of you," the apostle would discriminate between those who had believed in Christ before baptism and those who had not. Although all may have been baptized, none were baptized into him except those who had first believed into him. Those who had been baptized into him had put him on. How? By being baptized into him? Yes, and also by believing in him, and they were exhorted to put him on by obedience even after baptism. See Eph. 4: 22, 24; and Col. 3: 12, 14. By believing into him we put him on (that is, his character) by faith. By being baptized into him we put him on by baptism. By obedience and continued faithfulness to him we grow up into him by putting off the old man with his deeds, and putting on the new man, which is renewed after the image of him that created him. The apostle says the inner man is renewed day by day.

Seeing these things are true, beloved brethren and sisters, let us live in him, and if we die let us "die in the Lord," and while we sleep we shall "sleep in Jesus," and when we wake we will be "born of the Spirit" out of Christ and his kingdom.

For the World's Crisis.

A BIRTH-DAY MEDITATION.

DEAR PUBLISHER.—I have this day entered the eighty-eighth year of my age, and am nearly past manual labor, therefore, I can think of nothing better at this propitious day to employ myself about, than to sit down and try to write a few thoughts upon the ravages of time and the fruition of eternity for you to lay before your readers, hoping that they may make a solemn and profitable impression upon the minds of those who are careless and thoughtless.

Time, since the world's commencement, has been constantly on the advance, "Conquering and to conquer." No event has retarded its progress and no obstacle has resisted its all-powerful sway. The great, the small, the high and the low, are all subjected to its relentless violence. No sooner does man spring into existence (although the noblest part of creation), than time seizes him in its powerful grasp, and marches him in a hurried pace through the scenes of life, and eventually lands him in the silent tomb.

Let us look at the history of the past. Where are the mighty nations of antiquity, whose inhabitants were as numerous as we can count, and whose power was as vast as we can think? They have fallen. Time has cut them off, and mingled them with the dust of the earth.

All things go to prove to us, that here we have no continuing city. Many with whom we associated in our youthful days, and in whose company we spent many hours of pleasure, have fallen into the cold embrace of death, and are known to us only in memory of the past. And ourselves, although we have active limbs, and are blest with health, and eyes beaming with life and hope, must shortly be borne from the scenes of earth to the obscure tomb. What deep solemnity passes over the mind when we reflect upon what is to follow. That sooner or later we must bid adieu to all beneath the sun. And were it not for the soul-cheering hope of life and immortality beyond the grave, brought to light through the gospel, how dreary would be our pilgrimage.

Although our bodies may moulder back to the dust from whence they came, yet there is hope; for we are assured they shall be raised again at the resurrection and brought before their Judge to give up their account for the deeds done in the body,—"He that has done good to the resurrection of life, and he that has done evil to the resurrection of damnation." Lo! what a scene is here brought forth for our contemplation.

But however alarming this may be to some, yet the christian need not be discouraged, for he is assured of eternal life. He is assured of being set at the right hand of God at that great and memorable day of his coming, and of that happiness which shall never end. "Behold," saith Christ to his disciples, "my sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand." John 10: 27.

It is this soul-cheering hope of life and immortality beyond the grave, that can give us any real comfort while wandering through the dark and dreary scenes of life, and cast a bright and shining light of glory around the dying pillow, and point us to a better world of enjoyments, where peace and happiness shall ever abound. Dear reader, may we look well to these things, and prepare to meet those events that are sure to follow.

Time, we are taught by divine revelation, shall not always last. Eternity will swallow it up. Lo! are we prepared to meet eternity? Are we prepared to meet our Judge? Are we prepared to meet the Savior? Have we on the wedding garment? Have we our lamps trimmed and burning? If we have not, let us make no delay in preparing to meet the Bridegroom when he shall come. Now, under the above considerations would it not be well for us to notice and adhere to the following passage of Scripture? "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest." Eccl. 9: 10.

In conclusion, let me make a few remarks:—"Behold," saith the Savior, "I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his works shall be." "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Rev. 22: 12, 13. It matters not with the dead in their graves, whether Christ shall come to-day or to-morrow, or a thousand years hence, for it will be but a day or a night to them before they shall be called forth to meet their Judge. And we who are now living, are but mortals, and our lives are in the hands of God; and we are liable to be cut off at any day or hour. We know not what a day or an hour may bring forth. Therefore, we should strive to make our calling and election sure, as though we knew the day or the hour of his coming. May we all look well to these things in time, lest the door of hope be shut against us.

MEMORIAL OF GEORGE W. [illegible]

For ten months an invalid.

Called out from the world in the morning of life,
By disease laid aside, thus freed from earth's strife,
From the tumult of war, from sin's giddy maze,
He learned e'en in suff'ring his Savior to praise.

The things once a pleasure now ceased to allure,
He turned from earth's foibles to joys more secure;
He felt t'would be blessed "to die in the Lord,"
Escape thus life's perils, and wait his reward.

He trusted the promise made those who believe
In Christ the Life-giver—"though dead they shall live";
Their life hid with Jesus, his voice they will hear,
In His likeness rising, immortal appear.

Be comforted, mourners, rejoice while you weep;
Our friends are not perished who in Jesus sleep;
Sure signs are foretelling the dawn of the day,
When tears from all faces shall be wiped away.

Young friends, ye who loved him and watched his decay,
Give heed to his warnings, begin now to pray;
Defer not repentance till seasons of pain,—
God bless and prepare you to meet him again.

REPORT OF THE R. I. AND EASTERN CONN. QUAR. CONFERENCE.

Lafayette, Jan. 7th, 1864. Wednesday, 2.30 P. M. Conference met according to appointment. Officers not being present, the afternoon was spent in social meeting. 6 P. M. Met again for social worship. At 7.45, preaching by Bro. M. R. Phetteplace, from Heb. 4: 3.

Thursday, 9 o'clock A. M. Chairman still absent. Social worship. 2 P. M. Chairman arrived. Clerk being absent, A. C. Greene was chosen Clerk pro tem. The minutes of the last conference were read and accepted, with two slight corrections. Bro. P. C. Rodman was nominated Chairman, but declined. Bro. M. R. Phetteplace was chosen to fill his place. A. C. Greene chosen Clerk and Treasurer for the ensuing year. Bro. Bellows being absent, business of choosing Evangelist was dispensed with. A letter was read from V. P. Simmons, late Secretary of this conference, now a soldier in the army of the United States. Letters were read from churches at Clark's Mills, Lafayette, Westerley and Rocky Brook.

Clark's Mills. A few still trusting in the Lord. Preaching averages two Sundays in a month, from different speakers. Brn. P. C. Rodman and J. J. Northup have been holding meetings for the last two weeks. Sinners have been awakened, and backsliders reclaimed.

Lafayette. Numbers about forty, mostly in good standing. Have three prayer meetings weekly, quite interesting generally. Eld. J. Northup preached to them two Sundays in a month until fall. Since that time have been rather destitute. The following brethren have visited us once each: B. C. Rodman, E. Bellows, J. V. Himes. One has been added to the church, formerly a Baptist. Two have been dismissed. J. T. Arnold, Clerk.

Westerly. Have not had any preaching for three months. Interest very low. Two prayer meetings weekly part of the time. Few attended. Some have made up their minds to serve God and live in the kingdom. E. Slocum, Clerk.

Rocky Brook. Interest of late rather brightened. Bro. Bellows was with us some time, and encouraged us some. Bro. P. C. Rodman has preached to us also. Eld. M. E. Cornell is with us, and is giving us a course of lectures on Prophecy. Good attendance. Hope good will be done. Sunday School still interesting, good attendance as ever.—B. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

Letter from E. R. Wood, Nova Scotia. Battling for God's truth. Seen some willing to embrace it. Baptized one; thought others would follow soon.

Ministering brethren not belonging to the conference were invited to take part in our deliberations.

Letter from Bro. E. Bellows, Evangelist, stating that he was sick and could not attend the conference. Spent the first Sunday since last conference at Gloucester, in connection with Bro. Northup. Two Sundays called to attend funerals. One Sunday at East Killingly, Chestnut Hill. Two Sundays laid by on account of sickness and death in the family. Six Sundays with the Rocky Brook church. Two Sundays with the Exeter church. One at the Central. Four evenings at the Summit. One at Lafayette. Received $48.06. Expenses $78.92.

REPORT OF DELEGATES.

A. C. Greene reported the church at River Point. Numbers sixty-nine. Two conference meetings weekly, quite interesting. Two manifested a desire to become christians. Eld. A. Durfee preaches to us once a month. Sunday School not quite so interesting as it had been.

Bro. J. Eldredge reported the church at Gloucester. Since last conference, or at the conference, some five or six had been converted. Since that time no especial interest.

Bro. M. R. Phetteplace reported the church at Foster. Some awake; some cold and indifferent. Bro. Tisdell from Exeter. No especial interest. Bro. E. Bellows had preached to them; hoped it would do them good. Bro. Peckham from Central Village, R. I. Not much preaching; not many meetings. United as a body. Not as much interest as there might be.

REPORT OF PREACHING BRETHREN.

Eld. P. C. Rodman. Been at the following places since last conference; Quidnic, Fisherville. In Danielsonville held meetings with [illegible] sinners converted, backsliders reclaimed. Returned home after an absence of five weeks. From home to Summit, in Coventry, with Bro. J. Northup. Saw sinners converted. From there to Voluntown, Ct. Backsliders reclaimed, sinners converted. Thence to Clark's Mills. Two converted, some reclaimed. Thence to No. Stonington, to attend a funeral, and on to conference.

Bro. Peter Noka. Been laboring most of the time in Providence, at the church on Pond St., where he used to belong, and from which he was expelled for the truths he held. They invited him to preach to them. Thought the Lord had blessed him in so doing. Bro. J. Eldredge. Preached two Sundays in a month at Gloucester; once in Foster; ready to go where the Lord wanted him to go.

Bro. Rufus Pierce. Labors somewhat limited. Been at Charlestown, R. I., with the colored church; to New London, and a place called The Lottery, in Westerly. Stood ready to do the will of the Lord. Bro. M. R. Phetteplace. Been at Mohegan, and The Harmony. Quite an interest at the latter place.

Six o'clock P. M. Met for social meeting. The Lord was with us by his Spirit. Felt it was good to be there. At 7.35 Eld. Durfee spoke on the Order of the Judgment, showing that the judgment was to take place at the coming of Christ on the earth. Subjects to be judged are wicked men and fallen angels.

Friday, 9.45 A. M. Prayer by Bro. Rodman. Report of Bro. Durfee's labors about the same as they had been in the past. Been at Mohegan, River Point, and Foster. Thought there was an increasing interest at Mohegan. Church in Foster needs help.

Criticism of Bro. Durfee's sermon, after which an Essay was read by Bro. M. R. Phetteplace. Subject, What is the New Birth?

2 P. M. Preaching by Bro. Rufus Pierce, showing the importance of trusting in God. At 6.30 P. M., social meeting. 7.35 P. M., preaching by Eld. Wm. Fenn, from Isa. 55: 10, 11.

Adjourned to meet at Central Village, Coventry, R. I., the first Wednesday in April, at 2 P. M.

Preaching brethren present:—P. C. Rodman, M. R. Phetteplace, Wm. Fenn, A. Durfee, J. Eldredge, R. Pierce, Geo. Smith, Peter Noka.

THE WOMAN WHO NEVER GOSSIPS.

Oh, no, I never gossip! I have enough to do to take care of my own business, without talking about the affairs of others, Mrs. Smith.

Why, there's Mrs. Crocker, she deals in scandal by the wholesale. It does seem to me as though that woman's tongue must be almost worn out; but, no, there's no danger of that. If everybody was like me, there wouldn't be much trouble in the world. Oh, no, I never gossip.

But did you know that Miss Elliot had got a new silk, Mrs. Smith? You didn't? Well, she has. It's a real brocade; I saw it myself; and I do say it's a shame for her to be so extravagant. I mean to give her a piece of my mind, Mrs. Smith. You believe her uncle gave it to her? Well, I don't care if he did. Why it's only two months since her father failed, and now to see her dash out in this style, its a burning shame. I suppose she thinks she's going to catch young lawyer Jones; but I think she'll find herself mistaken. He's got more sense than to be caught by her, if she has got a brocade silk dress.

And there's the upstart dressmaker, Kate Manly, setting her cap for the doctor's son. The impertinence of some people is perfectly astonishing. I don't think she's any better than she ought to be, for my own part. I never did like her, with her mild, soft look, when anybody's about. My word for it, she can look cross enough when there ain't.

Then she says she is only seventeen! Goodness knows she's as old as my Arabella Lucretia; and she's—well, I won't say how old, but she's more than seventeen, and I ain't ashamed to say so either; but I think Dr. May's son will have more discretion than to think of marrying her. Some folks call her handsome. Well, I don't. She ain't half so good looking as my daughter Jane. Then she does up her hair in such fly-away curls! and, if you believe it, Mrs. Smith, she actually had the impudence to tell me she couldn't make her hair as straight as my Maria's. Impertinence! If she'd let curling-papers and curling-irons alone, I'd risk but what her hair would be as straight as anybody's.

But what do you think of the minister's wife, Mrs. Smith? You like her! Well, all I can say is, you've got a very peculiar taste. Why, she's as proud as Lucifer—been married a whole week, and hasn't been to see me yet. You presume she has'nt had time? I don't see what the minister wanted to go out of town to get him a wife for, anyway; and then above all things, to get that girlish-looking thing! Why didn't he take one of his parishioners? There's my Arabella Lucretia would have made him a better wife than he's got now. And she's just about the right age for him. What do you say? that Arabella Lucretia is two years older than the minister? I should think it was a pity if I didn't know my own daughter's age, Mrs. Smith! If some folks would mind their own business, as I do, I'd thank them.

THE ART OF GROWING POOR.

Some professors of religion spend more money for oysters each year than for the missionary cause; others give more for tickets to lectures, concerts, new bonnets, etc., than for the preacher. They are always of the kind who complain the most about the church, the quality of the sermons and the coldness of the membership. Giving nothing or next to nothing for the Lord, they find life an awkward thing to them—seldom paying with promptness their debts or accumulating anything in the way of property. As with individuals so with churches. In refusing to give they bring barrenness and deadness on themselves.

Said one of the most eminent of laymen, making a platform missionary address: "I have heard of churches starving out from a saving spirit; but I have never heard of one dying of benevolence. And if I could hear of one such, I would make a pilgrimage to it by night, and in that quiet solitude, with the moon shining and the aged elm waving, I would put my hands on the moss-clad ruins, and gazing on the venerable scene, would say, 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!'"—Scripture Cabinet.

THE WORK LESSON.—The best lesson a father can give his son is this:—"Work; strengthen your moral and mental faculties, as you would strengthen your muscles by vigorous exercise; learn to conquer circumstances; you are then independent of fortune. The men of athletic minds, who left their marks on the years in which they lived, were all trained in a rough school. They did not mount their high position by the help of leverage; they leaped into chasms, grappled with the opposing rocks, avoided avalanches, and when the goal was reached, felt that but for the toil that had strengthened them as they strove, it could never have been attained."

PROPHECY.—In this age of unbelief and changeful events, nothing seems more needful to establish our faith in the truth of divine revelation, and satisfy our minds with respect to the future, than a consideration of the prophecies of Scripture; not one jot or tittle of which will ever fail in its accomplishment.—Lorenzo Dow.

RUM, TOBACCO, AND TEA.

I beg leave to report myself an abstainer from the use of the above named articles. I am satisfied they are making a fearful waste of health, money, and morality. I drank ardent spirits from my childhood till about 1830. I was then twenty-eight years of age, when I joined the Temperance Society, and have kept my pledge. I thank the Lord for that move in the right way. I felt glad that I had overcome an enemy, but soon found I was not a free man; I smoked, chewed, and sometimes snuffed tobacco. The poison so affected me I had to use it very sparingly. Was always sickly, and the doctors could not help me, and never told me I was tobacco-sick; I did not know it myself until I gave up its use for conscience' sake, and to save the cost for the Foreign Mission fund. I immediately recovered my health. Was overjoyed with my deliverance, and ever since have done and said all I can to persuade others from the vile and sinful use of tobacco.

It grieves me to see christians, and especially Advent christians, use tobacco in any way. I am thankful that the brethren and sisters with whom I am united in church fellowship do not use it. There are very few that would pray to the Lord with a chew of tobacco in the mouth, and I think no christian would like to be found by the gathering angels, that will be sent forth to gather the elect, with a pipe, cigar, or tobacco in their mouth, or a glass of rum in their stomachs.

Just a word about tea. As I grew old, my food distressed me, and dyspepsia troubled me, and I grew worse. Bro. Himes' writing on Health in the Crisis, about a year ago, suggested to me that tea might be injuring me. I gave it up, and now find myself wonderfully relieved. I will close by saying that nothing on earth would be inducement enough to lead me back to the old habits. Pray for me, that while I rejoice in a victory over some physical evils, I may not be overcome with a spiritual enemy that goeth about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour.

Yours in hope of speedy deliverance,

Hillsburgh, N. S. ISRAEL RICE.

ICE CURES DIPHTHERIA.

"Break up a small lump of ice in a towel and put the pieces in a bowl. Take a position slightly inclined backwards, either in a chair or on a sofa. Proceed for half an hour with a tea spoon to feed yourself with small lumps of ice, letting them dissolve slowly in the back part of the mouth, or the entrance of the throat. A single such application will often break up a common sore throat, which otherwise would have a course of two or three days. In case of a bad sore throat, use the ice frequently and freely. In case of ulceration or diphtheria, keep a small lump of ice constantly in the mouth." H. E. TWING.

WHAT IS DISEASE?

Without claiming any originality for our views upon this subject, we will now proceed to explain what disease is, as we understand it. Disease is a vital action, an action performed by vitality which takes food and forms it into the different tissues of the body, but now acting in a different capacity or having a different end in view, hence we call it a "remedial effort."

Let us illustrate the nature of disease by a scene very familiar to those who live in the rural districts—a beautiful farm in the summer time—the housewife is preparing the frugal meal in the kitchen, some of the girls are aiding, some arranging their flower-beds, some amusing the smaller children, one feeding the young chickens, one milking the cows, one enlivening the scene with rich strains of music from the parlor, the boys are dressing the garden, the farmer in another field is driving his mower, the hired hand ploughing the corn, and all is working beautifully and harmonious for the accomplishment of the desired end. This represents healthy or physiological action. The different individuals employed represent the different organs of the body, the sum of their powers, the vitality of the system, and their harmonious action, health. Now, suppose by carelessness or some accident the gate is left open, and the cows, and hogs and geese, and horses, and sheep enter the yard among the flowers and vegetables, and fruits; the maiden among the flowers sees them, recognizes the presence of something that ought not to be there; shrieking, she springs to her feet, the wife rushes from the kitchen into the yard, the girl who is amusing the children forgets her charge and follows, the milk maid in her alarm overturns the pail of white foam, and seizing a stick rushes indiscriminately after hogs, horses and geese; the boys drop their hoes, and with terrible yells attempt to clear the yard of the intruders, the hired hand drops the line and leaves his horse quietly to graze the corn, while he joins in the general assault, and the farmer comes from his work, puffing like an engine, when by the efforts of this combined force the larger animals are driven out at the open gates, the geese are caught and thrown over the fence, and finally the yard is cleared, the excitement gradually dies away and each individual returns to his proper avocation. You will notice that every one of these actions, however misguided or ill directed, is an effort to accomplish the same end—the expulsion of the offender—though the actions themselves may be very different. We also see that the powers which accomplish the end in view, are powers that were not designed for this purpose, being the same which are required to carry on the regular business of the farm, each having sufficient labor to perform aside from this new and unexpected call for exertion; hence while the act of expulsion is proceeding, the regular farm business can be but imperfectly, if at all, performed. This, though not a perfect illustration, will give a very clear idea what we mean by disease. The animals in the yard are the cause of the disease, not the disease itself; the action—the effort to expel them—is the disease. This is an imperfect comparison in this particular; we here represent the cause of the disease to be a living animal, whereas, in diseases common to the human being it is generally dead, inert matter.

We have before stated that the tissues of the body by constant action are rapidly worn out, broken down, or become lifeless, and must be expelled by new and living matter; this useless matter is removed by or through the skin, lungs, etc. Suppose the pores of the skin, by neglect of bathing, a coat of varnish or any other means, become closed so that the matter cannot be thrown off through that channel, what is to be done? The matter is there, it is doing nothing, it can do nothing, it is dead, powerless, but it is in the way and must be got rid of. Every other organ has a duty to perform, a constant duty which requires as great activity as it is fitted or designed for; but it was never intended that the pores of the skin should be closed, (just as in the case above it was not intended that the gate should be left open,) hence no special power or agent was provided to remove this matter in such a contingency, and the only possible way in which it can be removed is by the over exertion of some other organs of the body; and this exertion, this effort, we call disease. Suppose through carelessness, or by any other means, something is taken into the stomach which cannot be used to form bone, muscles, tendons, hair or any of the tissues of the body. Something must be done with this matter. True it is doing nothing, is making no attack upon the domicil of life, but the stomach is clogged up by its presence, and if it is not removed, cannot perform its functions, hence an effort is made to remove it by the vital powers of the system, and this effort—not the vitality, not the foreign substance—is disease.

Understanding disease in this, its true light, you will be prepared with us to declare it a blessing rather than a curse, and like the boy who wished there was no such thing as lightning because it sometimes injured persons and property, and he could see no good result from it, yet when he understood its real nature and purpose, found it cleansed the atmosphere which would otherwise become unfit for man to live in, and was led to wonder and admire that which only filled his mind with awe and dread. We, when we have penetrated the depth of this subject, so long wrapped in mystery, the solution of which was so long sought afar off among the labyrinths of mysterious providences, will see ourselves in different relations, the scales will have fallen from our eyes, and what before seemed the dark frowns of an unrelenting providence, will be its sweetest smiles. The sweeping house maid is disagreeable to us; if there is but little dirt and the sweeping is carefully performed, the inconvenience is not great; if the dirt has been long accumulating, the dust rises and falls upon the furniture, fills the eyes of all the occupants and becomes a very disagreeable and painful operation, yet the sweeper is a friend, her occupation useful and necessary to our happiness. Disease is but vitality sweeping the "house we we live in." If the cobwebs have filled all the corners, the dust thickly coated floors and walls, and the thick mould covered the furniture, the commotion will be great and painful, nevertheless the operation is necessary, and though the system may be injured by it, without it, it would become so filthy that it would be untenable.

HEALTH AND DISEASE.

Health, remarks a writer, is the result of the natural performance of all the functions of life. It gives development, beauty, vigor and happiness; and is characterized by strength of body, power and serenity of mind, and a keen enjoyment of all the blessings of life.

Disease, on the other hand, is the result of any disorder of the natural functions. It hinders development, mars beauty, impairs vigor, and destroys happiness. It is characterized by weakness, indolence, pain, misery; or, otherwise, by a stimulated, morbid activity, which speedily brings a wretched life to a premature and painful death.

Health is maintained by a simple, nourishing diet, pure air, exercise, cleanliness, and the regulation of the passions. Men cram themselves with the impure flesh and fat of diseased animals, heating condiments and spices, spirituous drinks, and the poisonous narcotics, as opium, tea, coffee, and tobacco—injuring their digestive powers, and filling their systems with poisonous matter; and to these are added a long list of vegetable and mineral poisons, taken as medicines, not one grain of which can be taken without permanent injury to the human organism; we inhale poisons in filthy streets and unventilated buildings, and these poisons are kept in the system; and the skin—the great purifying organ of the body—is weakened by a neglect of personal cleanliness, which cannot be maintained in healthy action without occasional bathing in soft, tepid water. The poisonous matter thus brought into and kept in the system, weaken its powers, interrupts its functions, and produces a state of disease. Nature makes a violent effort to cast out these evils, and we have pain, inflammations, fevers, and the whole train of acute diseases. The poisons in the system, and the bleedings and poisonings of the doctors, weaken the powers of nature, and we have the less violent, but more protracted agonies of chronic disease. Such violations of the laws of God have filled the world with disease and misery; and the restoration of health, so far as practicable in our false state of society, must be obtained by a knowledge of and obedience to His physiological laws.—Voice of the West.

NIGHT SWEATS.—Night sweats are caused by a weakness in the vital forces, being unable to send off impurities through the bowels and kidneys. Hence the skin is called upon to do extra labor. The true remedy consists in strengthening the kidneys, rousing the liver, and keeping the bowels regular. Drink weak sage or sassafras tea before going to bed. Keep the skin very clean. Take plenty of fresh air by walking in it.

SNOW CAKE.—Mix a little corn-meal and pulverized sugar with the dry flour, and then stir in the snow; bake in a hot oven till well browned.

THE CHRISTIAN'S PRAYER.

AIR.—"The Indian Captive."

Let me go, let me go, where so oft I am blest
By communion with Jesus, whom I love the best;
Where no cares e'er distract, where devotion's fires glow,
To meet with the prayerful, vain world, let me go.

Let me go where the saints who, expecting their Lord,
Often meet to examine the prophetic word,
And the "signs of the times," that the truth they may know,
To meet with my brethren, vain world, let me go.

Let me go, let not sinful enticements prevail
In these dark days when men's hearts with fearfulness fail,
When the churches are cold, and their altar-fires low,
To meet with the pilgrims, vain world, let me go.

Let me go, where the spires of fair Salem I see,
To the top of Mount Pisgah, the best spot for me;
When the world's far beneath with its care and its woe,
To the heights of the mountain, vain world, let me go.

Let me go with the saints when the Savior shall come,
To take all his weary lone wanderers home
To the Eden restored, free from sorrow and wo;
To meet my dear Savior, vain world, let me go.

Let me go, where forever in glory I'll dwell,
And the song of the saved in a glad chorus swell;
Where flowers are unfading, where bright waters flow,
To my home eternal, vain world, let me go.

Let me go! did I hear it, the seventh trumpet blow?
Is not this the last hour of the third angel's "wo"?
Yes! the great clock of time strikes its funeral knell,
My Savior is coming! vain world, oh, farewell!

"CHURCH GAMBLING."

"One of the religious papers tells a story in relation to church gambling, which contains a lesson worthy of repeating. A member of a church went to his pastor and entreated his personal intercession with his favorite son, who had become ruinously addicted to the vice of gambling. The pastor consented, and, seeking the young man, found him in his chamber He commenced his lecture, but before he had concluded, the young man laid his hand upon his arm, and drew his attention to a pile of splendid volumes that stood upon the dressing-table 'Well,' said the young man, 'These volumes were won by me at a Fair given in your church they were my first venture But for that LOTTERY, UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF A CHRISTIAN CHURCH, I should have NEVER BECOME A GAMBLER'"—Advent Watchman.

The great object is to support modern and useless expenditures in proud and unnecessary improvements, and pay large salaries to ministers. Did they believe the gospel they profess, they would be content to endure privation, and if need be suffer, before they would either consent, or receive money obtained by such means, so apparently at war with the gospel

O! ye ministers of Jesus, cry aloud, spare not! Lift up your voice like a trumpet against this wickedness, or God will require the blood of souls at your hands

Question Is not the above system of christian gambling worse than the following? Is it not decidedly more dangerous? This I recently obtained from the Springfield Republican.

SOMETHING LIKE GAMBLING—There was a raffle one night at a fair held by the ladies of the church in —— for a benevolent purpose That same night two blacklegs were arrested for gambling in another part of the city While in the lock-up they naturally set to work to defend themselves as far as possible and here is their success —

"Look here, Smith," said one, "I say it is too hard that we poor fellows are caged up here, just for trying to make an honest living with the cards and dice I don't see, for my part, what right people have to interfere with any man's way of earning his bread, provided he don't steal it from them and then I should like to know what the difference is between our throwing dice for money, and those Episcopal gentry turning a wheel for it, and that's what they did do that same night we were nabbed." "Good, good, said Smith, "if you are sure they did that thing, we will turn the tables upon them, and make them pay us well or we will have them indicted for breaking the laws." "Ah! is that so? then we have them on the hip. That judge will never let his handsome young wife be brought up before the court for law breaking, so let us crack the nut as soon as we can What's the first step?" "Send for the state's attorney"

Their plan was arranged the attorney came. The men stated their full determination as soon as they were released from confinement, to file a bill against Mrs S her young friend, and all those who aided and abetted in the lottery, for such it was. The lawyer saw in a moment what an advantage they had, but he tried to persuade them (lawyer like) that they could do nothing, they had, however, been too often in the clutches of the law not to know some of its workings; and they maintained their determination As soon as it was known, a quiver went through the town, the opposing sects rejoiced at the uncomfortable position in which the dignified ladies and gentlemen of the church were placed. The judge was in an agony of annoyance, for he knew the men, and how difficult it would be to turn them from their revenge; but something must be done, and it was done. None knew the bribe which had sealed their lips. Few engaged in that fair will ever forget the fright they received or be tempted again to engage in a raffle or lottery

This anecdote gives the legal side of the question. Is there not a higher, more important one still—the moral one? What mother would not pray that her son might be kept from the gambler's terrible fate? What father would not shrink from the image of that son, with haggard look and anxious eye hanging over the fatal cards or billiard ball? Yet where lies the difference between the lotteries of a fancy bazaar, where the fortunate winner gains an article worth $500 for $5, and the youth staking his last eagle on the throw of the dice? It is a difference only of degree. Does the good cause which usually underlies our bazaars consecrate this refined gambling?—Christian Register.

Men do not expect "to gather figs of thistles," but it is a progressional phenomena of the nineteenth century, to find thistles upon what might under proper scriptural culture be called fig-trees. Think you that the popular establishments of the present day, called churches, especially those guilty of such abominable practices, can escape a worse scourge than "small cords"? Gambling in churches is certainly no less criminal than in the saloons of debauchery, dedicated to the votaries and victims of satan's master-art, obtaining money, to say the least, by dishonest means. O! what a burning damnation awaits christian deceptions.

Should this meet the eyes of any guilty of such transactions, in christian candor, let me entreat you to prepare to render an account of your conduct to Him who standeth ready and will soon judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom.

RELIGION AND AMUSEMENT.—An excellent preacher, now at rest, said before he died, "I foresee that we are to have a dancing and card-playing religion, and I tremble for the church." What he foresaw is fast being realized, and if he had included the theatre among the "worldly amusements" to be tolerated by the church, he would not have been far wrong. Indeed outright gambling seems not to be considered wrong in the best circles, provided the proceeds promote some beneficent scheme.

The attempts now made to stem the current so strongly setting towards amusements once considered worldly and harmful, if not decidedly sinful, are few and feeble. They fail perhaps, more from wholesale and indiscriminate denunciations of all amusements than from any perversity in those to whom they are addressed. There is of course moral peril connected with recreations, as there is indeed with the more serious business of life. But it does not follow that all amusement, or all fun and frolic even, are therefore to be avoided. The accepted philosophy of the world, if not of the church, now is that sport is as legitimate as work, recreation as rightful as worship. The old maxim that the christian must not engage in any thing which turns his mind from serious things is discarded, and the common belief is that the man who enjoys a dance, a game of chance, or any other innocent recreation, can be quite as devout at the proper time and place as one who considers every thing vain and sinful that is not positively religious Thus we see professors of good standing exhorting well in the prayer-meeting and spending the remainder of the evening at the whist table; punctual upon all the "means of grace," and devoting an occasional evening to an exhibition of tableaux, a theatrical performance, or the coarse humor of the negro minstrels; and lately we have seen our most cultivated and pious ladies taking with a sweet grace the dollars of the ungodly for tickets in raffles, the proceeds to be devoted to the comfort or religious instruction of our soldiers—which is only a return of the days not a generation gone, when colleges and churches were built by lotteries, and the holders of the prizes were considered special favorites of heaven in being "privileged" to bless the world and fill their own purses in the same act This sort of thing, however, may be very easily carried beyond safe limits, and the good women of the fairs may make themselves responsible for a great deal of moral mischief before they know it.

It is difficult to draw any exact line, and to set down this amusement as sinful and that as innocent, but our christian casuists should not find it impossible to state the general principles governing all such matters so plainly that their application to particular cases will be obvious In games of skill and chance, chess, checkers, backgammon and such like have long been tolerated in the most puritanical circles, while cards were formerly tabooed, for the then sufficient reason that gambling was chiefly done with cards, and there was consequently danger that whoever should play them might fall into that vice If that objection has disappeared cards are in themselves as innocent as chess or jackstraws The practical question is, Does card-playing naturally lead to gambling? So of theatricals, religious people formerly opposed them because of the loose morality of plays and players and the bad associations of the theatre The prevalence of tableaux exhibitions and parlor theatricals and the growing tolerance of the theatre proper among our most precise christians show that the real objection is not to the stage, but to the abuses connected with it It is very evident that the church is now educating its children to be theatre goers, and that in the next generation the theatre is to be more universally patronized than ever before In principle there is no more objection to the theatre than to the exhibition of tableaux and there are necessarily no greater moral exposures there than in any other place where all classes meet for instruction or amusement The same may be said of all amusements not intrinsically wrong

What specially needs to be considered by those who endeavor to direct christian opinion is this If the church, by which we mean all who accept christianity, does not think it necessary or possible to check or turn aside the current now setting so strongly towards public amusements, if it has determined to tolerate them, it should take the direction of them and make them safe by excluding all that is impious and indelicate The stage will slough off its grossness if its best supporters come from the church and insist upon decency and morality in the performances But if the church will not attempt to reform and control popular amusements, then it must keep away from them altogether and leave them wholly to the publicans and sinners This is the manifest alternative

It is written concerning antiquated teachers and devotees of deception. The prophets prophecy falsely The priests bear rule by their means My people love to have it so But what will they do in the end thereof? Now the teachers teach falsely, the people love to and will have it so, and the end will soon make manifest what is to be done with all blind leaders of the blind Light has become darkness to the multitudes and what God purposed for light to them he has turned to darkness, and it is gross darkness, thick, gloomy and deathly S S BREWER

Bible believers must all agree that mankind can have hope of eternal life only by being in Christ He is to all in him, an ark of refuge and safety Out of him is death, in him is life

But the inquiry arises, who are out of him and who are in him? This is an important question, for it concerns our eternal life No sinner can have hope in Christ while in his sins; and the Bible teaches that whatsoever is not of faith is sin Hence we must certainly conclude that all the unbelieving world to whom the word of faith is come are out of Christ, and that their unbelief is what alienates them from him How then can they be reconciled to God or grafted into Christ? By faith certainly. Unbelief cuts off, faith unites See Rom 11: 20, 23

"But that is a mistake," says one, "the word says 'baptized into Christ,' and therefore all are out of Christ until baptized." This seems a plausible argument, and might be admitted if the Bible did not teach the contrary But we read of "believing into Christ," and certainly faith must come before baptism. The following are some passages where the original word in the Greek is "eis," the same that is translated "into" in the passage "baptized into Christ." I will quote from the Emphatic Diaglott "But to as many as received him he gave authority to become children of God, to those believing into his name." John 1: 12 "That every one believing into him may have aionian life. For God so loved the world that he gave his Son the only begotten, that every one believing into him may not perish but obtain aionian life." John 3: 15, 16. Also read John 6: 40, 47 and where you find "believeth on me" read "believeth into me" and you will have the literal rendering of the original.

A great many more passages might be quoted similar to these but here are enough. We see by these that we become "in Christ" by faith. Hence, a person must be a brother or sister in Christ before baptism. Faith alone first unites the person to Christ. How then can a person be "baptized into Christ" if he is already in him? I answer, in the same manner that a person can "grow up into him" according to the directions in Eph. 4: 15. It brings us more deeply into the things of Christ because it is an especial ordinance the obedience to which stamps more deeply upon us that character which we have already obtained by our faith. Let me illustrate. A boat is upon the river. Its occupants have just pushed it from the shore and launched out. A voice calls out, "Push into the stream." The voyager understands the call to mean to create more distance between him and the shore which he has already left. He is already in the stream, but the farther he pushes out the more he is cut off from the sources of help the earth might afford him. So we are to "believe into Christ," "be baptized into Christ, and "grow up into him."

By baptism sins are remitted, not literally, but in a figure Remission of sins will not take place literally until the resurrection Forgiveness takes place as soon as a person believes with the heart on Jesus Christ These two terms are not the same in import Forgiveness justifies; remission puts away The man is forgiven but not remitted, for to remit the man would be to put him away God forgives the man and remits his sins, and where the Scriptures say, "forgive sins," the ellipsis must be supplied,—"forgive the man from his sins." The sin itself must be remitted, and this cannot be done until the High Priest comes forth and blesses his waiting ones and remits or sends away their sins by the scapegoat in antitype

Baptism also washes away sins in a figure and saves us in a figure, or in other words shows that the person has a clean conscience and expects salvation by a resurrection from the dead One word on Gal 3: 27,—"For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." By the words "as many of you," the apostle would discriminate between those who had believed in Christ before baptism and those who had not Although all may have been baptized, none were baptized into him except those who had first believed into him Those who had been baptized into him had put him on How? By being baptized into him? Yes, and also by believing in him, and they were exhorted to put him on by obedience even after baptism See Eph 4: 22, 24, and Col 3: 12, 14 By believing into him we put him on that is, his character by faith By being baptized into him we put him on by baptism By obedience and continued faithfulness to him we grow up into him by putting off the old man with his deeds, and putting on the new man, which is renewed after the image of him that created him The apostle says the inner man is renewed day by day

Seeing these things are true beloved brethren and sisters, let us live in him, and if we die let us die in the Lord, and while we sleep we shall sleep in Jesus, and when we wake we will be born of the Spirit out of Christ and his kingdom J BURR

A BIRTH-DAY MEDITATION

DEAR PUBLISHER—I have this day entered the eighty eighth year of my age and am nearly past manual labor therefore, I can think of nothing better at this propitious day to employ myself about, than to sit down and try to write a few thoughts upon the ravages of time and the fruition of eternity for you to lay before your readers, hoping that they may make a solemn and profitable impression upon the minds of those who are careless and thoughtless

Time, since the world's commencement has been constantly on the advance. Conquering and to conquer No event has retarded its progress and no obstacle has resisted its all powerful sway The great, the small, the high and the low, are all subjected to its relentless violence No sooner does man spring into existence although the noblest part of creation, than time seizes him in its powerful grasp, and marches him in a hurried pace through the scenes of life, and eventually lands him in the silent tomb

Let us look at the history of the past Where are the mighty nations of antiquity, whose inhabitants were as numerous as we can count, and whose power was as vast as we can think They have fallen Time has cut them off and mingled them with the dust of the earth

All things go to prove to us that here we have no continuing city Many with whom we associated in our youthful days, and in whose company we spent many hours of pleasure, have fallen into the cold embrace of death and are known to us only in memory of the past And ourselves, although we have active limbs, and are blest with health and eyes beaming with life and hope, must shortly be borne from the scenes of earth to the obscure tomb What deep solemnity passes over the mind when we reflect upon what is to follow That sooner or later we must bid adieu to all beneath the sun And were it not for the soul-cheering hope of life and immortality beyond the grave, brought to light through the gospel how dreary would be our pilgrimage

Although our bodies may moulder back to the dust from whence they came, yet there is hope, for we are assured they shall be raised again at the resurrection and brought before their Judge to give up their account for the deeds done in the body,—"He that has done good to the resurrection of life, and he that has done evil to the resurrection of damnation" Lo! what a scene is here brought forth for our contemplation.

But however alarming this may be to some, yet the christian need not be discouraged, for he is assured of eternal life. He is assured of being set at the right hand of God at that great and memorable day of his coming, and of that happiness which shall never end. "Behold," saith Christ to his disciples, "my sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand." John 10: 27. It is this soul-cheering hope of life and immortality beyond the grave, that can give us any real comfort while wandering through the dark and dreary scenes of life, and cast a bright and shining light of glory around the dying pillow, and point us to a better world of enjoyments, where peace and happiness shall ever abound. Dear reader, may we look well to these things, and prepare to meet those events that are soon to follow.

Time, we are taught by divine revelation, shall not always last. Eternity will swallow it up. Lo! are we prepared to meet eternity? Are we prepared to meet our Judge? Are we prepared to meet the Savior? Have we on the wedding garment? Have we our lamps trimmed and burning? If we have not, let us make no delay in preparing to meet the Bridegroom when he shall come. Now, under the above considerations would it not be well for us to notice and adhere to the following passage of Scripture? "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest." Eccl. 9: 10

In conclusion, let me make a few remarks:—"Behold," saith the Savior, "I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be." "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Rev. 22: 12, 13. It matters not with the dead in their graves, whether Christ shall come to-day or to-morrow, or a thousand years hence, for it will be but a day or a night to them before they shall be called forth to meet their Judge. And we who are now living, are but mortals, and our lives are in the hands of God; and we are liable to be cut off at any day or hour. We know not what a day or an hour may bring forth. Therefore, we should strive to make our calling and election sure, as though we knew the day or the hour of his coming. May we all look well to these things in time, lest the door of hope be shut against us.

MEMORIAL OF GEORGE W. NEAL.

For ten months an invalid.

Called out from the world in the morning of life,
By disease laid aside, thus freed from earth's strife,
From the tumult of war, from sin's giddy maze,
He learned e'en in suff'ring his Savior to praise.

The things once a pleasure now ceased to allure,
He turned from earth's foibles to joys more secure,
He felt t'would be blessed "to die in the Lord,"
Escape thus life's perils, and wait his reward.

He trusted the promise made those who believe,
In Christ the Life-giver—"though dead they shall live,"
Their life hid with Jesus, his voice they will hear,
In His likeness rising, immortal appear.

Be comforted, mourners, rejoice while you weep;
Our friends are not perished who in Jesus sleep,
Sure signs are foretelling the dawn of the day,
When tears from all faces shall be wiped away.

Young friends, ye who loved him and watched his decay
Give heed to his warnings, begin now to pray;
Defer not repentance till seasons of pain,—
God bless and prepare you to meet him again.

THE WOMAN WHO NEVER GOSSIPS.

Oh, no, I never gossip! I have enough to do to take care of my own business, without talking about the affairs of others, Mrs Smith.

Why, there's Mrs Crocker, she deals in scandal by the wholesale. It does seem to me as though that woman's tongue must be almost worn out; but, no, there's no danger of that If everybody was like me, there wouldn't be much trouble in the world Oh, no, I never gossip

But did you know that Miss Elliot had got a new silk, Mrs Smith? You didn't? Well, she has It's a real brocade. I saw it myself, and I do say it's a shame for her to be so extravagant I mean to give her a piece of my mind Mrs Smith You believe her uncle gave it to her? Well I don't care if he did Why it's only two months since her father failed, and now to see her dash out in this style, its a burning shame I suppose she thinks she's going to catch young lawyer Jones but I think she'll find herself mistaken He's got more sense than to be caught by her, if she has got a brocade silk dress

And there's the upstart dressmaker, Kate Manly, setting her cap for the doctor's son The impertinence of some people is perfectly astonishing I don't think she's any better than she ought to be, for my own part I never did like her, with her mild, soft look, when anybody's about. My word for it, she can look cross enough when there ain't.

Then she says she is only seventeen! Good ness knows she's as old as my Arabella Lucretia; and she's—well, I won't say how old, but she's more than seventeen, and I ain't ashamed to say so either, but I think Dr May's son will have more discretion than to think of marrying her Some folks call her handsome. Well, I don't She ain't half so good looking as my daughter Jane Then she does up her hair in such fly away curls! and, if you believe it, Mrs Smith, she actually had the impudence to tell me she couldn't make her hair as straight as my Maria's. Impertinence! If she'd let curling-papers and curling irons alone, I'd risk but what her hair would be as straight as anybody's

But what do you think of the minister's wife, Mrs Smith? You like her? Well, all I can say is you've got a very peculiar taste Why, she's as proud as Lucifer been married a whole week, and hasn't been to see me yet You presume she has not had time? I don't see what the minister wanted to go out of town to get him a wife for, anyway and then above all things, to get that garish looking thing? Why didn't he take one of his parishioners? There's my Arabella Lucretia would have made him a better wife than he's got now. And she's just about the right age for him What do you say? that Arabella Lucretia is two years older than the minister I should think it was a pity if I didn't know my own daughter's age, Mrs Smith! If some folks would mind their own business, as I do I'd thank them

THE ART OF GROWING POOR.

Some professors of religion spend more money for oysters each year than for the missionary cause others give more for tickets to lectures, concerts, new bonnets, etc, than for the preacher They are always of the kind who complain the most about the church, the quality of the sermons and the coldness of the membership. Giving nothing or next to nothing for the Lord, they find life an awkward thing to them—seldom paying with promptness their debts or accumulating anything in the way of property As with individuals so with churches. In refusing to give they bring barrenness and deadness on themselves

Said one of the most eminent of laymen, making a platform missionary address: "I have heard of churches starving out from a saving spirit, but I have never heard of one dying of benevolence And if I could hear of one such, I would make a pilgrimage to it by night, and in that quiet solitude, with the moon shining and the aged elm waving, I would put my hands on the moss-clad ruins, and gazing on the venerable scene, would say, 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!'"—Scripture Cabinet

THE WORK LESSON.—The best lesson a father can give his son is this:—"Work, strengthen your moral and mental faculties, as you would strengthen your muscles by vigorous exercise; learn to conquer circumstances, you are then independent of fortune. The men of athletic minds, who left their marks on the years in which they lived, were all trained in a rough school. They did not mount their high position by the help of leverage; they leaped into chasms, grappled with the opposing rocks, avoided avalanches, and when the goal was reached, felt that but for the toil that had strengthened them as they strove, it could never have been attained."

PROPHECY.—In this age of unbelief and changeful events, nothing seems more needful to establish our faith in the truth of divine revelation, and satisfy our minds with respect to the future, than a consideration of the prophecies of Scripture; not one jot or tittle of which will ever fall in its accomplishment.—Lorenzo Dow.

RUM, TOBACCO, AND TEA.

I beg leave to report myself an abstainer from the use of the above named articles. I am satisfied they are making a fearful waste of health, money, and morality. I drank ardent spirits from my childhood till about 1830. I was then twenty-eight years of age, when I joined the Temperance Society, and have kept my pledge. I thank the Lord for that move in the right way. I felt glad that I had overcome an enemy, but soon found I was not a free man; I smoked, chewed, and sometimes snuffed tobacco. The poison so affected me I had to use it very sparingly. Was always sickly, and the doctors could not help me, and never told me I was tobacco-sick, I did not know it myself until I gave up its use for conscience' sake, and to save the cost for the Foreign Mission fund. I immediately recovered my health. Was overjoyed with my deliverance, and ever since have done and said all I can to persuade others from the vile and sinful use of tobacco.

It grieves me to see christians, and especially Advent christians, use tobacco in any way. I am thankful that the brethren and sisters with whom I am united in church fellowship do not use it There are very few that would pray to the Lord with a chew of tobacco in the mouth, and I think no christian would like to be found by the gathering angels, that will be sent forth to gather the elect, with a pipe, cigar, or tobacco in their mouth, or a glass of rum in their stomachs

Just a word about tea. As I grew old, my food distressed me, and dyspepsia troubled me, and I grew worse. Bro. Himes' writing on Health in the Crisis, about a year ago, suggested to me that tea might be injuring me I gave it up, and now find myself wonderfully relieved. I will close by saying that nothing on earth would be inducement enough to lead me back to the old habits Pray for me, that while I rejoice in a victory over some physical evils, I may not be overcome with a spiritual enemy that goeth about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour.

Yours in hope of speedy deliverance,

ICE CURES DIPHTHERIA.

'Break up a small lump of ice in a towel and put the pieces in a bowl Take a position slightly inclined backwards, either in a chair or on a sofa. Proceed for half an hour with a tea spoon to feed yourself with small lumps of ice, letting them dissolve slowly in the back part of the mouth, or the entrance of the throat A single such application will often break up a common sore throat, which otherwise would have a course of two or three days In case of a bad sore throat, use the ice frequently and freely In case of ulceration or diphtheria, keep a small lump of ice constantly in the mouth" H F TWING

WHAT IS DISEASE?

Without claiming any originality for our views upon this subject, we will now proceed to explain what disease is, as we understand it Disease is a vital action an action performed by vitality which takes food and forms it into the different tissues of the body, but now acting in a different capacity or having a different end in view, hence we call it a "remedial effort

Let us illustrate the nature of disease by a scene very familiar to those who live in the rural districts—a beautiful farm in the summer time—the housewife is preparing the frugal meal in the kitchen, some of the girls are aiding, some arranging their flower beds, some amusing the smaller children, one feeding the young chickens, one milking the cows, one enlivening the scene with rich strains of music from the parlor, the boys are dressing the garden, the farmer in another field is driving his mower, the hired hand ploughing the corn, and all is working beautifully and harmonious for the accomplishment of the desired end This represents healthy or physiological action The different individuals employed represent the different organs of the body, the sum of their powers the vitality of the system, and their harmonious action, health Now, suppose by carelessness or some accident the gate is left open, and the cows, and hogs and geese, and horses and sheep enter the yard among the flowers and vegetables, and fruits, the maiden among the flowers sees them, recognizes the presence of something that ought not to be there, shrieking, she springs to her feet, the wife rushes from the kitchen into the yard, the girl who is amusing the children forgets her charge and follows, the milk maid in her alarm overturns the pail of white foam, and seizing a stick rushes indiscriminately after hogs, horses and geese, the boys drop their hoes, and with terrible yells attempt to clear the yard of the intruders, the hired hand drops the line and leaves his horse quietly to graze the corn, while he joins in the general assault, and the farmer comes from his work, puffing like an engine, when by the efforts of this combined force the larger animals are driven out at the open gates, the geese are caught and thrown over the fence, and finally the yard is cleared, the excitement gradually dies away and each individual returns to his proper avocation. You will notice that every one of these actions, however misguided or ill directed, is an effort to accomplish the same end—the expulsion of the offender—though the actions themselves may be very different. We also see that the powers which accomplish the end in view, are powers that were not designed for this purpose, being the same which are required to carry on the regular business of the farm, each having sufficient labor to perform aside from this new and unexpected call for exertion; hence while the act of expulsion is proceeding, the regular farm business can be but imperfectly, if at all, performed. This, though not a perfect illustration, will give a very clear idea what we mean by disease The animals in the yard are the cause of the disease, not the disease itself; the action—the effort to expel them—is the disease This is an imperfect comparison in this particular, we here represent the cause of the disease to be a living animal, whereas, in diseases common to the human being it is generally dead, inert matter.

We have before stated that the tissues of the body by constant action are rapidly worn out, broken down, or become lifeless, and must be expelled by new and living matter; this useless matter is removed by or through the skin, lungs, etc. Suppose the pores of the skin, by neglect of bathing, a coat of varnish or any other means, become closed so that the matter cannot be thrown off through that channel, what is to be done? The matter is there, it is doing nothing, it can do nothing, it is dead, powerless, but it is in the way and must be got rid of. Every other organ has a duty to perform, a constant duty which requires as great activity as it is fitted or designed for; but it was never intended that the pores of the skin should be closed, (just as in the case above it was not intended that the gate should be left open,) hence no special power or agent was provided to remove this matter in such a contingency, and the only possible way in which it can be removed is by the over exertion of some other organs of the body; and this exertion, this effort, we call disease, Suppose through carelessness, or by any other means, something is taken into the stomach which cannot be used to form bone, muscles, tendons, hair or any of the tissues of the body. Something must be done with this matter. True it is doing nothing, is making no attack upon the domicil of life, but the stomach is clogged up by its presence, and if it is not removed, cannot perform its functions, hence an effort is made to remove it by the vital powers of the system, and this effort—not the vitality, not the foreign substance—is disease.

Understanding disease in this, its true light, you will be prepared with us to declare it a blessing rather than a curse, and like the boy who wished there was no such thing as lightning because it sometimes injured persons and property, and he could see no good result from it, yet when he understood its real nature and purpose, found it cleansed the atmosphere which would otherwise become unfit for man to live in, and was led to wonder and admire that which only filled his mind with awe and dread. We, when we have penetrated the depth of this subject, so long wrapped in mystery, the solution of which was so long sought afar off among the labyrinths of mysterious providences, will see ourselves in different relations, the scales will have fallen from our eyes, and what before seemed the dark frowns of an unrelenting providence, will be its sweetest smiles. The sweeping house maid is disagreeable to us, if there is but little dirt and the sweeping is carefully performed, the inconvenience is not great; if the dirt has been long accumulating, the dust rises and falls upon the furniture, fills the eyes of all the occupants and becomes a very disagreeable and painful operation yet the sweeper is a friend, her occupation useful and necessary to our happiness Disease is but vitality sweeping the "house we live in" If the cobwebs have filled all the corners, the dust thickly coated floors and walls, and the thick mould covered the furniture, the commotion will be great and painful, nevertheless the operation is necessary, and though the system may be injured by it, without it it would become so filthy that it would be untenable

HEALTH AND DISEASE.

Health, remarks a writer, is the result of the natural performance of all the functions of life. It gives development, beauty, vigor and happiness and is characterized by strength of body, power and serenity of mind, and a keen enjoyment of all the blessings of life

Disease, on the other hand, is the result of any disorder of the natural functions It hinders development, mars beauty, impairs vigor, and destroys happiness It is characterized by weakness, indolence, pain, misery or otherwise, by a stimulated, morbid activity which speedily brings a wretched life to a premature and painful death

Health is maintained by a simple, nourishing diet, pure air, exercise, cleanliness, and the regulation of the passions Men cram themselves with the impure flesh and fat of diseased animals, heating condiments and spices, spirituous drinks, and the poisonous narcotics, as opium, tea, coffee, and tobacco—injuring their digestive powers, and filling their systems with poisonous matter, and to these are added a long list of vegetable and mineral poisons, taken as medicines, not one grain of which can be taken without permanent injury to the human organism; we inhale poisons in filthy streets and unventilated buildings, and these poisons are kept in the system; and the skin—the great purifying organ of the body—is weakened by a neglect of personal cleanliness, which cannot be maintained in healthy action without occasional bathing in soft, tepid water. The poisonous matter thus brought into and kept in the system, weaken its powers, interrupts its functions, and produces a state of disease Nature makes a violent effort to cast out these evils and we have pain, inflammations, fevers, and the whole train of acute diseases The poisons in the system, and the bleedings and poisonings of the doctors, weaken the powers of nature, and we have the less violent, but more protracted agonies of chronic disease Such violations of the laws of God have filled the world with disease and misery, and the restoration of health, so far as practicable in our false state of society, must be obtained by a knowledge of and obedience to His physiological laws —Voice of the West

NIGHT SWEATS.—Night sweats are caused by a weakness in the vital forces, being unable to send off impurities through the bowels and kidneys Hence the skin is called upon to do extra labor The true remedy consists in strengthening the kidneys, rousing the liver, and keeping the bowels regular Drink weak sage or sassafras tea before going to bed Keep the skin very clean Take plenty of fresh air by walking in it

SNOW CAKE.—Mix a little corn meal and pulverized sugar with the dry flour, and then stir in the snow; bake in a hot oven till well browned.

For the World's Crisis.

I CANNOT GO ALONE.

I cannot go alone, my Lord,
The way is dark and drear;
Cold frowns will meet me everywhere,
And cause my heart to fear.

I cannot go alone, dear Lord,
I hear the war-arms rattle;
I see the multitudinous foe,
And fierce will be the battle.

I cannot walk the desert through,
The way is dark as night,
And angry wolves that linger there,
Would seize me with delight.

O! Thou who bidst me bear my cross,
Forsaking every friend,
Hast said thy presence shall be mine,
E'en to my journey's end.

My weakness, Lord, shall claim thy strength,
Such are thy precious laws,
So shall I labor day by day
To build thy wasted cause.

Be thou my wisdom and support,
My Counsellor, my Friend;
Teach thou my erring feet thy way,
And guide me to the end.

DAY OF THE CRUCIFIXION.

As there is evidence on record respecting the day our Lord was crucified, all who prefer truth to error will be interested in any presentation of the evidence which may tend to make the truth manifest. But the opinion entertained by many, that he was crucified on a Friday, conflicts sadly with the evidence, and reduces the "three days and three nights," during which he was to remain dead, to a day and a half. This opinion is founded on the presumption that the Sabbath, mentioned as following the day after the crucifixion, was the seventh-day Sabbath. But a right application of the evidence goes to support the following propositions: 1st. That he was crucified on the Passover. 2nd. That the day after the Passover was a yearly Sabbath. 3d. That he was raised from the dead on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday. 4th. That the day he rose was the third day after his crucifixion, and was, therefore, crucified on Thursday.

1. That he was crucified on the Passover, we have a prediction of Christ himself, as evidence, as recorded by Matthew; who testifies that he said to his disciples, "Ye know that after two days is the Passover, and the Son of man is betrayed to be crucified." Chapter 26: 2. The words in italics are left out in this quotation, because they are not in the Greek, and are left out in the Syriac and other versions. So this mention of the Passover, in the prediction, taken in connection with the fact that the betrayal and crucifixion took place in one single day, can convey but one meaning; and that is, that the betrayal and crucifixion were to take place on the Passover day.

It should be kept in mind that the day with the Jews ended at sunset; in accordance with the fact, that at the creation "the evening and morning were the first day." Gen. 1: 5. Hence when we read, as in Luke 22: 7,—"Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the Passover must be killed," the beginning of that day is indicated. For as their day began at sunset, that would be the hour when it could be said, "then came the day of unleavened bread." And as this was said with reference to the eve of the betrayal, and called by Mark "the first day of unleavened bread," ch. 14: 12, it was the beginning of the fourteenth day. Hence the eve of the betrayal was not the time to sacrifice the Passover; for this was to be done at the close of the day, not at the beginning. For Josephus testifies that the paschal lambs were sacrificed "from the ninth hour till the eleventh."—Wars of the Jews, Book 6, ch. 9, sec. 3. So if that began on the eve of the betrayal, the Passover would not have been eaten until after his betrayal; which is confirmed by what is said in reference to his trial before Pilate on the morning after. John 18: 28,—"Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgment; and it was early; and they themselves went not into the judgment-hall lest they should be defiled, but that they might eat the Passover."

That this testimony of John refers to the Passover proper, on the fourteenth day, is evident from the allusion to the requirement of the law,—That those who were defiled could not eat thereof until the fourteenth day of the second month; just one month later than the usual time. Num. 9: 5–11. So what John testifies to, cannot be made to refer to any thing subsequent to the fourteenth day, for every thing pertaining to eating thereof was to cease before the morning of the fifteenth day. Compare Exodus 12: 10; Lev. 23: 5. So as the Jews had not eaten thereof on the morning of the crucifixion, they could not have eaten it the evening before. Hence the fourteenth day must have begun on the eve of the betrayal, and ended when the day of crucifixion closed. So that "Christ, our Passover, was sacrificed for us" when the Jews killed their Passover.

That "the first day of unleavened bread" began with the fourteenth day, is found in the fact that the law says,—"In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread until the one and twentieth day of the month at even. Seven days there shall be no leaven found in your houses." Exodus 12: 18; Lev. 23: 5–7. As the Jews reckoned two evenings, one when the sun was declining, and one from sunset to dark, (Matt. 14: 15–23), the seven days would begin with the first mentioned; because they were to begin "on," not with, the fourteenth day. So while there were seven days complete, there were eight days included, the fourteenth being the first of the eight. And on the first day of the eight, they were required to cleanse their houses from all leaven, so that none was to be seen for the seven days. Exodus 12: 15. Hence the first day of the eight was the day of Preparation, by being devoted to this cleansing process, and to making ready the Passover. So if the disciples had made this preparation on the eve of the betrayal, Luke might have well said, "They made ready the Passover," ch. 22: 13, although their lamb was not sacrificed until the end of the day of which that evening was but the beginning; but only selected, and prepared for sacrifice. But if the Passover had been eaten that night, the Preparation would have preceded it, so that the crucifixion would have been the day after the Preparation; whereas, all the evangelists agree that he was crucified on "the day of the Preparation." Matt. 27: 62; Mark 15: 42; Luke 23: 54; John 19: 14. The last named refers to the concluding acts of his trial, and reads thus, "And it was the Preparation of the Passover, and about the sixth hour, and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King!" But the preparation for the seventh day did not begin so early, and so can only mean what it says.

So there is no evidence that the Passover was killed and eaten on the eve of the betrayal; but, on the contrary, John testifies that the "supper," which the disciples ate on that night, was "before the feast of the Passover." Ch. 13: 1–2. And the word "feast" cannot be made to mean the simple eating of the paschal lamb, for the original of the word—heortes—signifies a celebration of the thing specified. And so, as it respects the Passover, it would denote the whole service thereof—including the killing of the lamb, the sprinkling of its blood, and the roasting and eating thereof by the people assembled, as in Exodus 12: 21–27. So if the hour for this service had come, when the disciples ate that last supper with their Lord, John would not have said that it was "before the feast of the Passover."

There is no harmonizing this with Luke 22, unless we take Luke's account as relating to a supper of unleavened bread; and what was said on that occasion, relative to eating the Passover, as referring to eating thereof after it should have been killed at the close of the day, which had begun on that evening. For, if it had been eaten on the eve of the betrayal, John could not have said that the Jews, on the following morning, "went not into the judgment-hall, lest they should be defiled, but that they might eat the Passover." For had it been killed and eaten the night before, they would not have eaten of it afterwards, for there was nothing to be left of it until the morning. Exodus 12: 10.

Hence the evidence is conclusive, that it was not eaten on the eve of the betrayal. For although Christ said on that occasion, "With desire have I desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer; for I say unto you I will no more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God," that is no proof that he did. For he might have thus expressed his desire, and at the same time declared that he would "no more eat thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God," leaving his meaning to be interpreted by the facts in the case. And the facts in the case go to show that he did not eat thereof, inasmuch as, on the morning following, the Jews "went not into the judgment-hall, lest they should be defiled, but that they might eat the Passover."

Again, that he was crucified on the Passover, we find by what Pilate said to the Jews when he sought to release him. He said, "Ye have a custom that I should release unto you one at the Passover, will ye therefore that I release unto the King of the Jews?" John 18: 39. But if it had been eaten the night before, he could not then have released "one at the Passover;" for that would have been after it had wholly ended, as the following will show: Lev. 23: 4–6,—"These are the feasts of the Lord, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons. In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord's Passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord; seven days must ye eat unleavened bread." Now as this limits the feast of the Passover to the close of the evening of the fourteenth day, and the next following, (for the Hebrew is held to mean "between the two evenings," or, as in the Septuagint, in the midst of the evenings), it could not extend any further than into the night preceding the morning of the fifteenth day. Hence when Luke says, "The feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover," (ch. 22: 1), he could only refer to its commencement on the fourteenth day, and not to its continuation into the morning of the fifteenth day. So if the Jews had a custom to have some one released at the Passover, Pilate could only fulfill this custom by releasing some one on the fourteenth day; as any day after would not be "at the Passover." Therefore, the conclusion is inevitable, he was crucified on the Passover.

2. That the day after the Passover was a yearly Sabbath, we find by Exodus 12: 15, 16; Lev. 23: 7. The passage in Exodus reading thus,—"Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day shall ye put away leaven out of your houses; for whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel. And in the first day there shall be an holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be an holy convocation to you; no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you." As these seven days began with the latter part of the fourteenth day, the first complete day of the seven would be the fifteenth day (Exodus 12: 18); and as this was to be kept as a day of rest, it would be a yearly Sabbath. And that it was called a Sabbath, we find by Lev. 23: 11; which speaks of the offering of the sheaf of first fruits "on the morrow after the Sabbath;" and, according to Josephus, this offering was made on the sixteenth day of the first month. HOLINESS TO THE LORD.—NO. 1.

"Rise to a higher, holier life,
Ye that are called the sons of God,
And girded with the Spirit's sword,
Go nobly to the strife."

Holiness, what is it? It is obeying the truth through the Spirit, keeping the commandments. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment; and the second is like unto it: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."—Matt. 22: 37, 38. "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. Herein is our love made perfect."—1 John 4: 16, 17. The perfection contended for is christian, not angelic or Adamic—the perfection of our first parents in the garden of Eden ere they plucked the forbidden fruit.

The brightest, highest, and most lovely angel in glory is not absolutely perfect. Absolute perfection appertains only to God. In this sense "there is none good but one, that is God."

Says an eminent writer on the subject of christian perfection:

"The perfect in love are kept every moment by a present, simple faith in the atonement. The atonement is the very soul of perfect love. The perfect in love see more clearly and feel more deeply their constant need of the atonement than any others. They can cry feelingly,

"Every moment, Lord, I need
The merit of thy death."

They are saved from sin only by resting wholly upon the blood of the atonement. They are saved from moment to moment only while they rest upon the merits of Christ, and "live by faith on the Son of God." Faith is the vital bond that unites their souls to the dear Savior."

"The just shall live by faith." What is there objectionable to this definition of christian perfection? It is simply taking God at his word, obeying the truth, submitting meekly to the divine will, living by faith on the Son of God momentarily, presenting the body a living or continual sacrifice to God, rejoicing evermore, praying without ceasing, and in everything giving thanks. Anything unscriptural in all this?

This is just the perfection God requires in the present life, just the perfection we need, must have, to qualify us for usefulness and happiness. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."

David, the sweet singer of Israel, understood this way of living by the moment, practised it, published it. Hark! "Mine eyes are ever towards the Lord; for he shall pluck my feet out of the net." Ps. 25: 15. Mark the saying "ever," his eyes were ever towards the Lord,—all the time, on all occasions. What eye was this? His natural eye? Nay, his spiritual eye, his eye of faith—faith in God's word, faith in his promises; on these his eye of faith was fixed continually. Again he says: "I will bless the Lord at all times; his name shall continually be in my mouth." How could the Psalmist praise God at all times, unless he confided in him at all times? that is, lived by the moment.

Hear him in another testimony: "I have set the Lord always before me; because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved."—Ps. 16: 8. Here the same sentiment is reiterated—the idea of living by the moment clearly and forcibly expressed. This living by the moment was doubtless the secret of David's holy living, his life, his hope, his joy and rejoicing. So long as he continued to look to the Lord thus, he was not moved, turned aside by the world, the flesh, or the devil. "It is God," says he, "that girdeth me with strength, and maketh my way perfect." "With the pure thou wilt show thyself pure." "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace." "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."—Ps. 91: 1. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." Mark also the expressions in the 113th Psalm: "Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord. Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart." "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy word." "These also do no iniquity; they walk in his ways."—Ps. 19: 3.

When David, in an unguarded moment, turned his eye from "the author and finisher of his faith," he fell grievously, lost the blessing of perfect love! The loss was terrible! He felt it to be so. What, then, his first prayer? for its restoration? Yes: "Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin. . . . Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me."—Ps. 51: 10. Without a full restoration of this inward cleansing, David felt he was not prepared to glorify God in doing good, in "building the walls of Jerusalem." This keeping the eye ever towards the Lord was not only the secret of David's holy living and joyfulness, but the same, we believe, is true of all the Old Testament saints who walked with God continually.

So likewise of the New Testament worthies, the apostles and primitive disciples: this doctrine of living by the moment shines forth with renewed lustre and glory under the new dispensation. Wesley, Fletcher, Clarke, Carvosso, Lady Huntington, Maxwell, Madame Guyon, Taylor, Prof. Upham, Mahan, Finney, and all who are now in the enjoyment of the blessing of full salvation, tell us it is living in the constant fear and love of God, setting the Lord always before them, keeping the eye steadily on Christ, as their only Savior, sun, shield, rock of defence, deliverer, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. Living by faith necessarily involves the idea of receiving by faith, and by the moment, and of receiving each moment the grace necessary for that moment. O blessed life, Satan finds no lodgment. Faith is a shield by which all the fiery darts of the enemy are warded off.

"Then is my strength by thee renewed;
Then are my sins by thee forgiven;
Then dost thou cheer my solitude
With hope of heaven.

No words can tell what sweet relief
There for my every want I find—
What strength for warfare, balm for grief,
What peace of mind."

Living by faith on the Son of God, we live above the world, above sinning. Can we sin while looking intently to Jesus as our Savior, humbly, confidently, perpetually? rejoicing in his love, his great salvation, doing whatsoever he commands us? All is on the altar, time, talents, property, friends, reputation, influence, unbelief, all is given up, all set apart exclusively to God's service. Our wills are God's, and God's will ours.

That freedom from both inward and outward sin, from both the guilt and the defilement of sin, is practicable in this life. The very name, "Jesus," was given to our Redeemer, because he should save his people "from their sins"—not in them. And we are assured, in the most positive language, that, "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all our unrighteousness."

Blessed doctrine,—"Look unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved." Is the sinner toiling in the painful slavery of sin? Jesus comes to him as the great emancipator, saying, "Whom the Son maketh free, he shall be free indeed." Again we say, blessed doctrine! Sound it out through all the earth.

"Captive of sin and shame,
O'er earth and ocean hear,
An angel's voice proclaim
The Lord's accepted year,
Let Jacob rise, be Israel free,
It is the year of jubilee."

But how may freedom from sin be obtained? Freely, by grace, through faith. "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. 5: 1. "And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith." Acts 15: 9. Hence, as both pardon and purity are obtained in the blood of Christ, the fountain opened in the house of David for sin and uncleanness, and as they are offered to all upon the single condition of faith, we are bold in declaring that instantaneous freedom from all sin may now be obtained by an act of faith in Jesus Christ. Yes,

"Jesus, my Lord, thy blood alone
Hath power sufficient to atone;
Thy blood can make me white as snow,
No Jewish type could cleanse me so."

Thus did King David seek freedom from sin. "Have mercy on me, O God." This was a prayer for pardon. "Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin." This was a prayer for complete and instantaneous purity. "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit, soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." This is a prayer for complete freedom from sin, to be instantaneously wrought, and for the preservation of the persons thus purified in that holy state, even unto our Lord's coming.

"Just as I am, though tossed about
With many a conflict, many a doubt,
Fightings within, and fears without,
O Lamb of God, I come! I come!"

As soon as the doctrine is announced that freedom from sin may be obtained in the present life, and at the present time, we are met by the fact, that the religious life is a growth, compared in the gospel to the growth of a tree and of a child; and with inference, that if freedom from sin is instantaneous, the religious life cannot be a growth. To this it may be replied, that it may be a growth in grace and in knowledge. Of such a growth we read in many places; but never of a growth toward freedom from sin. The whole tenor of Scripture goes to prove that sin is forgiven and washed away at once, by the blood of Christ, and not by a gradual process, such as a growth.

But then, let it never be forgotten that religious growth is a sure result of freedom from sin. We do not expect children to grow out of their diseases; for disease retards, if it does not entirely destroy growth; but we apply remedies to cure the diseases, and when they are cured, then we expect our children to grow. A tree infested by worms will not grow healthy; nor does the skillful horticulturist wait until it has outgrown the worms, but he removes or destroys them; and then he reasonably expects a healthy growth. And it is God's plan first to free his children from all sin; and then he expects and commands them to grow up in Christ, to the full stature of a perfect man, "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might," "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord"—"comprehending with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and height, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, being filled with all the fullness of God."

"In perfect love we dwell in God,
And God in us with peace and power;
We walk the way our Savior trod,
In sweet communion every hour."

For the World's Crisis.

THE PASSOVER A TYPE OF FUTURE DELIVERANCE.

To the proposition announced in the above heading, I doubt not many of those who are waiting for the coming kingdom of God will readily assent, but to others it may appear as a fanciful, or erroneous, or at least an unwarrantable supposition. But to the law and to the testimony, and if we speak according to this word surely you will acknowledge it as light. Please turn with me then to Luke 22: 15, 12. "And he said unto them, with desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer; for I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God."

The first question which suggests itself from these words of our blessed Lord is, Why did he thus earnestly or as in the margin "heartily" desire to eat that Passover with his disciples before he should suffer? Was it in order to commemorate the deliverance of Israel from their Egyptian bondage? Surely not, for, so far as I remember, we have no account of his ever even mentioning the event during his whole ministry. Was it then because it should be the immediate precursor of his own sufferings and death? This surely could not be it, for instead of its being desirable, he prayed, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; . . . nevertheless not as I will but as thou wilt." I can then discover no other reason for this desire, than that the Passover was the pledge and token of the fulfillment of that gracious and joyful purpose which only and alone, to my recollection as recorded, ever elicited the distinctive utterance of his will during his entire earthly sojourn, namely, as recorded in John 17: 24. "Father, I will, that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me, for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world."

With thus much of evidence on the point in question as deduced from this expressed desire of our Savior, we proceed, secondly, to inquire, Have we any more positive proof in relation to the typical import of the Passover? In verse sixteenth, as before cited, our Lord declares, I will not any more eat thereof, UNTIL IT BE FULFILLED IN THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Here then we have a positive intimation amounting to a declaration from the mouth of our Lord and Savior, that the Passover is not yet fulfilled, but will be in the future coming kingdom of God. And surely this with the consolation of Paul's statement in Heb. 10: 1, that "The law was a shadow of good things to come," should satisfy every believer, at least on this point, viz: that the Passover is a type of some event or events yet future, and connected with the kingdom for which we look. That a preliminray or preparatory portion of it, viz: the taking and slaying of the Lamb had its fulfillment in the scenes of Calvary, is of course admitted. But beyond that,—granting it to be typical at all, I would ask, Where have we seen the antitype? Beside the slaying of the lamb, as you will observe by referring to Ex. 12: 7, there was the marking of the door-posts of Israel's dwellings with its blood, that the destroying angel might see and pass over, sparing God's people while he should destroy the first-born of the Egyptians. The hasty feast with unleavened bread, and the sudden deliverance from Egyptian bondage, which, to whatever extent they were intended as a type, are evidently yet to be fulfilled. And that they were so intended I think no Bible believer will question.

It now remains for us then to inquire, "When? or How is the next feature to have its fulfillment, viz: the marking of God's people as a token to the destroyer to spare them? That this transaction will be in immediate connection with the final deliverance of those interested, I think will appear manifest both from the conditions of the institution itself, and from other Scriptures bearing on the same subject, for be it observed that all the acts or parts of the Passover after the taking of the lamb, were restricted to a single evening and night—and as it was immediately connected with the manifestation of God's righteous judgment, so, to be consistent, must be the antitype. And we find from other Scripture that when such manifestation does obtain, the first act is the deliverance of God's chosen people. For it shall be as in the days of Noah and of Lot—the world went on—eating and drinking, etc., as usual until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and until Lot went out of Sodom—and then came quickly the storm of wrath. "Even so shall it be when the Son of man is revealed."

To this fulfillment of the Passover I believe our Lord also refers when he says, "Watch ye therefore and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape those things that shall come on the earth and to stand before the Son of man." Also when he says (Rev. 3: 10), "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation which shall come on all the world," etc. The same is also evidently brought to view in Isa. 26: 20,—"Come my people, enter into thy chambers and shut thy doors about, etc., until the indignation be over past."

But I think we have a still more specific view of its fulfillment and of the class for whose benefit it is intended in Rev. 7: 1–4 and onward, where four angels are seen standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth to prevent their hurting the earth and sea, etc., until the servants of God, viz: one hundred and forty-four thousand of all the tribes of Israel, are sealed in their foreheads. That this sealing denotes their change to immortality, I think is sufficiently manifest from the immediate connection, for John sees an innumerable multitude out of all nations, etc., stand before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes and palms in their hands; and the next we see of this company (the 144,000) they stand (chap. 14: 1), on Mount Zion with the Lamb, singing the song which no one else could learn,—and dear reader, shall you and I be there? We may if pure, and faithful a little longer.

Since then such is the typical import of the Passover, and as it is to have its fulfillment in the redemption of the little flock of those who watch and wait for his appearing—and since the time of keeping the Passover was made one of its most specific points, are we not fully warranted in the belief that the time will be as strictly observed for the fulfillmen of what remains, as in what is past? I can say for one, I frankly and firmly believe we are, but at what time it really occurs I do not know. It is evidently near some full moon during the spring months, but which I cannot tell. I suppose that Roman and Rabbin will observe it this year, about the 25th of March. But I believe there is good reason for regarding this as too early—but since "at such an hour as we think not the Son of man cometh," it were not wise for us to say that it is not correct.

But I wish, in conclusion, to add a few words in reference to the year for these things to be accomplished. We are told in Revelation 10, that in the days of the voice of the seventh angel when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished; and since it is admitted by all or nearly all expositors of recent date that the sixth trumpet, or second woe a number of years since passed and as the word declares at its close, "Behold the third woe cometh QUICKLY,"—and as they all thus far have been fulfilled in desolating wars over the Roman empire, and as the war-cry is again sounding among those nations, with a prospect, as writers tell us, of being such in extent as is unknown to history, does it not look as though the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion and of God's redeemed had come? Every one should be admonished as with a voice from heaven—"Be ye also ready!" The word tells us, "But ye brethren are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief," but in order to do this we must watch, believe, and receive the light that shines from the heavenly lamp, "Hear, O ye my beloved and be ready unto the reward of the kingdom."

I have only been able in this brief sketch to simply touch on the different points brought to view, but trusting that a "word to the wise will be sufficient," I would commend the subject with prayer for the blessing of the Lord to attend it, to the candid consideration of each who may read, and entreat all to examine it thoroughly for themselves, and that you shall find it indeed to be "meat in due season." And may the God of peace sanctify you wholly, and I pray God that your whole Spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Yours in the faith and hope of the coming kingdom, Z. WHITNEY.

For the World's Crisis.

WILL THERE BE BEASTS ON THE NEW EARTH?

To the above inquiry we most emphatically reply, Yes! We believe that beasts will be on the new earth just as much as we believe that they were on the earth when it was new. We believe they will be in Eden restored just as much as we believe they were in Eden before the fall. God put them there and said they were very good; and when he restores all things, as he says he will, to their Edenic beauty and perfection, we believe that beasts too will be included. We believe this

1. Because if animals were needed on the earth before man sinned, to add to his happiness and comfort (and we do not believe that they were placed there for any other purpose), they will also be needed on the earth when sin has been destroyed.

2. Because we do not think that God made any mistakes in the first creation that will need rectifying in the second.

3. Because several of the inspired writers in describing the glories of the new earth have been very particular to tell us that beasts shall be there; and lest we might conclude that beasts were not meant, they have taken pains to specify a number of the different species which shall live there; such as the lion, leopard, bear, wolf, cow, etc.

There are, we are aware, some who hold that the language of the Bible is highly figurative in speaking upon these points. But we cannot conscientiously endorse this view of the subject, inasmuch as it makes too sad havoc with the word of God, and opens too wide a door for errors and false theories to creep in. The very moment we discard the literal reading and meaning of plain declarations, that moment we are without chart or compass. One man's theory is as good as another's, and none are worth any thing, uninspired. Moreover, the penalty of adding to or taking from the "words of the prophecy of this book" is so great, that we dare not give any other meaning than that set forth in the Bible.

But as we are commanded to prove all things and hold fast to that which is good, we beg leave to examine both sides of the question and see if the facts will warrant us in considering beasts as figurative.

If most and all the works of God were "very good" before Adam sinned, is there any reason to suppose that there would have been any change excepting to confer upon him and his immortality, so that he could always enjoy the benefits of those beasts? And is there any reason to believe that after man became immortal that he would cease to need the benefits accruing from those beasts? I think not. If the Almighty was great enough to create and people a world with living creatures, was he not wise enough to provide for them sufficient room and subsistence in case of Adam's not transgressing?

Now let us see how the Bible speaks of the restitution. "Behold, I make all things new." Were not all things new "in the beginning"? Every thing shall be pure and good when all things are made new. Were not all things pure and good before sin entered into the world? As there was no sin nor death before the fall, there shall be no sin nor death after the restitution. As God walked and talked with Adam before the fall, so will he walk and talk with his redeemed ones on the earth restored. We do not expect to see every stone or tree that Adam had in his garden, when the earth is renewed; neither do we expect to have another term of trial with a tempter to tempt us; for "the former things (will) have passed away"; but we do expect that the curse will be removed, and the earth will bring forth her fruit without man's toil and sweat. "Behold I create a new heaven and a new earth. . . . . And the wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock, and dust shall be the serpent's meat," etc., etc.—Isa. 65: 17–25.

This is considered by some to be entirely figurative! Let us now see whether it is or not. If the "wolf and the lamb," the "lion" and "the serpent" are figurative, then is also the "new heaven" and the "new earth"! If these are figurative, then is also the new Jerusalem, the "river of life," and the "tree of life." Are these all figurative? If not, then none are, for all these are objects which we are told shall be on the new earth. Thus we see it will not do to make some of it literal and the rest figurative, for we do not know which would be right or wrong.

But again. Isa. 11: 1–9,—"And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots." This is, we admit, figurative. But is not the figure fully explained by the very words which follow? "And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, . . . and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, nor approve after the hearing of his ears: but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity the meek of the earth," etc.

To whom do the pronouns he, him, and his, refer, unless to the son of David—Jesus Christ? But let us read on and see if the rest of the account is thus explained. If it is not, then no explanation is necessary. "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed, and their young ones shall lie down together, and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play upon the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand upon the cockatrice' den. THEY shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

Do we discover any explanation of this? Why not? Because it means just what it says, and says just what it means. Dare we say these things shall not be so, when it is positively declared they shall be so?

But admitting for a moment the explanations we have seen given of this scripture to be correct: that the "wolves" and ravenous beasts "represent unredeemed men," and that the devouring lion, the destructive bear and leopard "represent the unholy kingdoms of men": that the calf and the kid, the lamb and the fatling, the "weaned," "sucking," and "little child" "represent the redeemed ones": are we to understand that the "redeemed" and unredeemed shall "lie down together," eat together, and live together, harmoniously mingling in the glories of that beautiful world? Are we to believe that the "unholy kingdoms of men" and the holy kingdom of God shall or CAN exist peacefully together? No, no. It is impossible! Let us beware lest we wrest the Scriptures to our hurt. Let us take them as they are, whether right or wrong. God is responsible for all that he has uttered through his prophets, and our duty is to believe his word as he gave it.

As regards the way in which beasts get into the kingdom of God, it is quite immaterial to us. God does not see proper to inform us upon that point, because it does not concern us. He can and will take care of them without any of our advice or assistance. We have quite enough to do to look after ourselves to see that we get there, without troubling about God's plan of furnishing us beasts. Whether he will see fit to raise the whole, a part, or none, is of little consequence to us. But we presume when he "creates all things new" they will also be made new. We do not read that they will or will not be resurrected, and from this silence we infer that the beasts of this earth will pass away with the burning elements.

But, says one, You do not pretend to say that if beasts are permitted to live on the new earth they will propagate their species; do you? We do not pretend to say that they will not, from the fact that "their young ones," the "young lion," the "calf," "kid," and "lamb," which are terms applied to the young of their respective species, are spoken of just as much as the beasts which are mature and full grown. We have no reason to conclude that they will not multiply and replenish the earth, just as much as they were commanded to do in the beginning.

The objection which has been urged by some, that if this were true the beasts being immortal would eventually overrun the whole earth, is of no weight, simply because it was of no weight before Adam fell. Still they were commanded to "be fruitful and multiply," whether Adam sinned or not. Just so with our own species. It should be borne in mind that there will be but a very small portion of the human family saved when compared with the whole; not enough to densely populate a territory as large as the States of New York and Pennsylvania. For by actual arithmetical calculation it has been ascertained that all the inhabitants of the globe since the creation down to the present time could be placed in the State of New York, giving to each individual one square yard, and still have room to spare!

How thinly populated, then, would be the earth when so few are to be saved, especially when "there shall be no more sea"! What a vast extent of earth territory will thus be added to our present world; and for what? That the earth may be peopled with living creatures and "be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

Isa. 35: 9,—"No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon; it (the ravenous beast) shall not be found there." This passage has been quoted by some to prove that beasts shall not inhabit the earth restored; but we fail to make the application, inasmuch as this passage refers directly to the "highway of holiness," and not to the earth in general. Still it does not say that no beast shall be there, but no ravenous beast shall be there! All the ravenous propensities of beasts will have been destroyed, for "they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain."

Also Ezk. 34: 25,—"And I will make a covenant of peace with them, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land; and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness and sleep in the woods." Here again it does not say that beasts shall cease out of the land, but that evil beasts shall cease out of the land. What can be plainer? Then there can be no danger of "dwelling in the wilderness" or "sleeping in the woods."

To us, the word of God is very plain upon these points, and all we have to do is to take it as it reads and believe it. Let us ever remember that He doeth all things well, even if we do not happen to comprehend all his ways. He has given us enough of his word to enable us to secure our own salvation, and that is enough. Leave the rest with God. N. L. Willard.

Voted, We accept the report of said conference relative to church discipline, as published in the Crisis, January 12th, 1864, the same having been referred by mutual agreement at the Frankfort Conference.

Voted, The next quarterly meeting of this conference be held in June next, place of meeting and day, be left with Bro. I. Damman, and Bro. C. H. Leverton, of Surry.

Voted, The Secretary continue his office one year from time of appointment.

Voted, The Secretary send the report of this to be published in the Crisis.

The following ministerial brethren were in attendance at this conference: Thomas Smith, of Bangor, N. F. Nason, of Palmyra, Israel Damman, of Corinna, N. J. Reed of Bangor, John Morril, of Newburg, Jeremiah Carr, of Albion.

We rejoice to know our conference proved a success. Several persons professed conversion, and others expressed in public their desire for salvation. Brn. Damman and Reed tarried with us during the week following the conference, holding meetings afternoon and evening, giving evidence of our Lord's soon coming to judge the world in righteousness.

J. C. WALLER'S NEW WORK.

I have just had the pleasure of reading Bro. Waller's work on the Second Coming of Christ. It is a most timely work, and will benefit every reader. The price of the work is $1.25, free of postage, a little above the price of a pound of tea or a pound of tobacco (if I may be allowed the comparison), and it will not only do you, but others a thousand times more good, besides helping the brother in proclaiming the last messages to this last generation. For in these days when the earth is girdled, as it were, with the iron of the image, it takes a man with an iron will to come out in the defense of Scriptural truth.

In a letter by the author to me, he states that the work is having a great sale, passing into the second edition within a few weeks. By its great sale it would appear that the people in their present distress are turning their attention to a better deliverance than any earthly government can give, but they are not alone. Nearly every nation is waiting for a deliverer of some sort to come. The Italians are looking for a Garibaldi to redeem them, as expressed by Kossuth: "The Resurrection and Redemption of the nations is at hand;" while the "peoples and tongues" of many lands are looking to Napoleon III., the great iron man of the age, for redemption and deliverance. Yes, the whole creation is groaning to be delivered. And what joys the christian heart is, that the glorious Deliverer, the great Redeemer, is at hand next to come.

The author in his preface states that he "believes the present age near its close; that the world's great crisis is upon us, and that the lines of the great prophetic periods terminating with the end of this, and the beginning of the millennial age, all converge to a point only a few years in the future." J. Taylor.

Archbishop Whately told a young preacher, who had bored him with a long sermon, that there were some things in his effort he had never heard before. Much flattered, the young man asked what they were. "I heard the clock strike twice," he replied.

The World's Crisis, and Second Advent Messenger.
Boston, Tuesday, March 22, 1864.

NEW VOLUME.

As this is the first number of a new volume, we hope all will send in the advance pay for it as early as possible. We are greatly rejoiced at the efforts which the friends of truth have made to increase the circulation of the Crisis. It shows that they are awake to the stirring events of these last times. We hope every reader will do all he can for the tract fund, and try to get some more new subscribers before another month passes. We never had more reason to work for the good of our fellow men than now; and it is very encouraging to find so many new ones becoming interested in the hope of the gospel. Let us lose no opportunity for getting the light before them.

CONCORD.

The first of March, we visited the church in Concord, N. H. We found some a little faint-hearted, but the Lord sent us a heavenly refreshing which cheered all the hearts of his children, filling them with new courage. We have seldom had a better time in that city. We found several new ones from other churches who had become deeply interested in the evidences of the Lord's coming, and the other great truths of the Bible. Formerly they had looked down with contempt upon what is now more dear to them than all the world beside. They feel like young converts. The Bible is more precious to them than ever before. They wonder how they could have been so blinded to things so plain. But they find many of their former church friends are forsaking them, because of the reproach that goes with the truth. This has always been so, and we must expect no improvement in these last days, when cold formality is abounding to an alarming extent, and pride is gaining ground in a fearful degree. They have found, as do all others, that there is but one way to be free in Christ, and that is to give up all for him and his word, and make no compromise with popularity. We must be willing to become of no reputation, if we would be the disciples of Jesus. This, but few will consent to do, because they do not love the truth as much as the reputation that comes from the enemies of the cross.

Whenever we find those who are willing to let their good names go for the truth's sake, as was the case with them in Concord, then we know the Lord will love to lead and bless them. Such will not go long in darkness; and as soon as they step out fully for the Lord, the blessing is so great, they care but little what people may say about them. The peace they feel is worth far more than the honors of a wicked world.

We closed our meetings with an interesting communion season, when some seventy gathered around the table. The brethren and sisters feel encouraged in Concord. May the Lord bless them abundantly.

WORKS OF THE MAN OF WONDER.

It is interesting to trace the steps of the "wonderful man" who is now at the head of the French Empire. But few are aware of what he has already accomplished, and the skill manifested in its operations. Every development shows more clearly that his movements are all in harmony with a great and well-matured system of operations which is rapidly approaching its completion. The last link in the great chain is about ready to be welded in its place.

Let us take a bird's-eye view of what Napoleon has done, is now doing, and about to do. At the close of the war with Napoleon I., in 1815, the naval and colonial power of France was apparently ruined. During the thirteen years preceding that time, England had seized or destroyed some six hundred French ships of war. Her colonies were reduced to a few fishing ports of but little value. How changed is the present condition of France. By what means has the great change been produced? The work seems like one of magic. In order to create a navy, and regain power, a great work must be done. Now her ports and resources for constructing ships of war and all their fixtures are said to "excel all other naval depots in the world." We believe all this has been done with a definite object in view.

One great purpose of Napoleon III., as he himself declares, is to avenge the defeat and imprisonment of Napoleon I., as accomplished mostly by the English nation. It is evident that the most successful means by which such a result could be gained would be by invasion,—a sudden movement upon England when she was not expecting it. But in order to bring this about, a thorough preparation would be needed. Ships of the strongest character must be built in large numbers, and a good harbor would be needed near England, and yet this must be so done as not to excite the suspicions of England if possible. To accomplish such a work, a man of far-seeing intellect, who would keep all his plans to himself, would be needed. Napoleon III. is just such a man, and it will be seen that he has not been idle, since he has had the reins of France in his hands.

On the north side of France, facing England, is the port of Cherbourg, which naturally is only an open bay, exposed to all northern winds; but this bay was just where a harbor would be needed for the invasion of England. Before this could be used as a harbor, it was necessary to have a wall across the mouth of this open bay, to keep off the winds. Such a wall has been built, nearly three miles in length, more than a mile from the head of the bay, about nine hundred feet wide at the base, rising sixty-six feet from the bed of the sea, and strong enough to bear up the heaviest fortresses upon its top. At each end of the wall is an opening through which the largest ships may pass at all tides. This wall is protected from human assaults by more than six hundred guns.

This bay, or harbor, has a rocky shore, in which immense basins or docks have been hewn with great labor. The first is nine hundred and fifty feet long, seven hundred and sixty-eight feet wide, fifty-five feet deep, and will hold fifteen ships. The second will hold a dozen. The third, completed in 1858, is larger than either of the others, and will hold eighteen or twenty of the largest ships. In addition to these there are twelve building-slips and seven docks, besides arsenals, storehouses, sail-lofts, timber-yards, rope-walks, bakeries, machine-shops, where every piece of iron-work can be made which is necessary for the construction of ships. When speaking of this harbor, one who is well posted in the facts in the case says:—

"It is no vain boast that an army of a hundred thousand men can be embarked any fine morning at Cherbourg, and that the fleet necessary for its transport can be built and armed and equipped and protected to the hour of its departure in this fortified haven."

Besides Cherbourg, France has four other ports equally efficient,—Brest, L'Orient, and Rochefort, on the west, and Toulon on the Mediterranean. There are some eighty building slips, and twenty-five docks connected with these ports, so that France could build at the same time forty ships of the line, forty frigates, while twenty-five more were being repaired.

At the present time she has between twenty and thirty thousand men employed upon naval works. What does all this mean? Has her noted Emperor no special object in view? We think events will soon tell.

At the present time, France has a steam navy second to none in Europe. Since 1852, her ships of the line have increased from two to forty, and her frigates from twenty-one to forty-six. In 1859, Napoleon ordered twenty steel-clad frigates and fifty gunboats. Lord Paget said in debate last March, that while England had only sixteen iron-clad frigates, France had thirty-one.

England has more seamen than France; but the French are more efficient as a body. In France, every man, who has any thing to do with sea-faring life, if he does no more than ply the oar on the river, is enrolled in what is called the "marine conscription," and is liable to be called into action at any time. It is said that in every period of nine years all the sailors in France serve in turn in the navy; consequently they are all practical seamen of the first class. They are trained in all the arts of naval seamanship. They never send out green hands to manage a ship. All are drilled in the most thorough manner on board great experimental fleets, in all departments of naval duty. The results of this course have been wonderful, and France now stands ready for action that will astonish her enemies when the hour arrives to strike the startling blow. No pains have been spared to make the French seamen the most effective possible. Napoleon does not intend to move till success is certain, so far as preparation can make it so. So much for the home resources.

We will now glance at the conquests and alliances which he has already made. His power is now world-wide, and is being continually strengthened. He has an ambition to be honored and obeyed in all lands,—by every nation on the globe. In order to accomplish this object, he has been extending his colonial power over other countries with great skill. It has been effected very quietly, and in such a way as to excite little or no alarm among the nations of the earth, and now they stand amazed at what he has accomplished.

France first secured Algeria on the coast of Africa, with a sea coast of six hundred miles. She has also prepared a safe harbor on the coast, which in 1850 inclosed two hundred acres; and has since arranged to add some sixteen hundred more.

The next movement of France was to take possession of the island of Otaheite, about midway of the Pacific. It is said to be the best victualing station in the South Pacific.

Passing from this to the Indian Ocean, we come to the island of St. Paul, in the same latitude as Cape Town and Melbourne, and midway between the two. This is the only place of shelter in the long route between them, and is said to have the most secure and secluded harbor, perhaps in the world.

We come next to Cochin China. In 1862 the Emperor of this country was compelled to cede to France the provinces lying at the mouth of the Cambodia and Saigon rivers. The Cambodia is the largest river in Southern Asia, and drains a tract of land containing some five hundred thousand square miles. This position is well chosen, and very important in the great commercial highway. At this place, Napoleon has erected fortifications, dock-yards, and coal-depots.

The next important point to secure was Mexico, which has been successfully accomplished. The next step is into the United States, then home to France, and make special arrangements for the invasion of England, to humble his proud neighbor and avenge the battle of Waterloo.

Such is evidently his plan, and we apprehend that success will attend every step of this man of wonder, till the time arrives for him to go to perdition. All things indicate that Napoleon is soon to make some demonstrations of vast power, which now nearly encompasses the globe. The only link wanting in his great chain, is the American, and that is being forged, and will evidently soon be united to the rest.

It should be remembered that this man of wonder is a Spiritualist, and through him the demons are operating to secure the government of our planet; hence the morals and doctrines of Spiritualism will be incorporated into that government. Let us see to it that we do not worship "the beast, neither his image," nor receive "his mark," nor "the number of his name."

TRACTS.

All about giving. God "giveth us richly all things to enjoy," and "the righteous sheweth mercy and giveth,"—and so "give, and it shall be given unto you"; hence work, "that ye may have to give to him that needeth," for "God loveth a cheerful—not a grudging—giver," it being "more blessed to give than to receive", for "he that giveth to the poor shall not lack," but "he that hath pity upon the poor lendeth to the Lord, and that which he hath given will he (the Lord) pay him again." Question: Do you doubt if God will pay all his dues? The "liberal deviseth liberal things," and "the liberal soul shall be made fat" by Him "who giveth to all men liberally."

The early christians "in their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality," and got praise from Paul, who declared they went "beyond their power" in donations. What they gave was "a matter of bounty and not of covetousness," so that the apostle says, "praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift." Another question: Is n't the praying too much on the other side in these days?

The above extracts are actually found in an old book called the Bible, which christians profess to take as their guide. I copy them thinking that some christians might not have seen them before, or that they may have forgotten them.

P. S.—Well done, brethren and sisters. You are responding nobly to my appeals. Keep at it. D. T. T.

FOR THE FUND.

Bro. Grant:—As an appeal has been made to the poorer brethren who love the blessed cause, I thought it meant me; so here is my quarter. I wish I had more to send, but I only asked Father for a quarter, and I have nothing but what he sends me. But none of that is squandered on tea or tobacco. I think he never sends us any thing that he wants us to consume on our lusts; but he has promised to withhold no good thing from us, if we will walk uprightly. And so, brethren and sisters, send along your scrips. Don't be afraid to trust the Lord, who says, "Give, and it shall be given to you." His word never fails, when we do our part.

I know there are none of us so poor but we can give the little asked of us. Sisters, cannot some of us get along with one breadth less in the skirt of that new dress? What matter if it does look a little less like the worldling, or the proud, lofty church member? Remember, God is to have a peculiar people when he comes. And do you thing it right to put eleven or twelve yards of cloth into a dress, when nine or ten will do as well? Send in the price of the needless yards, all of you, and I think the Tract Fund will grow a little faster. Perhaps some of us can spare a yard of ribbon from our bonnets. Can't you?

Come, sisters, let us see what we can do in the way of curtailing needless expenses, for the sake of the Lord's cause, remembering that He looks at all our motives and actions; and if we really wish to help in the Tract Fund enterprise, He will open a way. Pray for me, that I may be an overcomer, and at last enter into the kingdom with you. Your sister, hoping to have deliverance when Christ comes to make up his jewels.

Levant, Me. Lizzie Batchelder.

Mr. Grant,—Dear friend:—Being fully persuaded of the profound truths taught in the excellent tracts and publications written and published by you and your fellow laborers, and knowing that you cannot carry on this great and important work without some assistance from those you benefit by your labor, I feel it my duty to send you a little in the charitable distribution of your valuable productions among those who have not the means to purchase them. I therefore forward you the enclosed two dollars, to be appropriated to the gratuitous distribution of tracts, or as you may deem most advantageous to the cause. Please remember the writer at the throne of grace to the Father of mercies, that he may overcome by the blood of the Lamb, and meet you among the redeemed in Christ Jesus. Amen. A Friend.

Dickeyville, Wis.

Bro. Grant:—While reading the Crisis just now, I met with these words, "Come, sit down this evening, and write us a note, and send the offering." Every man according as he purposeth in his heart." One sister writes that she has drank no tea for ten years past, and will give fifty cents. I have drank no tea for twenty-three years past, which is more than twice the number of years, and of course I ought to be able to send twice the amount of money. Enclosed, therefore, you will find one dollar for the Tract Fund, which please accept from A reader of the Crisis.

West Winsted, Ct.

Bro. Grant:—Believing that time is short, I want to do what I can for the truth. Two years ago God for Christ's sake forgave my sins, for which I thank his holy name. I decided to turn from idols and serve him. Not seeing how I could use tobacco to the glory of the Lord, I resolved to give it up, and use what it formerly cost to the advancement of the cause of Christ. So find enclosed $1.00 for the $2000 Tract Fund. Yours in the hope of the soon coming of the Just One.

Chas. T. Beardsley.

Woodstock, N. B.

Bro. Grant:—I have felt for a long time that I wanted to do something for the Tract cause, but thought I would wait until I had more to send. But now I will send one dollar, which is the widow's mite. I have children who read the Crisis, but perhaps never look at the call for funds, and have forgotten that the Lord loveth a cheerful giver; and I know an aged Sister, who reads the Crisis free, and is not able to work; so this will pay for four of us. Mrs. E. Collins.

West Troy, N. Y.

Bro. Grant:—Prompted by our good Bro. Taylor's call for "widow's mites" in behalf of the Tract Fund, and by your own suggestion to write "this evening," I comply at once and send you, as I have been for some time desirous to do, my little offering. Enclosed please find fifty cents, to be appropriated in the manner specified. I feel interested in this cause, and am glad to see it prosper.

West Meriden, Ct. Almira Morgan.

Bro. Grant:—On opening my welcome weekly visitor, The World's Crisis, I saw a word from Bro. Taylor on the Tract Fund. I feel to thank God that I have a heart to help in this cause, and have concluded to send my portion, and enclose enough for some others that may be poorer than I am. Yours trying to be good, R. Oliver.

Reedsburgh, Wis.

Bro. Grant:—Seeing a call in the Crisis for the poor subscribers of the paper to send in their mite for the Tract Fund, I will respond to the call and send my mite, trusting in God that I shall be none the poorer for so doing. Yours in the blessed hope of eternal life, Arthur Hunt.

Woodstock.

Bro. Grant:—I have just been reading in the Crisis the invitation to every subscriber to send twenty-five cents to the Tract Fund. I send you one dollar, 25c for myself, and the rest for those who are poorer than I am. Yours in love of the truth,

Ashland, O. S. Andrews.

OUR VOLUNTEER AGENTS.

Report of their Doings.

The Crisis has reason to rejoice in the number of its friends, and in the zeal and success with which they labor for it. Is there another paper in the world which has a larger, or even so large a list of Volunteer Agents laboring so unremittingly, so unselfishly, and with such praiseworthy motives, to increase its circulation and influence? And what is it moves them to this important work? Love for the truth; desire for its wide-spread diffusion; especially the great and glorious truths of the Lord's soon coming and kingdom, and life and immortality only through Christ—the Great Life-giver. This is the motive,—and the preparation of a people to meet him with joy when he comes. Who would not labor in such a cause, and for such a Master? The harvest is ripening, and the laborers few. Hark! He calls for more volunteers. Ho! for volunteers! Who'll enlist?

To stir up others to emulation in this good work, we give below a number of reports of labor from Volunteers already in the field,—as many as we can find room for,—to show to all what some ARE doing, and what others MAY do. Read, them, brethren, and go thou and do likewise.

From Bro. A. Loomis, Champlain, N. Y.

"I have been out hunting for new subscribers for The World's Crisis—the best religious paper in the world, and have got one. Think I shall be able to get more in a few days."

"One." Well, Bro. L. If all of our present subscribers would do that, our subscription list would soon be doubled. Why can't they? It seems possible. Over sixty did it last month; and why may not every one of the six thousand get at least one subscriber in the year? Try, brethren, try!

From Bro Geo. A. Streeter, Athol, Mass.

"Enclosed find one dollar for two new subscribers. . . . Thank God for the prosperity of the Crisis. May all its managers be endued with the spirit of the Master, that it may still be the medium of light and truth."

Amen, Bro. S.; and may all its friends double their efforts to increase its circulation and influence, and thus aid in bringing the light of truth and the joys of salvation to thousands, before He comes.

From M. A. C., Vermont.

"I send you a dollar for a new subscriber—a Methodist lady of New Haven. Having read a few copies of the Crisis, she has become interested in the great truths which it holds forth."

We rejoice that our Methodist sister is beginning to see the truth. But there are thousands still in all the churches who, like her, need only to see the truth, to believe it and confess it. How many such are within reach of your influence, my brother, my sister? And what will you do to bring the light before them? Converse with them. Lend them the Crisis. Give them tracts. Pray for them. Do as the sister did, who writes as follows from New York, telling how she obtained a subscriber, and the result of it.

"I met him in the street, and asked him if he would read some of our tracts. He said he would, and I sent him some, with a copy of The World's Crisis. He had no faith in them at first; but when he read them, and compared them with the Bible, he was convinced; subscribed for the paper; embraced and confessed the truth; and is now, as he says, 'a whole Adventist.'"

From Bro. Thos. Smith, Bangor, Me.

"I herewith send you two more new subscribers for The World's Crisis, with pay for six months in advance. . . . This makes four I have sent since January 1st. Hoping the Crisis will have a wide and beneficial circulation, I am very truly and faithfully yours, in hope of future and eternal life."

"Thank you, Bro. Smith. Your efforts for the Crisis are always valuable, and always appreciated. Soon you will rest from your labors, and your reward will follow you.

From Bro. J. Pine, Ionia, Ill.

"I have been out among my neighbors to see what I could do in the way of getting subscribers, and I have got three, with advance pay for six months, which you will find enclosed."

Done well, Bro. Pine. How many more three's can you get before the year is out? See!

From Bro. D. S. Clark, Amboy, Ill.

"I send you this morning six new subscribers, for three months each. . . . Send me a few copies of The Young Pilgrim. I want to see if I can get subscribers for that, too."

We have sent them, and may the Lord bless your efforts for the good of both the old and the young.

More next week. W. B. H.

"STRIKE! BUT HEAR ME."

The following article was published in the Rockport Weekly Advertiser, of Jan. 9th, 1864. It is from the pen of Rev. J. D. Brown, who resides there, and sometimes preaches in the "Village Hall."—Ed.

STRIKE! BUT HEAR ME.

It is painful to a person who sincerely seeks to benefit his fellow-men, to be misunderstood and maligned; but so generally has this been the portion of those who have been called to the work of teaching new truths or calling men back to those old but long obscured, that common consent, it is said,—as the proverb of thinkers and reformers,—"When you are the anvil bear patiently; when the hammer, strike hard;" and both the cause that is too weak and the worker that is too sensitive. to bear the heaviest sledge-strokes of men, are worth pitying.

But the most painful opposition, is that which will "strike," but will not "hear," nor suffer others to hear, if it can prevent them. It "has taken away the key of knowledge; it entered not in itself, and them that were entering in it forbade" (marg. Luke 9: 52.) This course is too often taken by those who claim to be disciples of Christ who has himself condemned it. It seeks to injure others by so accusing them as to excite prejudice, that some people may be kept from hearing that which if they hear, they will be convinced is true. This is the clearest way to answer views that are otherwise unanswerable.

"The doctrine preached in the Village Hall is very dangerous." To this import I am told a clergyman of Rockport warned his congregation, on a recent Lord's day; and by this word, he doubtless effectually closed all ears from hearing what is preached in that locality except a few, who have sufficient confidence in their own ability to judge what is true, to brave the dangers of the place, and hear before they "strike," and so "strike home," if they strike at all; thus doing as they would have others do to them, while they obey that Scripture which saith, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." (1 Thess. 5: 21.)

But what dangerous "doctrine" is this, that is preached in Village Hall? What sect worship there? Why, it seems the one "everywhere spoken against," and would to God that those who hear these reports, would act as honorably as did the Roman Jews by its predecessors in tribulation, and in the "kingdom and patience of Jesus" when they came to Paul and said, "We desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest, for as concerning this sect we know that everywhere it is spoken against." (Acts 28: 22.) That is the way true nobility treats that which is spoken against; then, if report is found true, reject the doctrine.

He who preaches there, promised at his ordination that he would preach the "word of truth, the gospel of our salvation;" as at his conversion he promised also to obey it; and he trusts that by the grace of God, he has not yet, and will not soon become like him of whom Pollock wrote:

"Hear what he was:—He swore in the sight of God,
And man, to preach his master, Jesus Christ;
Yet preached himself."

Course of Time, Book 8.

Is it "dangerous" to believe and preach the "word of truth?" "to testify the gospel of the grace of God?"

Is it "dangerous" to preach that "there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time. . . . . I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting. In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel with shame-facedness and sobriety; not with plaited hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array: but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works"? (Tim. 2: 5–10.) That, "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God"? (Rom. 3: 23.) That "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him?" (Rom. 5: 8, 9.)

Is it "dangerous" "to declare at this time his righteousness; that he might be just and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus?" (Rom. 3: 26.) That "there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we may be saved?" (Acts 4: 12.)

And is it "dangerous" to preach, that, "Except ye be converted and become like little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven?" (Matt. 18: 3.)

Is it "dangerous" to preach, that, by one man sin entered the world, and death by sin?" (Rom. 5: 12.) That, "man is born of a woman, is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower and is cut down, he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not?" (Job 14: 1, 3.) Also, "are not my days few?" . . . . before I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death; a land of darkness, as darkness itself; of the shadow of death without any order, and where the light is as darkness?" (Job. 10; 20, 22.) That "man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man wasteth away, (Heb.) and where is he?" "As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep?" (Job 14: 10, 12.) That "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." (Ps. 115: 17.) For "in death there is no remembrance of thee, (God) in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" (Ps. 6: 5.)

Is it "dangerous" that I have "taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead?" (Acts 4: 2.)

Is it "dangerous" to warn sinners, that, "God will not contend forever, neither will he be always wroth, for the Spirit shall fail before him, and the souls that he has made?" (Is. 42: 16.) That "the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away. For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be?" (Ps. 37: 10, 20.) That "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction, from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come," etc.?" (2 Thess. 1: 7, 10.) That "his fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire?" (Matt. 2: 12.)

Is it "dangerous" to declare that now God "commandeth all men every where to repent; because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead?" (Acts 27: 30, 31.) That "he will judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom?" (2 Tim. 4: 1.)

Is it "dangerous to preach for the encouragement of suffering saints, whose names are cast out as evil, that "all things are yours; . . . . and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's?" (1 Cor. 3: 21, 23.) That, "if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." (Gal. 3: 29.) "For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to its seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith?" (Rom. 4: 13.) Or, "blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth?" (Matt. 5: 5.) Is it "dangerous" to relate concerning Abraham and his dead children; "these all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect?" (Heb. 9: 13, 39, 40.)

Is it "dangerous to tell them in their deep trials, "ye shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just?" (Luke 14: 14.) That "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory?" (Col. 3: 4.) That, "when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is?" (1 John 3: 2.) That, "to you who are troubled, rest with us; when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels?" (2 Thess. 1: 7.)

Is it "dangerous" to preach to them that "now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, and the day is at hand?" (Rom. 13: 11, 12.) That "the end of all things is at hand?" (1 Peter 4: 7.) That "he which testifieth these things saith, surely, I come quickly, amen?" (Rev 22: 20.) And is it also "dangerous" to answer the announcement, in the words following, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus?"

Is it "dangerous" to preach, "For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revelings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries; wherein they think it strange that yet run not with them, to the same excess of riot; speaking evil of you. Who shall give account unto him that is ready to judge the quick and dead?". 1 Peter 4: 3–5.)

If it is "dangerous" to preach and believe these things, then it is dangerous and heretical to preach the word of God; and we who meet in Village Hall, "Confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship we the God of our fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets; and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust. And herein do we exercise ourselves, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men." (Acts 24: 14–15.)

But to whom is such doctrine "dangerous?" Certainly not to purse-proud hypocrites, who consider that a man is "profited much, if he gain the whole world," even though he "lose his own soul;" who "suppose that gain is godliness;" and so "devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers." They will continue to be members of churches, who do not "withdraw themselves from such." They will not swallow such dangerous doctrine, because if they did, "the hope of their gains would be gone."

Certainly not to those simpering, fastidious persons, whose "finer sensibilities" would be shocked, at hearing a sentence not grammatically connected, or classically finished; who have plenty of tears for the afflicted hero or heroine of the last novel, but none for Christ; who would almost faint to hear the word "perdition," that horrid, unfashionable word. They will not adopt the "dangerous" views and give up the "lovely" preaching they are used to hearing; they are safe, they think less of truth, and more of "eloquence," so-called:

"Vain eloquence that wanted sacred truth."

Certainly not those honest seekers after God, who wish to know and do his will: for of them Jesus has said, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." So if they come to "hear" they are safe, for they can "hold fast the good."

But is such doctrine "dangerous" to those who have received it? Does it make them worse men and women? Do they lie,—and cheat,—and steal,—hate and misuse their neighbors? Or will they not compare favorably, in every moral and spiritual respect, with "professors of religion" around them? Who says no?

But some one will say you have not written all you believe.

Certainly I have not, for you will see by my "confession" above that I believe all the Bible, and that is too large to publish in an article in the Brockport Republic,* as the few who attempt to study it now will know.

But what do you believe beside?

Much. Come and "hear" and then "strike" me if you wish. Seats are free.

Yours respectfully, J. D. Brown.

* The above was written for insertion in the Republic; this explains the allusion, while it reveals an unexpected mode in which my creed is too long to publish in the Brockport Republic. J. D. B.

some, that if this were true the beasts being immortal would eventually overrun the whole earth, is of no weight, simply because it was of no weight before Adam fell. Still they were commanded to "be fruitful and multiply," whether Adam sinned or not. Just so with our own species. It should be borne in mind that there will be but a very small portion of the human family saved when compared with the whole; not enough to densely populate a territory as large as the States of New York and Pennsylvania. For by actual arithmetical calculation it has been ascertained "that all the inhabitants of the globe since the creation down to the present time could be placed in the State of New York, giving to each individual one square yard, and still have room to spare!

How thinly populated, then, would be the earth when so few are to be saved, especially when "there shall be no more sea"! What a vast extent of earth territory will thus be added to our present world; and for what? That the earth may be peopled with living creatures and "be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

Isa. 35: 9,—"No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon; it (the ravenous beast) shall not be found there." This passage has been quoted by some to prove that beasts shall not inhabit the earth restored; but we fail to make the application, inasmuch as this passage refers directly to the "highway of holiness," and not to the earth in general. Still it does not say that no beast shall be there, but no ravenous beast shall be there! All the ravenous propensities of beasts will have been destroyed, for "they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain."

Also Ezk. 34: 25,—"And I will make a covenant of peace with them, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land; and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness and sleep in the woods." Here again it does not say that beasts shall cease out of the land, but that evil beasts shall cease out of the land. What can be plainer? Then there can be no danger of "dwelling in the wilderness" or "sleeping in the woods."

To us, the word of God is very plain upon these points, and all we have to do is to take it as it reads and believe it. Let us ever remember that He doeth all things well, even if we do not happen to comprehend all his ways. He has given us enough of his word to enable us to secure our own salvation, and that is enough. Leave the rest with God. N. L. WILLARD.

The following ministerial brethren were in attendance at this conference: Thomas Smith, of Bangor, N. F. Nason, of Palmyra, Israel Damman, of Corinna, N. J. Reed of Bangor, John Morril, of Newburg, Jeremiah Carr, of Albion.

We rejoice to know our conference proved a success. Several persons professed conversion, and others expressed in public their desire for salvation. Brn. Damman and Reed tarried with us during the week following the conference, holding meetings afternoon and evening, giving evidence of our Lord's soon coming to judge the world in righteousness.

MOSES YOUNG, Secretary.

For the World's Crisis.

J. C. WALLER'S NEW WORK.

I have just had the pleasure of reading Bro. Waller's work on the Second Coming of Christ. It is a most timely work, and will benefit every reader. The price of the work is $1.25, free of postage, a little above the price of a pound of tea or a pound of tobacco (if I may be allowed the comparison), and it will not only do you, but others a thousand times more good, besides helping the brother in proclaiming the last messages to this last generation. For in these days when the earth is girdled, as it were, with the iron of the image, it takes a man with an iron will to come out in the defense of Scriptural truth.

In a letter by the author to me, he states that the work is having a great sale, passing into the second edition within a few weeks. By its great sale it would appear that the people in their present distress are turning their attention to a better deliverance than any earthly government can give, but they are not alone. Nearly every nation is waiting for a deliverer of some sort to come. The Italians are looking for a Garibaldi to redeem them, as expressed by Kossuth: "The Resurrection and Redemption of the nations is at hand;" while the "peoples and tongues" of many lands are looking to Napoleon III., the great iron man of the age, for redemption and deliverance. Yes, the whole creation is groaning to be delivered. And what joys the christian heart is, that the glorious Deliverer, the great Redeemer, is at hand next to come.

The author in his preface states that he "believes the present age near its close; that the world's great crisis is upon us, and that the lines of the great prophetic periods terminating with the end of this, and the beginning of the millennial age, all converge to a point only a few years in the future."

J. TAYLOR.

Archbishop Whately told a young preacher, who had bored him with a long sermon, that there were some things in his effort he had never heard before. Much flattered, the young man asked what they were. "I heard the clock strike twice," he replied.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Tuesday, March 22, 1864.

NEW VOLUME.

As this is the first number of a new volume, we hope all will send in the advance pay for it as early as possible. We are greatly rejoiced at the efforts which the friends of truth have made to increase the circulation of the Crisis. It shows that they are awake to the stirring events of these last times. We hope every reader will do all he can for the tract fund, and try to get some more new subscribers before another month passes. We never had more reason to work for the good of our fellow men than now; and it is very encouraging to find so many new ones becoming interested in the hope of the gospel. Let us lose no opportunity for getting the light before them.

CONCORD.

The first of March, we visited the church in Concord, N. H. We found some a little faint-hearted, but the Lord sent us a heavenly refreshing which cheered all the hearts of his children, filling them with new courage. We have seldom had a better time in that city. We found several new ones from other churches who had become deeply interested in the evidences of the Lord's coming, and the other great truths of the Bible. Formerly they had looked down with contempt upon what is now more dear to them than all the world beside. They feel like young converts. The Bible is more precious to them than ever before. They wonder how they could have been so blinded to things so plain. But they find many of their former church friends are forsaking them, because of the reproach that goes with the truth. This has always been so; and we must expect no improvement in these last days, when cold formality is abounding to an alarming extent, and pride is gaining ground in a fearful degree. They have found, as do all others, that there is but one way to be free in Christ, and that is to give up all for him and his word, and make no compromise with populaaity. We must be willing to become of no reputation, if we would be the disciples of Jesus. This, but few will consent to do, because they do not love the truth as much as the reputatiom that comes from the enemies of the cross.

Whenever we find those who are willing to let their good names go for the truth's sake, as was the case with them in Concord, then we know the Lord will love to lead and bless them. Such will not go long in darkness; and as soon as they step out fully for the Lord, the blessing is so great, they care but little what people may say about them. The peace they feel is worth far more than the honors of a wicked world.

We closed our meetings with an interesting communion season, when some seventy gathered around the table. The brethren and sisters feel encouraged in Concord. May the Lord bless them abundantly.

WORKS OF THE MAN OF WONDER.

It is interesting to trace the steps of the "wonderful man" who is now at the head of the French Empire. But few are aware of what he has already accomplished, and the skill manifested in its operations. Every development shows more clearly that his movements are all in harmony with a great and well-matured system of operations which is rapidly approaching its completion. The last link in the great chain is about ready to be welded in its place.

Let us take a bird's-eye view of what Napoleon has done, is now doing, and about to do. At the close of the war with Napoleon I., in 1815, the naval and colonial power of France was apparently ruined. During the thirteen years preceding that time, England had seized or destroyed some six hundred French ships of war. Her colonies were reduced to a few fishing ports of but little value. How changed is the present condition of France. By what means has the great change been produced? The work seems like one of magic. In order to create a navy, and regain power, a great work must be done. Now her ports and resources for constructing ships of war and all their fixtures are said to "excel all other naval depots in the world." We believe all this has been done with a definite object in view.

One great purpose of Napoleon III., as he himself declares, is to avenge the defeat and imprisonment of Napoleon I., as accomplished mostly by the English nation. It is evident that the most successful means by which such a result could be gained would be by invasion,—a sudden movement upon England when she was not expecting it. But in order to bring this about, a thorough preparation would be needed. Ships of the strongest character must be built in large numbers, and a good harbor would be needed near England, and yet this must be so done as not to excite the suspicions of England if possible. To accomplish such a work, a man of far-seeing intellect, who would keep all his plans to himself, would be needed. Napoleon III. is just such a man, and it will be seen that he has not been idle, since he has had the reins of France in his hands.

On the north side of France, facing England, is the port of Cherbourg, which naturally is only an open bay, exposed to all northern winds; but this bay was just where a harbor would be needed for the invasion of England. Before this could be used as a harbor, it was necessary to have a wall across the mouth of this open bay, to keep off the winds. Such a wall has been built, nearly three miles in length, more than a mile from the head of the bay, about nine hundred feet wide at the base, rising sixty-six feet from the bed of the sea, and strong enough to bear up the heaviest fortresses upon its top. At each end of the wall is an opening through which the largest ships may pass at all tides. This wall is protected from human assaults by more than six hundred guns.

This bay, or harbor, has a rocky shore, in which immense basins or docks have been hewn with great labor. The first is nine hundred and fifty feet long, seven hundred and sixty-eight feet wide, fifty-five feet deep, and will hold fifteen ships. The second will hold a dozen. The third, completed in 1858, is larger than either of the others, and will hold eighteen or twenty of the largest ships. In addition to these there are twelve building-slips and seven docks, besides arsenals, storehouses, sail-lofts, timber-yards, rope-walks, bakeries, machine-shops, where every piece of iron-work can be made which is necessary for the construction of ships. When speaking of this harbor, one who is well posted in the facts in the case says:—

"It is no vain boast that an army of a hundred thousand men can be embarked any fine morning at Cherbourg, and that the fleet necessary for its transport can be built and armed and equipped and protected to the hour of its departure in this fortified haven."

Besides Cherbourg, France has four other ports equally efficient,—Brest, L'Orient, and Rochefort, on the west, and Toulon on the Mediterranean. There are some eighty building slips, and twenty-five docks connected with these ports, so that France could build at the same time forty ships of the line, forty frigates, while twenty-five more were being repaired.

At the present time she has between twenty and thirty thousand men employed upon naval works. What does all this mean? Has her noted Emperor no special object in view? We think events will soon tell.

At the present time, France has a steam navy second to none in Europe. Since 1852, her ships of the line have increased from two to forty, and her frigates from twenty-one to forty-six. In 1859, Napoleon ordered twenty steel-clad frigates and fifty gunboats. Lord Paget said in debate last March, that while England had only sixteen iron-clad frigates, France had thirty-one.

England has more seamen than France; but the French are more efficient as a body. In France, every man, who has any thing to do with sea-faring life, if he does no more than ply the oar on the river, is enrolled in what is called the "marine conscription," and is liable to be called into action at any time. It is said that in every period of nine years all the sailors in France serve in turn in the navy; consequently they are all practical seamen of the first class. They are trained in all the arts of naval seamanship. They never send out green hands to manage a ship. All are drilled in the most thorough manner on board great experimental fleets, in all departments of naval duty. The results of this course have been wonderful, and France now stands ready for action that will astonish her enemies when the hour arrives to strike the startling blow. No pains have been spared to make the French seamen the most effective possible. Napoleon does not intend to move till success is certain, so far as preparation can make it so. So much for the home resources.

We will now glance at the conquests and alliances which he has already made. His power is now world-wide, and is being continually strengthened. He has an ambition to be honored and obeyed in all lands,—by every nation on the globe. In order to accomplish this object, he has been extending his colonial power over other countries with great skill. It has been effected very quietly, and in such a way as to excite little or no alarm among the nations of the earth; and now they stand amazed at what he has accomplished.

France first secured Algeria on the coast of Africa, with a sea coast of six hundred miles. She has also prepared a safe harbor on the coast, which in 1850 inclosed two hundred acres; and has since arranged to add some sixteen hundred more.

The next movement of France was to take possession of the island of Otaheite, about midway of the Pacific. It is said to be the best victualing station in the South Pacific.

Passing from this to the Indian Ocean, we come to the island of St. Paul, in the same latitude as Cape Town and Melbourne, and midway between the two. This is the only place of shelter in the long route between them, and is said to have the most secure and secluded harbor, perhaps in the world.

We come next to Cochin China. In 1862 the Emperor of this country was compelled to cede to France the provinces lying at the mouth of the Cambodia and Saigon rivers. The Cambodia is the largest river in Southern Asia, and drains a tract of land containing some five hundred thousand square miles. This position is well chosen, and very important in the great commercial highway. At this place, Napoleon has erected fortifications, dock-yards, and coal-depots.

The next important point to secure was Mexico, which has been successfully accomplished. The next step is into the United States, then home to France, and make special arrangements for the invasion of England, to humble his proud neighbor and avenge the battle of Waterloo.

Such is evidently his plan, and we apprehend that success will attend every step of this man of wonder, till the time arrives for him to go to perdition. All things indicate that Napoleon is soon to make some demonstrations of vast power, which now nearly encompasses the globe. The only link wanting in his great chain, is the American, and that is being forged, and will evidently soon be united to the rest.

It should be remembered that this man of wonder is a Spiritualist, and through him the demons are operating to secure the government of our planet; hence the morals and doctrines of Spiritualism will be incorporated into that government. Let us see to it that we do not worship "the beast, neither his image," nor receive "his mark," nor "the number of his name."

TRACTS.

ALL ABOUT GIVING. God "giveth us richly all things to enjoy," and "the righteous sheweth mercy and giveth,"—and so "give, and it shall be given unto you"; hence work, "that ye may have to give to him that needeth," for "God loveth a cheerful—not a grudging—giver," it being "more blessed to give than to receive"; for "he that giveth to the poor shall not lack," but "he that hath pity upon the poor lendeth to the Lord, and that which he hath given will he (the Lord) pay him again." Question: Do you doubt if God will pay all his dues? The "liberal deviseth liberal things," and "the liberal soul shall be made fat" by Him "who giveth to all men liberally."

The early christians "in their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality," and got praise from Paul, who declared they went "beyond their power" in donations. What they gave was "a matter of bounty and not of covetousness," so that the apostle says, "praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift." Another question: Is n't the praying too much on the other side in these days?

The above extracts are actually found in an old book called the Bible, which christians profess to take as their guide. I copy them thinking that some christians might not have seen them before, or that they may have forgotten them.

P. S.—Well done, brethren and sisters. You are responding nobly to my appeals. Keep at it. D. T. T.

FOR THE FUND.

BRO. GRANT:—As an appeal has been made to the poorer brethren who love the blessed cause, I thought it meant me; so here is my quarter. I wish I had more to send, but I only asked Father for a quarter, and I have nothing but what he sends me. But none of that is squandered on tea or tobacco. I think he never sends us any thing that he wants us to consume on our lusts; but he has promised to withhold no good thing from us, if we will walk uprightly. And so, brethren and sisters, send along your scrips. Don't be afraid to trust the Lord, who says, "Give, and it shall be given to you." His word never fails, when we do our part.

I know there are none of us so poor but we can give the little asked of us. Sisters, cannot some of us get along with one breadth less in the skirt of that new dress? What matter if it does look a little less like the worldling, or the proud, lofty church member? Remember, God is to have a peculiar people when he comes. And do you thing it right to put eleven or twelve yards of cloth into a dress, when nine or ten will do as well? Send in the price of the needless yards, all of you, and I think the Tract Fund will grow a little faster. Perhaps some of us can spare a yard of ribbon from our bonnets. Can't YOU?

Come, sisters, let us see what we can do in the way of curtailing needless expenses, for the sake of the Lord's cause, remembering that He looks at all our motives and actions; and if we really wish to help in the Tract Fund enterprise, He will open a way. Pray for me, that I may be an overcomer, and at last enter into the kingdom with you. Your sister, hoping to have deliverance when Christ comes to make up his jewels.

Levant, Me. LIZZIE BATCHELDER.

MR. GRANT,—Dear friend:—Being fully persuaded of the profound truths taught in the excellent tracts and publications written and published by you and your fellow laborers, and knowing that you cannot carry on this great and important work without some assistance from those you benefit by your labor, I feel it my duty to send you a little in the charitable distribution of your valuable productions among those who have not the means to purchase them. I therefore forward you the enclosed two dollars, to be appropriated to the gratuitous distribution of tracts, or as you may deem most advantageous to the cause. Please remember the writer at the throne of grace to the Father of mercies, that he may overcome by the blood of the Lamb, and meet you among the redeemed in Christ Jesus. Amen. A FRIEND.

Dickeyville, Wis.

BRO. GRANT:—While reading the Crisis just now, I met with these words, "Come, sit down this evening and write us a note, and send the offering." Every man according as he purposeth in his heart." One sister writes that she has drank no tea for ten years past, and will give fifty cents. I have drank no tea for twenty-three years past, which is more than twice the number of years, and of course I ought to be able to send twice the amount of money. Enclosed, therefore, you will find one dollar for the Tract Fund, which please accept from A READER OF THE CRISIS.

West Winsted, Ct.

BRO. GRANT:—Believing that time is short, I want to do what I can for the truth. Two years ago God for Christ's sake forgave my sins, for which I thank his holy name. I decided to turn from idols and serve him. Not seeing how I could use tobacco to the glory of the Lord, I resolved to give it up, and use what it formerly cost to the advancement of the cause of Christ. So find enclosed $1.00 for the $2000 Tract Fund. Yours in the hope of the soon coming of the Just One.

CHAS. T. BEARDSLEY.

Woodstock, N. B.

BRO. GRANT:—I have felt for a long time that I wanted to do something for the Tract cause, but thought I would wait until I had more to send. But now I will send one dollar, which is the widow's mite. I have children who read the Crisis, but perhaps never look at the call for funds, and have forgotten that the Lord loveth a cheerful giver; and I know an aged Sister, who reads the Crisis free, and is not able to work; so this will pay for four of us. MRS. E. COLLINS.

West Troy, N. Y.

BRO. GRANT:—Prompted by our good Bro. Taylor's call for "widow's mites" in behalf of the Tract Fund, and by your own suggestion to write "this evening," I comply at once and send you, as I have been for some time desirous to do, my little offering. Enclosed please find fifty cents, to be appropriated in the manner specified. I feel interested in this cause, and am glad to see it prosper.

West Meriden, Ct. ALMIRA MORGAN.

BRO. GRANT:—On opening my welcome weekly visitor, The World's Crisis, I saw a word from Bro. Taylor on the Tract Fund. I feel to thank God that I have a heart to help in this cause, and have concluded to send my portion, and enclose enough for some others that may be poorer than I am. Yours trying to be good, R. OLIVER.

Reedsburgh, Wis.

BRO. GRANT:—Seeing a call in the Crisis for the poor subscribers of the paper to send in their mite for the Tract Fund, I will respond to the call and send my mite, trusting in God that I shall be none the poorer for so doing. Yours in the blessed hope of eternal life, ARTHUR HUNT.

Woodstock.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just been reading in the Crisis the invitation to every subscriber to send twenty-five cents to the Tract Fund. I send you one dollar, 25c for myself, and the rest for those who are poorer than I am. Yours in love of the truth,

Ashland, O. S. ANDREWS.

OUR VOLUNTEER AGENTS.

Report of their Doings.

The Crisis has reason to rejoice in the number of its friends, and in the zeal and success with which they labor for it. Is there another paper in the world which has a larger, or even so large a list of Volunteer Agents laboring so unremittingly, so unselfishly, and with such praiseworthy motives, to increase its circulation and influence? And what is it moves them to this important work? Love for the truth; desire for its wide-spread diffusion; especially the great and glorious truths of the Lord's soon coming and kingdom, and life and immortality only through Christ—the Great Life-giver. This is the motive,—and the preparation of a people to meet him with joy when he comes. Who would not labor in such a cause, and for such a Master? The harvest is ripening, and the laborers few. Hark! He calls for more volunteers. Ho! for volunteers! Who'll enlist?

To stir up others to emulation in this good work, we give below a number of reports of labor from Volunteers already in the field,—as many as we can find room for,—to show to all what some ARE doing, and what others MAY do. Read, them, brethren, and go thou and do likewise.

FROM BRO. A. LOOMIS, Champlain, N. Y.

"I have been out hunting for new subscribers for The World's Crisis—the best religious paper in the world, and have got one. Think I shall be able to get more in a few days."

"One." Well, Bro. L. If all of our present subscribers would do that, our subscription list would soon be doubled. Why can't they? It seems possible. Over sixty did it last month; and why may not every one of the six thousand get at least one subscriber in the year? TRY, brethren, TRY!

FROM BRO. GEO. A. STREETER, Athol, Mass.

"Enclosed find one dollar for two new subscribers. . . . Thank God for the prosperity of the Crisis. May all its managers be endued with the spirit of the Master, that it may still be the medium of light and truth."

Amen, Bro. S.; and may all its friends double their efforts to increase its circulation and influence, and thus aid in bringing the light of truth and the joys of salvation to thousands, before He comes.

FROM M. A. C., Vermont.

"I send you a dollar for a new subscriber—a Methodist lady of New Haven. Having read a few copies of the Crisis, she has become interested in the great truths which it holds forth."

We rejoice that our Methodist sister is beginning to see the truth. But there are thousands still in all the churches who, like her, need only to see the truth, to believe it and confess it. How many such are within reach of YOUR influence, my brother, my sister? And what will YOU do to bring the light before them? Converse with them. Lend them the Crisis. Give them tracts. Pray for them. Do as the sister did, who writes as follows from New York, telling how she obtained a subscriber, and the result of it.

"I met him in the street, and asked him if he would read some of our tracts. He said he would, and I sent him some, with a copy of The World's Crisis. He had no faith in them at first; but when he read them, and compared them with the Bible, he was convinced; subscribed for the paper; embraced and confessed the truth; and is now, as he says, 'a whole Adventist.'"

FROM BRO. THOS. SMITH, Bangor, Me.

"I herewith send you two more new subscribers for The World's Crisis, with pay for six months in advance. This makes four I have sent since January 1st. Hoping the Crisis will have a wide and beneficial circulation, I am very truly and faithfully yours, in hope of future and eternal life."

"Thank you, Bro. Smith. Your efforts for the Crisis are always valuable, and always appreciated. Soon you will rest from your labors, and your reward will follow you.

FROM BRO. J. PINE, Ionia, Ill.

"I have been out among my neighbors to see what I could do in the way of getting subscribers, and I have got three, with advance pay for six months, which you will find enclosed."

Done well, Bro. Pine. How many more three's can you get before the year is out? See!

FROM BRO. D. S. CLARK, Amboy, Ill.

"I send you this morning six new subscribers, for three months each. . . . Send me a few copies of The Young Pilgrim. I want to see if I can get subscribers for that, too."

We have sent them, and may the Lord bless your efforts for the good of both the old and the young.

More next week. W. B. H.

"STRIKE! BUT HEAR ME."

The following article was published in the Rockport Weekly Advertiser, of Jan. 9th, 1864. It is from the pen of Rev. J. D. Brown, who resides there, and sometimes preaches in the "Village Hall."—ED.

STRIKE! BUT HEAR ME.

It is painful to a person who sincerely seeks to benefit his fellow-men, to be misunderstood and maligned; but so generally has this been the portion of those who have been called to the work of teaching new truths or calling men back to those old but long obscured, that common consent, it is said,—as the proverb of thinkers and reformers,—"When you are the anvil bear patiently; when the hammer, strike hard;" and both the cause that is too weak and the worker that is too sensitive, to bear the heaviest sledge-strokes of men, are worth pitying.

But the most painful opposition, is that which will "strike," but will not "hear," nor suffer others to hear, if it can prevent them. It "has taken away the key of knowledge; it entered not in itself, and them that were entering in it forbade" (marg. Luke 9: 52.) This course is too often taken by those who claim to be disciples of Christ who has himself condemned it. It seeks to injure others by so accusing them as to excite prejudice, that some people may be kept from hearing that which if they hear, they will be convinced is true. This is the clearest way to answer views that are otherwise unanswerable.

"The doctrine preached in the Village Hall is very dangerous." To this import I am told a clergyman of Rockport warned his congregation, on a recent Lord's day; and by this word, he doubtless effectually closed all ears from hearing what is preached in that locality except a few, who have sufficient confidence in their own ability to judge what is true, to brave the dangers of the place, and hear before they "strike," and so "strike home," if they strike at all; thus doing as they would have others do to them, while they obey that Scripture which saith, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." (1 Thess. 5: 21.)

But what dangerous "doctrine" is this, that is preached in Village Hall? What sect worship there? Why, it seems the one "everywhere spoken against," and would to God that those who hear these reports, would act as honorably as did the Roman Jews by its predecessors in tribulation, and in the "kingdom and patience of Jesus" when they came to Paul and said, "We desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest, for as concerning this sect we know that everywhere it is spoken against." (Acts 28: 22.) That is the way true nobility treats that which is spoken against; then, if report is found true, reject the doctrine.

He who preaches there, promised at his ordination that he would preach the "word of truth, the gospel of our salvation;" as at his conversion he promised also to obey it; and he trusts that by the grace of God, he has not yet, and will not soon become like him of whom Pollock wrote:

> "Hear what he was:—He swore in the sight of God,
> And man, to preach his master, Jesus Christ;
> Yet preached himself."
>

Is it "dangerous" to believe and preach the "word of truth?" "to testify the gospel of the grace of God?"

Is it "dangerous" to preach that "there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time. . . . . I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting. In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel with shame-facedness and sobriety; not with plaited hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array: but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works"? (Tim. 2: 5–10.) That, "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God"? (Rom. 3: 23.) That "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him?" (Rom. 5: 8, 9.)

Is it "dangerous" "to declare at this time his righteousness; that he might be just and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus?" (Rom. 3: 26.) That "there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we may be saved?" (Acts 4: 12.)

And is it "dangerous" to preach, that, "Except ye be converted and become like little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven?" (Matt. 18: 3.)

Is it "dangerous" to preach, that, by one man sin entered the world, and death by sin?" (Rom. 5: 12.) That, "man is born of a woman, is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower and is cut down, he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not?" (Job 14: 1, 3.) Also, "are not my days few?" . . . . before I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death; a land of darkness, as darkness itself; of the shadow of death without any order, and where the light is as darkness?" (Job. 10: 20, 22.) That "man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man wasteth away, (Heb.) and where is he?" "As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep?" (Job 14: 10, 12.) That "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." (Ps. 115: 17.) For "in death there is no remembrance of thee, (God) in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" (Ps. 6: 5.)

Is it "dangerous" that I have "taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead?" (Acts 4: 2.)

Is it "dangerous" to warn sinners, that, "God will not contend forever, neither will he be always wroth, for the Spirit shall fail before him, and the souls that he has made?" (Is. 42: 16.) That "the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away. For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be?" (Ps. 37: 10, 20.) That "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come," etc.?" (2 Thess. 1: 7, 10.) That "his fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire?" (Matt. 2: 12.)

Is it "dangerous" to declare that now God "commandeth all men every where to repent; because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead?" (Acts 27: 30, 31.) That "he will judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom?" (2 Tim. 4: 1.)

Is it "dangerous to preach for the encouragement of suffering saints, whose names are cast out as evil, that "all things are yours; . . . . and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's?" (1 Cor. 3: 21, 23.) That, "if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." (Gal. 3: 29.) "For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to its seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith?" (Rom. 4: 13.) Or, "blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth?" (Matt. 5: 5.) Is it "dangerous" to relate concerning Abraham and his dead children; "these all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect?" (Heb. 9: 13, 39, 40.)

Is it "dangerous to tell them in their deep trials, "ye shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just?" (Luke 14: 14.) That "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory?" (Col. 3: 4.) That, "when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is?" (1 John 3: 2.) That, "to you who are troubled, rest with us; when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels?" (2 Thess. 1: 7.)

Is it "dangerous" to preach to them that "now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, and the day is at hand?" (Rom. 13: 11, 12.) That "the end of all things is at hand?" (1 Peter 4: 7.) That "he which testifieth these things saith, surely, I come quickly, amen?" (Rev. 22: 20.) And is it also "dangerous" to answer the announcement, in the words following, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus?"

Is it "dangerous" to preach, "For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revelings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries; wherein they think it strange that yet run not with them, to the same excess of riot; speaking evil of you. Who shall give account unto him that is ready to judge the quick and dead?" 1 Peter 4: 3–5.)

If it is "dangerous" to preach and believe these things, then it is dangerous and heretical to preach the word of God; and we who meet in Village Hall, "Confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship we the God of our fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets; and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust. And herein do we exercise ourselves, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men." (Acts 24: 14–15.)

But to whom is such doctrine "dangerous?" Certainly not to purse-proud hypocrites, who consider that a man is "profited much, if he gain the whole world," even though he "lose his own soul;" who "suppose that gain is godliness;" and so "devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers." They will continue to be members of churches, who do not "withdraw themselves from such." They will not swallow such dangerous doctrine, because if they did, "the hope of their gains would be gone."

Certainly not to those simpering, fastidious persons, whose "finer sensibilities" would be shocked, at hearing a sentence not grammatically connected, or classically finished; who have plenty of tears for the afflicted hero or heroine of the last novel, but none for Christ; who would almost faint to hear the word "perdition," that horrid, unfashionable word. They will not adopt the "dangerous" views and give up the "lovely" preaching they are used to hearing; they are safe, they think less of truth, and more of "eloquence," so-called:

> "Vain eloquence that wanted sacred truth."

Certainly not those honest seekers after God, who wish to know and do his will: for of them Jesus has said, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." So if they come to "hear" they are safe, for they can "hold fast the good."

But is such doctrine "dangerous" to those who have received it? Does it make them worse men and women? Do they lie,—and cheat,—and, steal,—hate and misuse their neighbors? Or will they not compare favorably, in every moral and spiritual respect, with "professors of religion" around them? Who says no?

But some one will say you have not written all you believe.

Certainly I have not, for you will see by my "confession" above that I believe all the Bible, and that is too large to publish in an article in the Brockport Republic,* as the few who attempt to study it now will know.

But what do you believe beside?

Much. Come and "hear" and then "strike" me if you wish. Seats are free.

Yours respectfully, J. D. BROWN.

*The above was written for insertion in the Republic; this explains the allusion, while it reveals an unexpected cause for which my creed is too long to publish in the Brockport Republic. J. D. B.

Correspondence.

From Sr. N. M. Henry.

Dear Readers of the Crisis:—Once more I am at home after an absence of eight weeks. Left Meadville in the midst of a terrible storm, the cold so intense that, although it was the "lightning" train, we froze up, and came to a dead halt four times before reaching Cleveland, too late for the trains South. Went to a hotel, and made myself comfortable until the next day. The President of the Atlantic and Great Western R. R. passed me free to Cleveland, and there they sold me a first class ticket to St. Louis for $9.20,—all on the strength of my certificate sent me by Bro. H. L. Hastings. (By the way, I want some tracts forthwith.) I was from Tuesday until Friday getting home. I was not aware that I had become so warmly attached to my western home and friends, until separated from them. Last night I went to visit one of my poor families, and when the mother saw me, tears filled her eyes, as she took my hand in both hers.

"Thank God, you've got home at last. I have just counted the days, and they seemed so long."

Then she told me how much she had suffered in my absence. A little baby had come among the flock, and she told me her pitiful story of neglect and want, saying,

"I used to say, if Mrs. Henry were only at home, it would n't be so. She'd care for me, for she loves poor folks."

Then the little ones crowded around for their kiss, and the baby was to be admired. They were all in a sad plight for want of being made clean, yet the poor sick mother was not to blame. Promising to come again, I started for another family,—another baby for me to admire.

Both families are English in the first house; their furniture consisted of a stove, table, two or three chairs, and a bed; one pair of blankets, two thin quilts, without sheets or other linen, composed the bedding of a family of seven. What does the father do, did you say? Well, he does what a thousand others do,—drinks. Well, perhaps I hear "Aunt Jane" and dear Sr. White, of Pa., say, We would n't let you wash your clothes while here, we were so careful of you. Yes, I know that; but it wont do to tell the poor to "be ye clean" no more than "be ye warm and fed," and not touch the burden with our fingers; so that is one way of demonstrating our faith by our works, and I can preach a sermon on the wash-board as well as in a pulpit.

Then another neighbor is a very poor widow, dying of consumption. But the widow's God is hers. Calmly she goes down into the dark valley, leaning on the arm of her Beloved. A very kind-hearted woman, loving in her nature. She has three good little girls, and the hearty welcome I received from them on my return really affected me.

In regard to my visit in Penn., I can not go into detail. I formed some happy acquaintances at Blooming Valley. Bro. and Sr. Ongley, and all their kindness to me, will be treasured long. Bro. O. is trying to do good, but he has a hard place. I made the happy acquaintance of Bro. Brown at Edinboro, at the house of Bro. N. White. I found their house, with Bro. Tryon's, and L. D. Allen's, truly pilgrim homes. I was treated with kindness and courtesy, not only by our people, but by others, members of other churches. One of the pleasantest afternoons I spent at Bro. Burton's, pastor of the M. E. Church, at Mc Rane, Erie Co. I occupied his church in the evening, being treated with true christian courtesy and kindness by himself, wife and people. May the Lord reward them, as he surely will.

I look back upon my visit with pleasure, not only at Mc Rane, but in all the places that I visited. I contemplate going to Iowa as soon as the river opens. Would be at the "Winona Conference," holden on the "State Line," only they did not tell what county, and of course I cannot tell where to go. Western people should know better than to write that way. It is impossible to tell any location without the county. Do not forget this.

Yours as ever, N. M. HENRY.

Bunker Hill, Ill., Feb. 24th, 1864.

From Sr. Naomi Colburn.

BRO GRANT:—The good news we have heard from Montreal is truly cheering. We here in Canada feel a special interest in the Advent movements in that wicked city. My heart leaps for joy while hearing of the prosperity of Zion, and while it is not for me to go out to warn the careless of approaching judgment and of the importance of being ready to meet God in peace, I rejoice to know that there are those who have strength and ability and who feel it a pleasure to leave home and friends to go out and engage in the work of saving souls.

I have endeavored to remember Montreal in my secret devotions. The Lord bless those who have lately started for the kingdom. May "holiness unto the Lord" be the motto of every heart, and the praise of the Almighty dwell on every tongue. May each one be of such as shall be eternally saved, and may their numbers be increased daily. We hope to hear from that city again soon, and that the news will be such as will cheer the hearts of the scattered pilgrims, who peruse the columns of our excellent paper, "The World's Crisis," and who earnestly desire God's cause to prosper under the labors of his faithful servants.

Doubtless there are many like myself who are confined to the sick room, and do not have the privilege of meeting with the brethren and sisters in public worship, who feel anxious to hear through our weekly periodical the results of the protracted efforts put forth in these "last days" for the purpose of bringing souls to Christ, that they with us may secure an interest in the kingdom, and receive eternal life when Jesus comes.

I wonder if those dear converts who felt like bearing the cross in Montreal have yet found free water. O, how could frail man feel to "forbid water" and thus hinder those dear ones from being "buried in the likeness" of their blessed Redeemer! But the time has come when we may expect to be persecuted, if we "stand up" for the "truth": and I would as soon look for it from a cold, formal church, as from a professed infidel; yes, sooner. O! how sad it is to be forced to believe it, but it is even so. O! that we might have enough of the spirit of our Master to enable us to stand as bold soldiers in his cause, and not fear to be heard or known as earnestly contending for the "faith once delivered to the saints," although our lot may be cast in the midst of a persecuting and rebellious people.

Dear brethren and sisters, all as one, let us remember Montreal; and while we pray for those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake, let us not forget those who persecute, for we can but believe that they "stand on slippery places," that unless they soon turn from the evil of their ways they must be lost, and that to all eternity; for the day cometh in the which every man's work shall be tried of what sort it is. O! let us all be faithful. Soon persecution and sorrow, privation and disease will be forever banished from the midst of God's people; "for the meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the ABUNDANCE OF PEACE." But the wicked shall be cut off, and "burned up root and branch," "be as though they had not been," die for eternity, and never see God. O, awful thought! The Lord save us from the doom of the wicked, and give us a home with the saints in the earth renewed, for his name and mercy's sake. Truly yours,

NAOMI COLBURN.

Magog, C. E., Feb. 22d, 1864.

From Bro. J. A. Cleaveland.

BRO. GRANT:—We are having a good reformation at Whitefield, N. H. From forty to fifty have been converted during the fall and winter. Many backsliders reclaimed, others feeling anxious in regard to their salvation. I have baptized twenty-seven, others will go forward soon. Some think they had better wait a while, and there are always enough to encourage them to do so; but the Bible says "Repent and be baptized for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

The church at Whitefield is in good working order, especially the young converts. They have their prayer-meetings every week, in addition to all other meetings. Much good attends them. The Lord is doing much by them. The people have a mind to labor, and the work goes on. Give us your prayers, brethren, that the work may still prosper.

The effort the brethren have put forth in Sabbath school has done much to increase the interest in the meetings. It is not time and money spent in vain. The Young Pilgrim is thankfully received by the children, and read with great interest. We have a good library, and a good number to attend the school. I have been preaching at Whitefield one-half of the time for the last nine months. I am now about to move there. There are good brethren in Troy, trying to live in readiness for the coming King. It is my prayer that the Lord will send some one this way, who will stay up their hands and preach the word of life to them now. Your brother in Christ, looking for the Savior soon to come,

J. A. CLEAVELAND.

Troy, Vt., Feb. 24th.

From Bro. E. T. Welch.

BRO. GRANT:—I take the papers, but am better pleased with the Crisis. It does not confine itself to one idea, neither hobbies a doctrine or a belief to the exclusion of all others. I believe most firmly that those who reject the Savior, the "Life-Giver," will perish forever. If we have been baptized into Christ, we put him on, and become his, thereby related to our father Abraham, and being worthy, share with him. I will be your God is a pledge of life from the dead. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. Them that sleep, or die in Jesus, will God bring with or as he brought Jesus.

This to me is a soul-cheering doctrine. I rejoice that I was ever made acquainted with it. I have believed it for about ten or twelve years; have endeavored to avoid making a hobby of it, or of any other doctrines, for in doing so we are almost sure to break up or cause separation of the church of Christ. Any thing rather than divide the body of Christ. Who is Paul? Who is Apollos? Who is Cephas? but ministers by whom we are made believers. I love all the brethren. I hope to meet all in the kingdom who lead lives conformable to Jesus and his Father. They that obey his commandments shall have right to the "tree of life," and walk on streets of gold, through gates of pearl. Those who are clean, escape the pollution of the world, and love Jesus better than all else beside, must be esteemed. Those who love the brethren and sisters unfeignedly will be approved.

Your brother in Christ, E. T. WELCH.

Obituaries.

ISAAC MOODY.

Died in Troy, N. Y., Feb. 9th, 1864, Bro. Isaac Moody, aged fifty-five years, six months.

Bro. Moody became a firm believer in the speedy coming of Christ in '43, and has since maintained the integrity of his faith amid all the changes, trials, and disappointments of the past. His first hearing upon the grand and glorious theme was in Albany. He afterwards went to New York city, where he lived about fifteen years and was well known among the brethren. Afterwards he removed to Troy, where he lived until his death. About one year ago it became apparent that he was wasting away by chronic disease. We missed him from our meetings; nothing but sickness ever kept him away. He was also ever ready to bear testimony to the goodness of God and his faithfulness towards him. It was his daily practice to give thanks to God in prayer and praise on first arising, and seven times a day. Our brother firmly believed he should live till the Lord came. But, alas! death still carries on his work, and we have been obliged to bury our brother out of our sight, but for a little season, believing that the day is not far distant when He whose right it is to reign will come and destroy death and him that hath the power over death.

We endeavored to speak words of comfort and consolation drawn from the word of God to the surviving son and mourning brother, and of instruction and encouragement to the friends and neighbors, who had gathered in to look for the last time in the flesh upon him who had fallen asleep in Jesus. SOLOMON HALE.

LOUISA WADSWORTH.

Died in Hartford, Conn., Feb. 6th, 1864, Sr. Louisa, wife of Bro. James M. Wadsworth, aged forty-two.

She was born in Concord, Mass., from whence she removed to Hartford about twenty-one years since, and united with the Baptist church. About thirteen years since she became a believer in the advent near, with its kindred truths, and cast in her lot with those of like precious faith. She has been a patient sufferer for some years, but notwithstanding has been often found in the prayer and social meetings, when those of good health have thought the inclemency of the weather was a sufficient excuse for their absence.

Her unwavering testimony has been confidence in God, and a love for the appearing of Christ with an expectation that she should be in his kingdom. Although desirous of living to meet her Lord, yet she was resigned to death, and left a dying charge to her companion and friends to meet her in the coming kingdom.

In her death the church has lost a valued member, and her friends a loved one, as testified by the large attendance at her funeral. In accordance with the request of herself and husband, the occasion was improved by the writer to present the distinctive features of our faith. H. H. D.

FRANCIS WM. WRIGHT.

Died of brain fever, in Middlesex, Yates Co., N. Y., Feb. 19th, 1864, Francis Wm. Wright, youngest son of William and Lucinda Wright, aged ten years and ten months.

To the dark chamber of the grave Bro. and Sr. Wright consigned Francis, in certain hope of a glorious resurrection, for

"The body that corrupted fell, Shall incorrupted rise."

Francis was an affectionate child, and gave great promise, being of an inquiring mind, and apt in his Bible tasks as a Sabbath School scholar. But his work is done. Disease in a brief time hurried him away, during which reason had not the throne, now and then only a ray breaking out and through as the cheering sun's rays from behind some dark and portending storm cloud. God grant that this heavy stroke of the chastening rod may be sanctified to the good of the afflicted. Our heart says,

"Break! sacred morning, through the skies,
Bring that delightful, dreadful day;
Cut short the hours, dear Lord, and come in,
Thy lingering wheels, how long they stay!"

J. C. HITCHCOCK.

HENRY C. MOREHOUSE.

Died in Malta, De Kalb Co., Ill., Jan. 23d, 1864, of diphtheria, Henry C. Morehouse, son of Sr. C. Morehouse, aged three years and two months.

Also, Feb. 7th, of the same disease, her daughter Celia, aged five years.

Her husband sleeps on the shore of the Tennessee, where he fell in defense of his country. May the widow's God sustain her, and the blessed hope bid her look forward to a reunion in the land of immortality. Sermon by the writer, from Rev. 21: 4; and 1 Thess. 4; 13.

Our God will wake these up again,
And brighter flowers shall bloom,
Where death, the tyrant, ne'er shall reign,
Beyond the silent tomb.

H. G. MCCULLOCH.

PHILA WHEELER.

Died in DeKalb, De Kalb Co., Ill., Feb. 14th, 1864, of consumption, Phila Wheeler, aged sixty-three, formerly a member of the Baptist church.

On account of her protracted sickness she had but little opportunity to hear preaching on the great truths of this age; but as far as she understood she loved them, and fell asleep in hope of a better resurrection to life and immortality when Jesus comes. She leaves a widowed daughter to mourn her loss. Eld. Hannah, of the Methodist church, preached her funeral sermon.

H. G. MCCULLOCH.

JOHN HOLDER.

Died, in Feltonville, on the morning of Feb. 6th, 1864, Mr. John Holder, of Berlin, Mass., aged sixty-four years and six months.

His death was very sudden, paralysis of the brain. He lived and died a christian, a firm believer in the Advent doctrine. The Crisis was a great comfort to him in the months and years that he was confined to his room.

CAROLINE A. HOLDER.

EDGAR WHARFF.

Died in Richmond, March 8th, 1864, Edgar Wharff, son of J. E. and E. N. Wharff, aged three months, nineteen days.

Another jewel is laid away to await the resurrection morning, when he shall come again to his own border. H. D. REED.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

The Daily News replies to the sneers of the Times at Gen. Banks' General Order regulating negro labor in Louisiana, and applauds the measure as a necessary preparatory step from slavery to entire freedom.

Mr. Shaw Lefevre called attention to the course pursued by Confederate agents in England in fitting out war vessels and enlisting seamen, and moved for the papers on the subject. He denounced their proceedings, and regretted that the Alabama was not detained, and contended that all such vessels should be prohibited from entering British ports, and if they did, British cruisers should seize them.

The Solicitor General explained and defended the course of the Government, and asserted that every effort had honestly been made to carry out the laws and maintain neutrality. He admitted that vessels might be prohibited from entering British ports, and said the Government were considering the subject of how they could remonstrate with the Confederate Government.

The Danish war. No fighting is reported.

The remonstrance of France to Prussia against the advance of the Prussian troops into Jutland is said to be far less forcible than England's, but the tone of the document is considered indicative that Napoleon means whatever he says.

The Swedish Government has granted permission to Swedish officers to take service with the Danes during the war.

Neustadt, in Holstein, is blockaded.

It is asserted that the Prussians have notified England of an intended early attack on Fredericia.

AUSTRIA. The semi-official Correspondenza of Vienna, denies the rumored warlike preparation in Venetia, and most positively declares that Austria has not the remotest intention of assuming the offensive. Nevertheless the rumors are repeated via Turin.

The Archduke Maximilian arrived at Paris on the 5th, and it is reported will embark for Mexico on the 25th, all difficulties having been settled.

A Vienna telegram says the mission of the Prussian Minister Manteroffel to Vienna had the desired result, Austria having consented to the continuation of operations in Jutland.

The Federal Diet officially announces that it has received no invitation to the Conference.

INDIA. A telegram from the Persian Gulf announces the successful laying of 450 miles of the new cable to India, and the paying out of the line from Bombay toward Europe was about to commence.

It is reported that the Austrians are marching on Fredericia, Jutland.

WARSAW, March 6. An imperial manifesto, announcing the emancipation of the peasants, was solemnly proclaimed to-day.

PARIS. The three Prussian war ships at Brest have been ordered North.

The Coburg Gazette states that Queen Victoria is engaged in writing her own memoirs, and that this accounts for her withdrawal from Court receptions, etc.

DOMESTIC.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 14th, 1864.

In order to supply the force required to be drafted for the navy, and to provide an adequate reserve force for all contingencies, in addition to the five hundred thousand men called for February 1st, 1864, the call is hereby made and draft ordered for two hundred thousand men for the military service of the army, navy, and Marine corps of the United States. The proportional quotas for the different wards, towns, townships, precincts, or election districts, or counties will be made known through the Provost Marshal General's Bureau, and account will be taken of the credits and deficiencies of former quotas. The 15th day of April, 1864, is designated as the time up to which the numbers required from each ward of a city, town, etc., may be raised by a voluntary enlistment, and drafts will be made in each ward of a city, town, etc., which shall not have filled the quota assigned to it within the time designated for the number required to fill said quotas. The drafts will be commenced as soon after the 15th of April as practicable. The government bounties as now paid continue until April 1st, 1864, at which time the additional bounties cease. On and after that date $100 bounty only will be paid, as provided by the act approved July 22nd, 1864.

The Herald's New Orleans letter states that Porter's entire fleet of iron-clads is at the mouth of the Red river. Thirty transports loaded with troops are also there. Admiral Porter has captured a strong rebel fort on the Washita river, with all its guns, including three 32-pounders.

Gen. Banks and staff would take the field on the 10th inst., and the army would commence operations immediately.

New York, March 17th. The Times' Washington dispatch says five hundred of our prisoners died in Richmond during February.

The order relieving Gen. Meade and appointing his successor will be issued in a few days.

The World's dispatch states that Gen. Burnside will be assigned to the department of the South instead of Gen. Fremont.

Rumor assigns Gen. Hancock to a department, and states that Gen. Grant will assign Gen. Fremont to active duty; also, that Gen. Thomas will soon be relieved from the command of the army of the Cumberland, which will be assigned to Gen. Rosecrans or Gen. Herron.

Nashville, Tenn., March 17th. Gen. Grant formally assumed command of the armies of the United States to-day. The following is his order on the subject:

"Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C.,

Under the authority of the act of Congress to appoint the grade of Lieut. General in the Army, of Feb. 29th, 1894, Lieut. General U. S. Grant, U. S. A., is appointed to command the armies of the United States.

(Signed) A. LINCOLN."

I assume command of the armies of the United States. Headquarters will be in the field, and until further orders will be with the Army of the Potomac. There will be an office headquarters in Washington, D. C., to which all official communications will be sent, except those from the army where the headquarters are at the date of this address. (Signed) U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

New York, March 18th. The Times' Paris correspondence announces the important fact that Minister Dayton has served a written notification upon the French Emperor, that if the rebel cruiser Rappahannock, now at Calais, is allowed to proceed to sea, the French government will be held responsible for all the damage she may do to American commerce. It is also announced that the French government has issued more stringent regulations concerning the cruisers of the belligerents. Among other things specified in these regulations are two, to the effect that no vessel of either of the belligerents can remain in port more than twenty-four hours, unless by stress of weather or for necessary repairs, and that no vessel can return to a French port, after leaving it, in a less time than three months.

Messrs. Arman & Vorus, the builders of the six Confederate vessels at Bordeaux and Nantes, have given their word to the French government that these vessels shall not pass into the hands of the Confederates. One or more of the vessels are ready to launch.

St. Louis, Mo., March 17. Vicksburg dates of 8th state that twenty steamers are at the wharf loading with troops for an expedition, which, it is presumed, will unite with Gen. Banks' command and go up the Red River. Report gives W. J. Smith the command of the expedition.

New York, March 17. The Herald's correspondence from the fleet off Mobile has a rumor that Admiral Farragut is to withdraw his fleet, being satisfied that the city cannot be taken by water.

ANOTHER JAPANESE EMBASSY.—The Japan correspondent of the New York World says that, some months ago, the Japanese government took occasion to inquire of the United States Minister whether another embassy would be favorably received in America and Europe. They propose this time to come in an unostentatious manner, and to pay their own expenses. They hope to procure a modification of the Japanese treaty.

THE INDIAN WAR. Gen. Pope proposes to accomplish three objects the coming season, viz., the chastisement and subjugation of the bands of savages on both sides of the Missouri river, who continue refractory and hostile; the protection of the overland route to Idaho by the establishment of strong military posts within the Indian country; the security of the Minnesota and Iowa frontier against hostile raids.

CONFERENCE IN BOSTON.

The church of the Lord Jesus Christ worshiping at Lowell Street Chapel, Boston; to those of like precious faith, and who wait for the Son of God from heaven, greeting:—

Beloved in the Lord, we give thanks to our heavenly Father, who hath loved us and blessed us with all spiritual blessings, that through his grace we trust we are enabled to continue steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, and fellowship, and in the breaking of bread, and in prayers, and that God in his rich mercy yet is pleased, as we trust, to count us as members of his little flock, and to grant us peace and unity among ourselves, and some degree of prosperity as a church of Christ.

We give thanks to God also, that we have been so kept by the power of God, that we have not been moved away from the hope of the gospel, but that we have been enabled to continue in the faith rooted and grounded, holding fast those principles of the doctrine of Christ, repentance from dead works, and faith toward God, the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment; and that in the patience of hope we do yet wait for the coming and kingdom of our Lord, believing that yet a little while, and he that shall come will come and will not tarry, and that now the just shall live by faith.

And as the signs of the times indicate that we are among the predicted perils of the last days, and that we are approaching those scenes of final trouble such as never was, which shall convulse the world with sorrow and distress; we have thought it good to invite our brethren in Christ and the preachers of his word, who are interested in these momentous themes, without distinction of sect or name, to meet us at our place of worship, at the CORNER OF LOWELL AND CAUSEWAY STREETS, BOSTON, on Tuesday evening, April 5th, 1864; and to continue with us over the coming First Day of the week:

To unite in worship and thanksgiving to God for his abundant mercies to all men, and us who have learned his will and tasted that he is gracious:

To offer up our prayers, and supplications and intercessions for all men; for kings and all that are in authority, that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty; for the peace and prosperity of mankind, and the spreading abroad of the gospel among the nations; for the church of Jesus Christ, that they may all come to the unity of the faith, and may be enriched in every christian grace, and preserved blameless till the appearing of the Lord, being delivered from the devices of evil men and the power of lies, and the delusions of Satan:

For the ministers of the word of God, that they may be preserved from errors of faith which distract and divide the church, and from sins of practice which dishonor the Lord and his truth; that God may mercifully deliver them from ignorance and prejudice, give them great understanding in the mysteries of his word, and great boldness and an open door for the declaring of the same; and also to unite in praying the Lord of the harvest that he may send forth laborers into his harvest, who shall be men of God, men of faith, of zeal; men of patience and love, purity and power; men who fear the Lord and hate covetousness, and that thus he may preserve unto us the faithful ministration of his word to the end:

To listen to the proclamation of the truth of God for the edification of the church, and to the preaching of the glad tidings of the salvation and kingdom of God, and to give heed to the sure word of prophecy, which is as a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise;

To exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching, thus confirming the souls of the disciples that they may be of good courage, even though they must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God:

To invite sinners to Christ, the refuge from approaching wrath; to warn the perishing of their impending danger, and point them to their great deliverer, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world:

To encourage each other in the great work of saving men and proclaiming the gospel in the regions beyond, thus sounding out the word of the Lord: and,

To remember the death of Christ in the breaking of bread and the drinking of the cup which he has given us, by which to testify our grateful recollection of his sorrows, and to show forth his death till he shall come.

For these objects we invite our brethren, and sisters, and the servants of the Lord, and shall make them welcome to our worship, our homes, and our hospitalities; trusting that we may thus be blessed and comforted together. And we desire the prayers of God's people that the good hand of God may prosper us in our meeting together; that we may gather in harmony, and love, and quietness, that we may be mercifully preserved from all confusion and strife, from vain jangling and bitterness of speech, from all perverse disputations and words that edify not, and from all sectarian narrowness of spirit, and that endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, we may honor and glorify our heavenly Father, and make ready for the marriage of the Lamb and the approaching kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.

On behalf of the church:

For the World's Crisis.

OUR INHERITANCE.

Where is our faithful Father,
 Who followed God's command,
And wandered here a stranger,
 Seeking a better land?
  Passed away.

Where are his favored children,
 Who the promise did receive,
That the land through which they journeyed,
 To them and theirs he'd give?
  Passed away.

Where those who followed Jesus,
 And loving were the seed,
Heirs according to the promise,
 For in Christ they have believed?
  Passed away.

They have not received the promise,
 In the "faith" they all have died,
Waiting until believers
 With them are glorified.
  Passed away.

Millions, millions slumber,
 Who were faithful till they died;
Thousands more are falling—
 The destroyer's hand's not stayed.
  Passing away.

But a promise is on record,
 That the dead shall wake and live,
Rise to take the promised kingdom,
 And the glorious crown receive.
  Death passed away.

Courage! pilgrim, still press onward,
 Victory now is almost won;
Soon with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob,
 In the kingdom we'll sit down,
  No more to pass away.

"ALL LIVE UNTO GOD."—No. 1.

The Resurrection,—The law,—The penalty,—The transgression,—The condemnation,—The consequences,—The redemption,—The means,—The release.

"Now that the dead are raised, even Moses shewed at the bush, when he called the Lord, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; for he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto God."—Luke 20: 37, 38.

Resurrection. From the Latin resurrectus, resurgo; re and surgo, to rise. A rising again; chiefly the revival—recovery to life from death—of the dead of the human race, or their return from the grave.—Webster. "But some may say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come? Thou (simpleton!) that which thou sowest is not quickened (made alive, revived, vivified, reinvigorated,—Webster) except it DIE; and thou sowest not that body that shall be, but God giveth it (the seed sown) a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed its own body (in kind or likeness). So also is the resurrection of the dead. There is a natural (psuchikon soma—animal) body (in the resurrection), and there is a spiritual body (in the resurrection, as you may see presently), for so it is written, The first Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening (life-giving) Spirit. The first man (Adam) is of the earth, earthy: the second man (Adam, i. e. Christ) is the Lord from heaven." Now then, "As is the earthy, such are they also (where? in the resurrection) that are earthy (when sown), and as is the heavenly, such are they also (where? in the resurrection) that are heavenly (when sown). And as we (brethren in Christ Jesus) have borne the image of the earthy, we shall ALSO (where? in the resurrection.) bear the image of the heavenly." And why? Because we who have "put off the old (first or flesh) man, Adam, with all his deeds and have put on the new man" (the second Adam, Christ, the Lord from heaven), being renewed in the image of righteousness and true holiness, have had our natures changed by the word of God, the incorruptible seed, and the impregnating Spirit of truth, which liveth and abideth forever, and thus become a "SPIRITUAL SEED" of Christ, and, when sown, must "come up" with a spiritual body, if so be "it hath pleased God to give to EVERY SEED its own body"; for "ye are not in the flesh, but in the SPIRIT, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you."

Consequently, as none but those who are in Christ Jesus by faith are counted for the promised seed, and can inherit everlasting life, and land promised to Abraham in the new earth, all who will not be renewed in Christ must remain in the flesh, animal, natural, earthy or first Adamic nature, and being thus sown a "corruptible seed," they must "come up" with animal or corruptible bodies, if so be "it hath pleased God to give to every seed its own body," and these, having "sown to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption"; but those, having "sown to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." For "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal"; "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him"; when "he shall sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations."

The Shunamite's child (2 Kings 4: 35); the widow's son of Sarepta (1 Kings 17: 22); the ruler's daughter (Matt. 9: 25); the widow's son Luke 7; 15; Lazarus (11: 44); and Dorcas (Acts 9: 37–41), with Moses at the transfiguration, are all samples of a resurrection to a mortal or animal life and corruptible body; for they all died a second time of necessity, Christ being the first fruits of the Spirit-life, or first raised from the dead to live eternally, though perhaps not all that have been so raised, for we are told that at his crucifixion "many bodies of the saints who slept arose and came out of the graves AFTER HIS RESURRECTION, and went into the holy city, and (they) appeared unto many."—Matt. 27: 52. And the marginal reading of Eph. 4: 8 says when he ascended up on high, he led a multitude of captives. It is true that this might refer to those (captives) who "are Christ's at his coming"; but very many ascribe it to those who "came out of the graves after his resurrection."

According to the samples given, then, of "the power of God" in the resurrection, there is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body; but if there can be no resurrection of the animal or soul life, on account of its having penally expired for the Adamic or its own transgression, unless there had preceded a "sealing of the Spirit," on what principle shall we undertake to account for the resurrection of the cases above cited, particularly of those children that were not Christ's by a personal exercise of FAITH? What he has done once, he may do again. One thing is certain; when the above cases were raised, the Spirit had not yet been given. Their being raised was no positive proof that they were Christ's, but it was positive proof that the "word of God" had power to raise that subject that had been executed for transgressing his law in Adam to life again, without giving it spirit or everlasting life. Consequently what Christ said in John 5: 28 MAY be true after all: "for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves SHALL hear his voice and shall come forth," though we may not be able to give a philosophical reason for its modus operandi.

When the Sadducees came to Christ, they thought to perplex him by presenting an anomalous case concerning the resurrection, and got themselves confounded: but then, they denied any resurrection, angel or Spirit. We find in our day almost a parallel in want of faith in those who seem to think that there can be no resurrection of the dead, if so be they are dead, and consequently hold that Christ proved the patriarchs to be alive. Let us, therefore, logically examine the argument.

The declaration of Christ to Martha (John 11: 26)—"And whosoever liveth and believeth shall never die," will avail nothing in support of believers not dying, for "it is appointed unto all men once to die," and Christ had just said in verse 25, of the same class, "Though they were dead, yet shall they live." Martha had just alluded to the resurrection and the "last day," and so because Christ said to Peter (John 21) concerning John, "If I will that he tarry till I come," therefore said the disciples that John, who was a believer, should "never die," because they understood that John was to "live" until that "last day" when the resurrection will take place at Jesus' coming.

And so Paul (1 Cor. 15: 51, 52), speaking through the same "one Spirit" that was given to Christ "without measure," of that same "last day," "at the last trump," and of "the resurrection," declared that he would make known to the church "a mystery," and that was, just as Christ had told Martha, that all believers that were alive at the last day, or trump, should not "sleep," or die, but be changed from mortal to immortal "in a moment,"—they should "never die." And yet such believers as "are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, cannot precede them that are asleep" (1 Thess. 4: 15), but will have the blessed privilege of witnessing the "mighty power of God which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead."

Should an argument be attempted on the distinguishing terms of sleep and death, then let it be remembered that Christ said "plainly," laying aside all metaphor, in John 11: 14, "Lazarus is dead." The "change" is also equivalent to dying; in either case the law's claim is not set aside.

The Sadducees denied any resurrection of the dead, and Jesus undertakes to prove one by their own admitted valid witness, Moses. The Jews affirmed (John 8: 53) and Jesus admitted that Abraham and the prophets were dead; consequently He does not, in order to prove a resurrection of the dead, undertake to show that they were then living, for if he proves them to be alive, he by no means proves a resurrection of the dead, and his logic fails him in refuting the heresy of the Sadducees.

If, then, God is not a God of the dead, but of the living, and Abraham, Isaac and Jacob be dead, then there must be a resurrection of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that God may be their God.

Or, in another form, if God is the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and he is not the God of the dead, but of the living, then there must be a resurrection of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that he may be their God.

Either of these proves a resurrection on the admitted premise of the credibility of the witness in the case, and that the Lord is a God of omniscience and truth. But, reverse the order. God is not a God of the dead, but of the living, and Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are now alive; therefore the Lord is their God,—proves nothing in relation to a resurrection, for there can be no standing up again in life from death, where there has been no dying or falling down into death from life.

But once more; if, as is by some affirmed, the soul of man be the essential man, and being immortal cannot die, but is more potential in life, thought and action, separated from the body, than when connected with it, and the body be only a tabernacle or house in which the man lived, then we have the case thus. "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, for he is not a God of the dead but of the living"; Abraham, Isaac and Jacob therefore are not dead, but by a taking down of the old corruptible tabernacle of their earthly house, in which they only dwelt "until their change should come," they are now, by death, released from their "clay tenements," and "raised up" to God on high, living in heaven, that God may be their God. Nevertheless at the judgment day they must return and live in those same old houses, so long crumbled into dust, when they shall be transformed into spiritual bodies or houses, fashioned "like unto Christ's glorious house or body."

Now that is no fancy sketch nor caricature—unless it be of God's truth—by those who so teach, as every Sunday School and Bible-class scholar, as almost every hearer of the latter day teachers, can testify; and I beseech in all humility a careful perusal and examination of it, to find a doctrine of any kind of a resurrection in it; nay, but I do find an essential denial of the resurrection, for according to it the patriarchs never died, and Christ says not one word, expressed or implied, about the bodies, the earthly houses of their tabernacle, or the clay tenements of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, or of their souls, mortal or immortal, or of their spirits, deathless or otherwise; but admitting, by his argument, that these old saints of God, like the woman and the seven brethren who had her to wife, had died, he proves that they shall be resurrected to life again, that God may be their God.

CHRIST WITHIN.

In the sixth chapter of John Jesus gives positive instruction with regard to his indwelling or abode in the hearts of all true believers, at which the unbelieving Jews murmured no more than do modern professors at the present day. In order to sustain physical life and vigor, we must necessarily partake of food; so it should be and is indispensably necessary in order to our spiritual life, that we partake of the bread of God; and that bread is Christ. John 6: 33. When Jesus said to the Jews, "I am that bread of life—the living bread—whoso eateth and drinketh me dwelleth in me and I in him. . . . And except ye eat and drink . . . . ye have no life in you," the disciples as well as the Jews, thought it a hard saying. "Who can hear it? And from that time many of them turned back and would walk no more with him." Not unlike professors at the present day who bear the christian name; when the word is made the standard, bringing them to the testimony and example of Jesus and the apostles as their undeviating guide to the kingdom, they turn back, practically saying, This is a hard way—a hard Master.

Jesus, unwilling the disciples should be displeased or misapprehend, explains fully by saying, "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Numerous texts to the point conclusively show that when the words, the sayings, and instructions of Jesus are held sacred, and abide in our hearts, that the Spirit is there, and Jesus spiritually controls and abides there also. Col. 3: 16; Tit. 1: 9; James 1: 21; Rev. 3: 10; John 5: 38.

Now we want to be saved in the kingdom when Jesus comes; and are we to defer the preparation till then? By no means; we are to be saved now, to-day, or left out then; purified and made holy by obeying the truth. What is truth? "Thy word is truth." "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith." Know whether Christ be in you. "Until Christ be formed within you." "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. And if Christ be in you the body is dead." "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith, . . . that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." Eph. 3: 17.

This then is the fulness, Christ within, by the influence of the Holy Ghost emanating from the Father, which is given unto us; the agency by which he communicates his will to man, teaching, reproving, and comforting our hearts all the way through. "If a man love me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." "Exceeding great and precious promise, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature."

Then the fruits of the Spirit; how rich and glorious. "If these things be in us and abound, they make us neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." It is Christ within; and when this is so we shall bear fruit in abundance, and no law can harm us. There need be no deception nor mistake in the matter, we may know; the word is plain. Study it, apply it, and live it.

The time has fully come when it will require all our energy and every effort to keep awake till the morning. Indications are strong, evidences bright and clear, never more so than to-day, that we are nearing with rapid strides the closing scenes of this world's history. Never were the signs preceding his second coming spoken of by himself, so visible, and so nearly fulfilled, as to-day. Never were we so near the judgment. Do you believe this, my brother and sister? Say, are you ready should the brightness of his coming glory light up this midnight hour? are you his, consecrated entirely and accepted? Little ones, does a single doubt linger around your anxious heart? go to the closet, rest not a moment till you know, and can joyfully say, all ready, waiting. Ye stronger ones, hold on to God and his word, deliverance will come. Cheer up the lonely ones; strengthen and assist the weak ones; faithfully finish your appointed work, and patiently wait for your returning Lord. You that have wandered from the fold, and the poor sinner, too, heed the voices speaking to you in thunder tones to-day. The storm is gathering. The moments linger, and no time to lose. The Savior waits. Hasten, O hasten, seek a shelter; hide yourself in Christ and you will be safe.

Watchman, what of the night? Ah! the rising glory of the coming King already gilds the horizon, and our long dark night of toil and sorrow is soon to end triumphantly in an eternal rest. Rejoice! Lift up your voices and hands in praises to our God, that your weary heads and aching hearts, which so long have wept over the woes of bleeding Zion, are so soon to rest, and be solaced in the sunlight of your happy Eden home. Be joyful in your God. Be filled with the Spirit. Keep Christ within and you will be Christ-like, and then will you preach Christ. Christ within, never looked so important, so glorious, and never sounded through my whole being as to-day.

JOURNAL.—No. 3.

Jan. 19th. Commenced a series of meetings. Spoke on the prayer of the Publican. One backslider came forward and confessed his sins before the people. He wished to leave off his bad habits, and live a better life. His wife was greatly revived to see her husband return to God. I thought with others there was a fair prospect of a good revival in the place; but to our grief we soon learned that the leading sects combined to stay away from our meetings, and influence others to do likewise; and more, some ungodly backsliders managed to take the lead of the young people, and start a series of balls and dances about every other evening. Notwithstanding all these hindrances, I preached twelve sermons in the village, to some good effect, with increasing interest.

Preached two evenings some nine miles south of the village, at the house of Eld. Coles, from Indiana. He was ordained to the work of the gospel ministry by the Christian denomination. The Holy Bible is his guide. He believes we are in the last days, near the end of time; that Jesus will soon come to reign on this earth renewed, and that man's only hope of a future life is through Christ. He and Bro. S. C. Wellcome are intending to form a free church soon, I think with some twelve or fifteen members. I drew them up a form of church covenant. We should have organized before I left on Saturday, but sickness in two families prevented. There is a good and large field for gospel labor in and about Eld. Coles' district. They were once frightened away by the Sioux Indians, but that excitement is all over there. The Indians are all driven off, none left to trouble the inhabitants. While I was in and about Garden City, I preached fourteen sermons, saw the saints revived, and a number of wanderers from God reclaimed.

On Monday, Feb. 1st, left Garden City. Reached Cleveland Village, thirty-two miles distant, in time to circulate an appointment for preaching in the evening. A number were out to hear the word of God. Preached seven sermons in the village. One wanderer returned, and I think some good seed was sown in some hearts, the fruit of which may be seen hereafter. Preached some eighteen sermons in all, in different parts of the town, and left a form of church covenant with Bro. Meaker, to form a small, new church, as the old one had run down. I learned the church at Ottawa, some twelve miles distant, were doing well, but the school-house being occupied for a writing school, I did not preach there on my return.

Monday, 8th, left for Millersburgh, thirty-five miles distant, in Rice Co. Found a western preacher holding a series of evening meetings in the school-house. He had given notice to preach on the immortality of the human soul. He tried to prove it from a few isolated, disconnected, inferential passages. He said in triumph at the end he had proved it. To-morrow evening, he says, I will prove the punishment of the wicked to be endless misery, which will prove the soul immortal. As my only chance to reply was in the afternoon, each day, Eld. Miller took notes of his sermons, and I replied. I requested them to hear both sides; some did, and others would not. I think some good will grow out of that controversy.

Saturday, 13th, in company with Eld. J. V. Himes' son, drove some seventeen miles to this place. Eld. T. W. Miller came on in time for the evening meeting. Lakeville is a hard spot. I preached in the evening to a full house, from James 1: 27, on pure religion.

Sunday, 14th, Eld. Miller preached from Eph. 1: 10, 11. In the afternoon I spoke to a full house, some two miles south of here. Bro. Samuel Johnson, from the State of Connecticut, went with me and introduced me to the people.

I have preached, since I left home the 8th of Dec., some seventy-five sermons, and received some $32 in all.

THE ARK.

When ancient Israel met the foe,
That aimed at them a deadly blow,
Though oft their prospect seemed most dark,
They cross because they have the Ark.

The Ark when borne to Jordan's tide
Caused its deep waters to divide;
They need no boat in which to embark,
They triumphed when they had the Ark.

They march around old Jericho,
Its towering walls are laid full low;
Hear ye that mighty shouting? Hark!
They triumph, for they have the Ark.

Where was the strength by which it wrought,
And to its bearers victory brought?
It was a chest of wood—but, mark!
The law of God was in the Ark.

When men oppose that law of love,
They lack the wisdom from above,
Deluded souls! they're in the dark
Without the truth, without the Ark.

The remnant in these latter days
Will triumph sure,—give God the praise!
They, of the beast, refuse the mark,
They keep God's law—they have the Ark.

DEATH AND RESURRECTION.—No. 1.

(This was written for the Harbinger and refused.)

I perceive that the subject of the NON-resurrection of the wicked is being agitated at present, with some apparent effect; which fact led me once more to review the whole subject. And the result of my investigation is, unless something different is presented to my mind from any arguments or evidences yet seen by me, I must set the sentiment along-side of others of like nature, being only sustained by inferential and assumed to be positive testimony, by a forced interpretation and construction of certain texts. As for instance, Jesus says (John 3: 36), "He that believeth on the Sun hath everlasting life. And he that believeth not the Son shall not see (everlasting) life." Now to say that this text is positive proof that the wicked will not receive a resurrection to a corporeal and animal life, is to force an unwarrantable and illegitimate construction of the subject under consideration; for the text only looks at that kind of life qualified by the word everlasting. Therefore the doctrine in question is no more sustained by this class of texts than as though they were not in the gospel.

But let us consider another text, Isa. 26: 14, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise. Therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Says the advocate of the doctrine in question, "Is not that positive?" We answer yes, it is positive, and very pointed proof that the wicked sons of Adam will be "destroyed" as a punishment for THEIR OWN INDIVIDUAL SINS, when God visits and rewards them "every man according to his works."

But, says the affirmant, The text shows that the work is already done, and in the past tense. To the argument I would only say, GOD, THE ETERNAL, with whom all things are present, "Calleth those things that are not (yet accomplished) as though they were." "How do you know that rule will apply to the text in question?" I answer, Isa. 24: 21, 23, shows that at the coming of the Lord Jesus, "The host of the high ones," (kings) that have been wickedly oppressive, will then be punished (with national punishment, as other nations and kings have been before them) and after being thus punished they are imprisoned "in the pit," (sheol or hades), "and after MANY DAYS (doubtless reference is had to the thousand years of Christ's reign of judgment over the world) shall they be visited." For what purpose shall they be visited? To execute the gracious purpose of Jehovah, and reward them with an individual reward, for their own individual deeds, independent of their corporate or national acts, or any entailment of their progenitor, Adam. Hence it is very clearly manifest, that Isa. 24: 21, 23, is a key to the proper understanding of Isa. 26; 14. For the visitation of God upon the wicked kings and oppressive rulers, in the former, looks forward to the closing scenes of the judgment of Jesus Christ for the realization of the latter. The conclusion therefore is, that Isa. 26: 14 affords not a particle of proof that the wicked children of Adam will not be raised from the death that was entailed upon them by his one offence. Rom. 5: 18.

But, says the affirmant, I maintain that although Adam's posterity were made subject to corruption, by being excluded from the tree of life, it was not a penal infliction on them. Here I must call the apostle Paul to my aid. Mark, the assumption is, that death, resulting from the circumstance of Adam's progeny being excluded from the tree of life, is not penal. Paul, how is that? "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men (in whom, margin) as all have sinned." Rom. 5: 21. Verse 18,—"Therefore as by the offence of one (man, Adam) judgment (sentence, Macknight; condemnation, Syriac, sentence, Whiting), came upon all men to condemnation."

The Lord our God saith, (Isa. 1: 18) "Come now and let us reason together." "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" Yes. But is it right to pass the sentence of death upon the guiltless, and those without fault; and not only pass the sentence of "condemnation," but execute the judgment with unrelenting vigor? Is such administration in harmony with "unperverted reason?" No. How then, in the name of reason, (unperverted) shall we account for the death of the unoffending infant? For we positively affirm that it has not offended by its own acts, as an independent individual. But it was part of its father Adam at the time he sinned, and no part of Adam was "guiltless or without fault." And the penalty was against his entire self. No part (by the law) was in the least exempted.

Hence we see the propriety of death passing as a penal infliction on all the race of Adam. As Paul has testified, and also the force of Job's remark, who asks, "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? NOT ONE." Therefore as our father Adam was polluted and unclean in whole,—how could his progeny be pure, and not subject to the same condemnation with himself? "Unperverted reason" says it is a thing impossible.

To me it is very evident that the assumption of the affirmant that, the death of "Adam's" children, or "posterity," is not "a penal infliction on them," in consequence of Adam's violation of the law of God, is far-fetched. It may do for some folks; but it is opposed both by the word of God and "unperverted reason." Now if the foundation of the doctrine be thus sandy, is it safe to invest capital in the edifice; or if the promises be false, will they bring to a just conclusion? Here, again, "unperverted reason" says no. The conclusion then is, that as death does happen to those that have not in their own individuality committed acts worthy of death, that all of the posterity of sinful Adam are in consequence of his sin subject to the penal infliction of death, and need to be saved therefrom by the grace and mercy of God through a Redeemer.

PRAYER.—No. 1.

The first mention we have in the Bible of prayer is associated with a miracle, and in tracing this subject throughout the Scriptures we shall perhaps be surprised to find such a multitude of instances in which miracles were wrought in answer to prayer. Perhaps it may be best to consider these in the commencement, and then pass to other illustrations of the subject.

The account above referred to is found in the 20th chapter of Genesis. Abimelech, king of Gerar, had taken Sarah, Abraham's wife, supposing her to be his sister. For this cause God had smitten Abimelech, and told him that he should surely die unless he restored Sarah to her husband. This the king was very ready to do, and then Abraham prayed for him, and God heard him. When God was pouring out his sore judgments upon the land of Egypt, preparatory to the emancipation of the Jewish bondmen, those judgments were removed at various times in answer to the supplications of Moses, their leader. When he prayed for the frogs to be taken away, they died; when he entreated the Lord that the swarms of flies might be removed, not one remained; and in answer to his entreaties the mighty thunderings were silenced, the hail ceased, and the rain was no longer poured out. And when the locusts came in clouds and covered all the land of Egypt, in answer to prayer a mighty east wind arose, which took them all away, and cast them into the Red Sea.

On another occasion, when the Israelites murmured, the Lord was displeased, and sent a fire into their camp, which consumed those that were in the uttermost part. Then Moses prayed unto the Lord, and the fire was quenched.

After the death of Moses, Joshua succeeded him as a leader, and he also was a man of faith and prevailing prayer. At one time five kings went out against the children of Israel, with all their vast hosts, and encamped before Gibeon, for the purpose of taking the city. Then word was sent to Joshua, who was in camp at Gilgal, entreating him to come with all possible haste to the rescue. He accordingly went immediately, with all the men of war, and God strengthened his heart with the assurance that they should all be delivered into his hand. Their enemies were discomfited on their sudden appearance, and fled from them; but they pursued them, and slew them with a very great slaughter. The Lord also fought for them, by casting down great stones from heaven upon them, thus destroying more than the Israelites with the sword.

In the midst of this carnage, Joshua asked the Lord to stay the course of the sun and the moon, and his request was granted,—"The sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down for about a whole day." Although the record is given as though Joshua commanded the sun and moon to stand still, yet it is evident that his words were a prayer, for the connection says, "Joshua spake to the Lord," and "the Lord hearkened unto the voice of a man."

At another time, after the Israelites had been for a long time oppressed because of their departure from the law of the Lord, they cried out because of their distress, and God raised up unto them a deliverer, Gideon, the son of Joash. When the angel of the Lord appeared to him, and gave him his commission, he began to reason with the heavenly messenger, and plead the poverty of his father's family, accounting himself as the least of them all. But the Lord assured him that, through the divine power, he would be successful and smite their oppressors as one man.

By and by the Midjanites, the Amalekites, and the children of the east, were gathered together for battle. Then Gideon wished to have a token confirmatory of the word that by his hand Israel would be saved. So he said he would put a fleece of wool on the threshing floor (which was in the open air), and if there was dew on the fleece, and dry on all the earth beside, then he would know that God would save Israel by his hand. In the morning he rose up early, and, taking up the fleece, he wrung therefrom a bowl-full of water. But this did not satisfy him, after all. He was like many others who, when called by God to go preach the gospel, ask some special token of him, promising, if it be granted, they will then believe it their duty to go, but, when the sign is granted, doubts arise, and they ask for yet another evidence; and too many are not content as was Gideon with having their tokens twice given, but they go on multiplying them, until God, displeased with their lack of submission and trust, leaves them without any further manifestations.

Gideon, it may be, reasoned thus: "Perhaps it was cloudy, and therefore there was no dew, and some one may have poured water on the fleece; so I am not quite sure, after all, as I am chosen for this work. I will ask one more sign, and if that is given me, I will go forth unhesitatingly." So he prayed again, "O God, let not thine anger burn against me, and I will speak but this once: let me prove, I pray thee, but this once with the fleece; let it be dry only upon the fleece, and upon all the ground let there be dew."

His request was granted, the fleece remained dry, while all the ground was wet with dew. Then Gideon asked no more signs, but took the position assigned him, and in a singular manner the host of the Midianites was overthrown.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

BY CHARLOTTE ELIZABETH.

When from scattered lands afar
Spreads the voice of rumored war,
Nations in tumultuous pride
Heaved like ocean's roaring tide;
When the solar splendors fail,
When the crescent waxeth pale,
And the powers that star-like reign,
Sink dishonored to the plain,
World! do thou the signal dread!
We exalt the drooping head,
We uplift the expectant eye,
Our redemption draweth nigh.
When the fig-tree shoots appear,
Men proclaim their summer near;
When the hearts of rebels fail,
We the coming Savior hail.

Send thy law from Zion forth
Over all the willing earth;
Earth, whose Sabbath glories rise
Crowned with more than Paradise!
Sacred be the opposing veil,
Mortal sight and strength must fail;
Yet the day, the hour is nigh,
We shall see thee eye to eye;
Be our souls in peace possest
While we seek thy promised rest;
And, from every heart and home,
Breathe the prayer—O Jesus, come!
Haste to set thy people free;
Come—creation groans for thee!

VOLTAIRE'S LAST WORDS.—Voltaire was fertile and elegant, his observations very acute, yet he often betrays great ignorance when he treats on subjects of ancient learning. Madame de Talmond once said to him:—

"I think, sir, that a philospher should never write but with the endeavor to render mankind less wicked and unhappy than they are. Now you do quite the contrary; you are always writing against that religion which alone is able to restrain wickedness, and to afford us consolation under misfortunes."

Voltaire was much struck, and excused himself by saying that he only wrote for those who were of the same opinion as himself. Tronchin assured his friends that Voltaire died in great agonies of mind.

"I die forsaken by gods and men," exclaimed he, in those awful moments when truth will force its way.

"I wish," said Tronchin, "that those who had been perverted by his writings had been present at his death. It was a sight too horrid to support."—Wm. Seward.

WHO IS OLD?—A wise man will never rust out. As long as he can move and breathe, he will do something for himself, his neighbor, or for posterity. Almost to the last hour of his life, Washington was at work. So were Franklin and Young, Howard and Newton. The vigor of their lives never decayed. No rust marred their spirits. It is a foolish idea to suppose that we must lie down and die because we are old. Who is old? Not the man of energy; not the day laborer in science, art or benevolence; but he only who suffers his energies to waste away and the springs of life to become motionless; on whose hands the hours drag heavily, to whom all things wear the garb of gloom. Is he old? is he active? can he breathe freely and move with agility? There are scores of grayheaded men we should prefer, in any important enterprise, to those young gentlemen who fear and tremble at approaching shadows, and turn pale, as at a lion in their path, at a harsh word or a frown.

WILL GOOD CHILDREN LIVE AGAIN?

"Will Lizzie and George Wood live again?" asked little Charlie L., when told that they were dead. This little girl and boy were two sweet children of Bro. Z. T. and Sister L. Wood, of Springfield, Vt., who died of diphtheria last August. Now, children, I want to tell you something about them.

Two years this present winter I visited in Bro. Wood's family. I loved the children very much, because they were so pretty, and also so good. They were very young then. Bro. Wood's family used to breakfast at six o'clock in the morning, which was very dark then. The children would get up and be washed and dressed for breakfast usually; if not, when the family went into the sitting-room to attend prayers, every one of them would come scrambling into the room, with joy sparkling in their eyes, and their faces all beaming with delight to be present at that time. They would all sit very still, for the most part; and when Bro. Wood had finished reading, they would all (four in number) kneel down beside their father and mother, and remain kneeling till prayers were over. Oh, what a lovely sight! Children, do you all kneel beside your parents when they pray at the family altar?

George, Freddie and Lizzie were the youngest. They generally held one prayer meeting every day. They would talk about Jesus, and how he would soon come, and would sing and pray, and then close their meeting. But George and Lizzie are dead. Their last childish prayer is offered,—their last talk about Jesus is over,—their pretty songs are sung, and they lie beneath the cold snows of winter. But I believe, when Jesus comes, they will sing again, never to die any more. Oh! yes, they will come from the cold ground to live again on the new earth.

Little Lizzie will come
 From the enemy's land,
With a crown on her head,
 And a harp in her hand;
In rapturous strains,
 With music so sweet,
Saying, suffer thy children
 To sit at thy feet.
And George, too, will rise
 When the trumpet shall sound;
And the slumbering millions
 Shall come from the ground,
All dazzlingly bright,
 'Mid that sacred throng,
Saying, I, too, will sing
 That rapturous song.

BRO. GRANT:—I do not feel competent to write for your paper, but my heart responds to the hint of my former and much loved pastor, D. T. Taylor, that we should all send our mite for the purpose of distributing tracts among those that know not God. I will send you twenty-five cents, and hope it will be blest of God, and be the means of bringing some poor sinner to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ.

I feel that I want to do all I can to advance the glorious doctrine of the coming of Christ. I am but a young disciple, a lamb in the fold. I am but fifteen years of age, and for two years have been trying to follow in the footsteps of my Master. Am beset by many temptations, but I find my Savior is ever ready to help me in the hour of trouble, for we are more than conquerors through Him that has loved us. I think it is high time that we should awake out of sleep, being prepared, with our lamps trimmed and burning, for in such an hour as we think not the Son of man cometh.

Dear children, let us have on the whole armor of God, that we may stand in that day. We should watch and pray, for we know not the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh. I want to be faithful to the end, when I know I shall receive a crown of glory, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me in that day.

KINDNESS TO PARENTS.

Not long since, writes a correspondent, as I took my seat in the cars for a day's ride, I observed, seated opposite me, an elderly lady and a middle-aged gentleman, who I inferred, from some casual remark, had been traveling a day or two. It was a very early hour in the morning, and the lady was apparently sleeping.

We rode in silence for some time, when the lady awoke, and I heard the gentleman address her as mother. His dignified, unobtrusive manner, and the tender, deferential tone of voice, at once drew my attention to them, and having no company, my thoughts were my own,

All the tender care which a mother could bestow on an infant child, was given by that son to his mother. The slightest movement on her part to adjust her furs, or cloak, or over-shoes, or any change of position, called forth his ready hand in assistance, and the inquiries, "Are you comfortable, mother? Do you feel tired? Lay your head on my shoulder, and rest yourself."

At noon the cars stopped for the passengers to obtain refreshments. It was snowing too fast for the mother to go out of the cars, and the son brought her a cup of coffee.

"Is it just right, mother?" he inquired, as she tasted it.

"A little more cream would make it better; it is, however, very good as it is," was her reply.

"Let me get you some more."

"No, my son—it will make you too much trouble; it is very good as it is."

He went out, and soon returned with the cream, and poured a little into the coffee, and then a little more, until it was "just right." He then sat down by her side, and I heard him say, in the same low tone of voice that at first attracted my attention, "I am glad, mother, that I can do anything to make you comfortable, it is such a pleasure to me."

"I thank you, my son," she replied, in the same spirit and tone of voice as that of her son.

Beautiful, thought I, as I quietly watched them, and saw manifested their mutual love and confidence. My mind went back to the time when this son, now in manhood's strength, was a little helpless infant, and I pictured that mother watching over him, caring for him with a solicitude such as mothers only can feel. And through all the years of childhood and youth, up to manhood, the watchful eye was over him, the guiding hand ever ready to lead, and a mother's love ever ready to restrain him from doing wrong. Now it is his turn, when life's meridian with her is past, and the infirmities of age are creeping on, to repay her, in some degree, for all the labor bestowed on him; and faithfully and affectionately did he seem fulfilling his duty. How many grown-up sons there are who seem to feel it beneath them to show any tenderness for their mothers! It is feminine, they say. They will perform acts of kindness, but in a business kind of way, or because it is their duty, little dreaming that they are crushing the maternal spirit by such cold, heartless acts.

Acts of kindness, done in the spirit manifested in the incident above mentioned, have an untold influence. The pathway down to the grave would be cheered, made even joyful, and old age would be exempt from much of the gloom that is often experienced.

The reflex influence is also great. A young man who is habitually tender of his mother, and deferential to her, will make a good citizen, a true friend, and will be faithful in all the walks of life.

A LITTLE LONGER.

A little longer watching,
And our vigils will be o'er,
And our barques, so long storm-driven,
Will be moored on Canaan's shore,
To brave life's storms no more.

A little longer weeping
O'er earth's sad scenes of woe,
Then borne by bright-winged angels,
To that city of light we'll go,
Where tears shall never flow.

A little longer toiling
In weariness and pain,
And then our cares all ended,
The heavenly land we'll gain,
And join the blood-washed train.

A little longer bearing
Our trials and our woes,
Then we'll roam the heavenly pastures,
Where life's pure water flows,
And the weary find repose.

A little longer mourning
For loved ones "who are not,"
Then will come the gathering angels,
And reap from each lone spot
The faithful long forgot.

A little longer praying—
Lord, let thy kingdom come,—
And then we'll hear him saying
To the faithful ones, Come home,
No more to watch, or weep, or roam!

DAY OF THE CRUCIFIXION.

(Concluded.)

So the Sabbath referred to in the passage is the fifteenth day of the first month, or day after the Passover. And as Christ was crucified on the Passover, it would have been the day after this Sabbath; and hence the reason why John, speaking of the closing scenes of the crucifixion, said, "The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies might not remain on the cross on the Sabbath, for that Sabbath was an high day, besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away." ch. 12: 31. It was a great or high day, because it was the yearly anniversary of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage; for they left Egypt on the morning after the Passover; (Exodus 12: 22–42,) and hence, on the fifteenth day of the first month, as Josephus testifies.

3. That he rose from the dead on the first day of the week, the combined testimony of the four gospels shows. Matthew's testimony reads thus, "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, to see the sepulchre. And, behold, there was a great earthquake, for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow, and for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men. And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus which was crucified. He is not here; for he has risen, as he said. Come see the place where the Lord lay. And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and behold he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him; lo, I have told you. And they departed quickly from the sepulchre, with fear and great joy, and did run to bring his disciples word. And as they went to tell his disciples, Jesus met them, saying, All hail! And they came and held him by the feet and worshiped him. Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid; go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me." ch. 28: 1–10.

Mark gives a similar account, but says that Salome came with them; and that they "came very early in the morning, the first day of the week, at the rising of the sun. And they said among themselves, who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre? And when they looked it was rolled away; for it was very great. And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted. And he said unto them, Be not afraid; ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified; he is risen: behold the place where they laid him." ch. 16: 1–6.

The account given by these two writers indicates that his resurrection took place when the women were approaching the sepulchre, For Matthew says nothing to indicate that it was before, but writes as though it took place as they drew nigh to the sepulchre. And Mark writes as though the stone was rolled away while they were inquiring about the necessity of its being done. Moreover, he says in verse 16, "Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week he appeared first to Mary Magdalene;" and the Greek word rendered "early," signifies early in the morning. So he was raised early in the morning of the first day of the week and on the evening before, as some might infer. But John says that when Mary Magdalene saw that the stone was rolled away she ran and told him and Peter that his body had been stolen. She probably left her companions and ran to them for help under that impression. And they ran to the sepulchre to see if there was any foundation for the story; and taking a hasty view of the vacant tomb, and the grave-clothes as they were cast aside by the risen Christ, they left again, leaving Mary at the sepulchre weeping; and then Christ appeared to her. Her companions might then discover her return, and take courage and approach the sepulchre; and the angel might then address them all collectively, and tell them that he was risen, while Mary could confirm it, and then all leave together to tell his disciples, and while on the way Christ could appear to them, as Matthew says he did. So any seeming discrepancy in the different accounts, arises not from any real contradiction in the testimony, but because the events were hurried and crowded together, through the intense excitement of the persons with whom the events were involved. So while one writer testifies to what one saw and did, and another to what another saw, both separately and together, the facts are to be understood in harmony, and not arrayed against one another. But there is no chance to question his resurrection on the first day of the week; for in this the writers all agree.

4. That the day he arose was the third day after he was crucified, is proved by the testimony of Luke. For he testifies that on the same day on which he arose from the dead, the two disciples who were going to Emmaus said to the risen Savior, not knowing him, "Art thou a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days? And he said unto them, What things? And they said unto him, Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God and all the people; and how the chief priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him. But we trusted that it had been he that should have redeemed Israel; and besides all this, to-day is the third day since these things were done." ch. 24: 13–21.

He could not, therefore, have been crucified on Friday, for in that case, the day on which he arose would be only the second day "since these things were done." But as it was "the third day since these things were done," he must have been crucified Thursday. And as it was on the Passover, their yearly Sabbath would have begun that night at sunset, when their sixth day of the week began. So that night and Friday would be one day; Friday night and Saturday, two days; Saturday night and Sunday morning, when he arose, would be "the third day since these things were done." For we cannot reckon the day he was crucified, as the first day "since," no more than we could reckon it the day before he died. Neither have we a right to claim any part of the day he was crucified as a day since, for although he died at about three o'clock in the afternoon, his crucifixion was not completed till the close of the day. For, according to Luke, they had only time enough to take him down from the cross, and lay him in the sepulchre close by where he was crucified, before the Sabbath began, which begins at sunset with the Jews. ch. 23: 54. For the phrase, "the Sabbath drew on," in the reference, is, literally, "began to shine," according to the Cottage Bible. The Greek is sabbaton epephoske. Therefore, the evidence is clear, that he was crucified on Thursday, and that his crucifixion was not completed until that day ended.

The opinion that he was crucified the day before the seventh day Sabbath, derives a little strength from the fact that his resurrection is said to have been "in the end of the Sabbath as it began to dawn towards the first day day of the week;" from whence the inference comes that it was the same Sabbath day which followed the crucifixion. But in the Greek Testament the word Sabbath is the only word used to denote what we call a week. So the inference is not well grounded, because the term is not only used to denote the week itself, as well as the seventh day, but is also applied to certain days which were liable in successive years to fall on every day of the week. Lev. 23: 24, 32, 39. And inference like that does not possess much force, seeing it is against positive evidence to the contrary. For the evidence shows that he was raised from the dead on Sunday, and that it was "the third day since" he was crucified; and that therefore he was crucified on Thursday; and hence the Sabbath which followed could not have been the seventh-day Sabbath, but the yearly Sabbath, or day after the Passover.

Now our Lord himself said, "The Son of man shall be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth," Matt. 12: 40, and as there are but two nights between Friday and Sunday, he could not have been crucified on Friday. For the phrase, "three days and three nights," is a literal word for word rendering of the Greek, and is in reverse order to the Greek term nuchthemeron—night-day. Hence if there were only two nights during which he was to have remained dead, our Lord's regard for truth would have led him to have said, "three days" and two nights; especially when it was just as easy of utterance. For to reckon the day on which he died, as a day and night thereafter, (which is the reckoning required on the supposition that it was on Friday,) makes a grand muddle with arithmetic; for on that principle of reckoning the days and nights of a week can be doubled. And one might as well reckon the day he rose, as a day and night thereafter, as to reckon the day he died as a day and night after he died. It will be noticed that the days are made to precede the "nights," contrary to the Jewish order of the natural day—evening-morning. Hence admitting that he was crucified on Thursday, and that he died "about the ninth hour," and reckoning the remaining part of that day, we have to Sunday morning, "three days," wherein he remained dead; and thence, reckoning back the "three nights" carry us back to that day as the day on which he died for the sin of the world.

"ALL LIVE UNTO GOD."—No. 2.

The law and the penalty,—the transgression and condemnation.

But if the patriarchs and the prophets be dead, how can it be said that "all live unto him"? That is the very thing, by the help of God's word, that we shall endeavor to set forth in a true and clear light.

When God had created man and placed him in the Eden state, he gave to him a law by which his actions were to be governed; and to give that precept force he attached thereunto a penalty, in case it should be violated. The rule of action only demanded obedience; and, so long as this was rendered, free access to the tree of life "in the midst of the garden" was tolerated. But the added penalty of the law required of the transgressor a forfeiture of life for its violation. This forfeiture was incurred by Adam's disobeying the injunction; but no sooner had his disobedience worked a forfeiture, than the attribute of God's justice, under the allegorical representation of a "flaming sword which turned every way," stepped right in between Adam and the "tree of life," lest man, as a sinner, should "put forth his hand and take and eat of the fruit of the tree of life," and, as a consequence, "live forever." This God would not permit; man could not then have access to that tree, in disobedience; neither can man now have free access to the same tree, except he break off his sins by right doing and come back to God in obedience to the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. Unless we do thus eat of the fruit of the tree of life, you nor I can no more live forever than could Adam; for when God drove Adam forth from the garden, away from the tree, he carried the whole human family out with him, for as yet the race were in Adam's loins, and passed in him from a just to an unjust state of condemnation. Wherefore, as Paul says in Rom. 5: 12, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed—was transmitted—upon all men, for that all have sinned (18th); therefore—as—by the offence of one, judgment—sentence—came upon all men to condemnation."

Now Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were the posterity of Adam, and, as like begets its like, they partook of his fallen—mortal and corruptible—nature, which was as "prone to do evil as the sparks are to fly upward," and had, like Adam, to pay the penalty,—they died.

Just so long as men remain in obedience to God, they are called "the sons of God"; but no sooner do they yield themselves to transgress his laws, than they cease to be his children; but selling themselves by disobedience, they become the servants of sin,—God ceases to be their God, and they are by him denominated the children of evil, and are in bonds to death.

The whole Adamic race being in this condition, and sentence of death having been already passed upon the whole race in Adam, the whole race were forensically or legally esteemed dead to God's law; and there being no power in or of themselves to ransom themselves from death, they should have eternally remained in it had not some scheme been devised, in the counsels of the Deity, to bring them again from the dead, that they might be his people and he be their God. To accomplish this, life must again somehow be given them without interfering with the administration of justice; for he is as much the God of justice, truth, and goodness, as he is the God of the living and not of the dead.

Hence man's life was no sooner forfeited to the penal demand of a broken law, than the love of compassion in the divine Being moved him at once, in pronouncing the judgment, to put in "a stay of execution or respite; and, during the term of stay, place man upon a probationary state of existence, by which he might attain to another life by some other means than by the works of the flesh, for this had already proved itself 'weak'; for if there had been a law given which could have given life, then righteousness should have been by that law." That appointed means was "the seed of the woman," elsewhere called the seed of Abraham, which, Paul says, was Christ, who was not himself justified by the works of the flesh, but put to death therein and justified by the Spirit. 1 Pet. 3: 18.

Having now found that Adam could and did by his disobedience so far change the state and condition of all his posterity as to take them from a JUST to an unjust state, and carry them all out of the garden, and away from the tree of life, and cause them in that state to be cut off from all access to it, and thereby entailed mortality and death upon the entire race, independent of any act of theirs, let us now try, so far as we can, to ascertain what Christ has done, how he did it, and what he purposes to do; "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved. He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." John 3: 16–18.

We are already informed that God—the Father—is not a God of the dead; but we are also taught that Christ "is Lord of both the dead and living." Rom. 14: 9. Some man may say that while the Father is not the God of any dead, the Son is Lord only of both dead and living saints; well, that may be so, and, in a sense, I believe is so; nevertheless, I believe every soul of Adam's race, dead or alive, are his by purchase, whether saint or sinner; for while "we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly"; and the commendation of God's love to us is found in the fact "that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." And God, calling on them that set up images and "pray unto a God that cannot save," says, "Look unto me and be ye saved, all ye ends of the earth." "As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God." (See Phil. 2: 6–11, quoted from Isa. 45: 23.). These may be all saints' knees and tongues; if so, the Lord be praised that all shall be saved at last; but to me this seems doubtful, for I find that even a brother, for whom Christ unquestionably paid the purchase of his blood, may be destroyed through another brother's eating meat offered to an idol. But if he died for all, Paul says then "were all dead," and if he died for all dead and all alive, then he is Lord both of the dead and living.

We have dwelt longer on this point than we should, were it not that objections will be raised as to Christ's being Lord of sinners as well as saints, dead or alive; and we choose to anticipate them.

LINES.

A few more tears lone mourners here will shed
O'er loved ones slumbering with the silent dead,
And then immortal tongues will sing—
"Where is thy victory, grave, and death, thy sting?"

A few more times the little band will meet
To bow together 'neath the "mercy seat;"
Remembrance' book will then declare
Who shall be gathered with the jewels rare.

A few more days the sleeping world we'll warn
Of future wrath and judgments soon to come;
And then when comes destruction's sword,
We'll not be guilty of our brother's blood.

A few more days the ready ones will wait,
And then with joy the coming Savior greet,
Remove with Him to mansions of the blest,
Earth's sorrows end in everlasting rest.

O christian! gird the armor close to thee,
Press onward to thy certain victory;
"Be of good cheer," and thou shalt overcome,
And sit with conquerors on the holy throne.

REPENTANCE, OR DESTRUCTION.

The above sentence presents an alternative pre-eminently great. It involves the deepest interest of man, giving to each individual the choice of life or death. If repentance be neglected, destruction is inevitable.

How readest thou? Luke 13: 3,—"Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Ezekiel 18: 4,—"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." 1 Thess. 1: 9,—"Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction." Ps. 1: 6,—"The way of the ungodly shall perish." Ps. 2: 8, 9,—"Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." Obadiah 16,—"Be as though they had not been."

The above Scriptures, to my mind, teach conclusively that the wicked shall come to an end and that end is death; and not, as was remarked, not long since, in the pulpit of a noted church in this city; "Die a death that shall never die; live in everlasting conscious torments, and suffer different degrees of punishment forever and ever, according to the sins committed here." The apostle, speaking of Christ, says (Heb. 2: 14), "that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." Again in 1 John 3: 8,—"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." Can any one doubt these two texts of Scripture mean that Christ will destroy the devil and his works, and the children of the devil? God is a merciful being. He has devised a plan whereby all might be saved, by adhering to the conditions of repentance and faith towards God.

The wicked shall receive their wages, they shall be punished, and not be under the necessity of enduring a severe punishing to all ages of eternity. "For the wages of sin is death." Rom. 6: 23. "Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example." 1 Peter 2: 21. "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." 1 Cor. 15: 3.

If, then, to remain in "everlasting conscious torments" is the penalty for sin, instead of death, Christ must have failed to accomplish the object he designed; for he died, and was not in a state of consciousness; hence, he could not have been in a suffering condition while dead. Neither was Christ left in the power of death forever, but was raised from the dead to life again, by the Spirit of God. "For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and of the living." Rom. 14: 9. Bless the name of the Lord, we have the "sure word of prophecy," foretelling the Savior's life, death, and resurrection, and the blessed words of inspiration by the mouths of the apostles concerning the fulfillment of the life, death, and resurrection of our dear Redeemer.

God's manner of government under the old dispensation was as follows: "When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them, for his iniquity he hath done, shall he die." Again, "When the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive." Ezekiel 18: 26, 27. Here we see how God anciently dealt with his people. If they turned from wrong to right, and continued in the right, they should not die, but live. But if they turn from right to wrong, and continue in transgression, they shall surely die. To live and die in transgression, or to live and die in a state of righteousness, seems to have been left optional with the people.

In such a mode of government is not God's mercy clearly exhibited upon the principle of pardon? And is not his justice as clearly exhibited upon the principle of reward? Is not this the method of his government under the new or gospel dispensation? The system of salvation by the gospel has clearly revealed that God will be merciful to and save all that call upon him. "For whosoever calleth upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." Rom. 10: 13. At the same time it reveals that those who continue in sin and rebellion are justly condemned, and that the justice of God can only be satisfied in their suffering the full demerit of their crimes. "Whose damnation is just." Rom. 3: 8.

Repentance is the first principle of sound doctrine, as taught by the Author of eternal salvation, to all them that obey him. It is a duty binding upon all who have sinned and come short of the glory of God. This includes the whole of Adam's posterity. The alternative presented is one of no small moment. It is of such importance to man, that upon it hangs their eternal all. Angels view it with such an interest as to fill heaven with divine acclamations of joy, at the sight of a repenting sinner. Men whose eyes are in a measure opened to view things in their true light, cannot but view it with feelings of the deepest interest. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near; let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." Isa. 55: 6, 7.

By repentance towards God, the penitent is prepared to exert a salutary influence through life, which would be otherwise if repentance by him had been neglected. It is certain that all persons are exerting their characteristic influence. "One sinner destroyeth much good." The divine injunction remains obligatory upon us, to "take heed unto the doctrine," in order to save ourselves as well as those around us who are brought directly under our influence. 1 Tim. 4: 16.

I praise the name of the Lord, that the common people may "know of the doctrine, whether it be of God." And when I reflect upon the inferential testimony that is often brought up to prove creed-doctrines, I say, give me a "thus saith the Lord." "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isa. 8: 20. Oh! the awful darkness that hangs over the nominal church in these last days; instead of coming out and taking a stand on the safe doctrinal platform of positive declarations, which are taught in the inspired oracles of God, they are trusting their safety too much upon a rotten platform of creeds, and inferential testimonies. Oh that there might be a coming out, for soon there will be a sifting time, a shaking time, when all that can be will be shaken.

Who shall be able to stand in that great day? Who will lift up their heads and rejoice when the day of their redemption draweth nigh? They who put their whole trust in the living God. Happy are they who shall patiently wait for the coming of the Lord Jesus; and if called to sleep a little while, can exclaim, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; thy rod and thy staff, they shall comfort me." Ps. 23: 4. And in prospect sing, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" assured they shall see their Father's face in peace, and be satisfied when they shall awake in his likeness. Praise ye the Lord!

HOLINESS TO THE LORD.—NO. 2.

Can you box up lightning—the Amighty's flash? Well, then, box up holiness to the Lord, the doctrine of purity, or perfect love. Box up one, the other as soon.

Put down holiness? put down heaven, angels, glorified spirits—Omnipotence himself.

Friend, it is hard to kick against the pricks, you find it so. Saul of Tarsus did. Raise your puny arm against God's truth, the Bible, "holiness to the Lord" in this life, freedom of body, mind, and soul. Do it, but rest assured God will frowm on your vain attempts. Truth is mighty and will prevail. The ashes of the martyrs produce a plentiful crop.

Man, who art thou, that repliest against God? He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh at you. The Lord will have you in derision. By-and-bye he will speak unto you in his wrath, and vex you in his sore displeasure. How easily and speedily can God break you with a rod of iron, dash you in pieces like a potter's vessel! Be wise, therefore, O ye that close the lips of your brethren, God's little ones—be instructed, ye who reject the counsel of the Most High. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. "Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little."

"The Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge." "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

"O glorious hope of perfect love!
It lifts me up to things above;
It bears on eagle's wings;
It gives my ravished soul a taste,
And makes me for some moments feast
With Jesus, priests and kings."

"HOLINESS TO THE LORD."

Put it out; keep it out? Can you stop the glorious king of day, stay his goings forth from one end of heaven to the other? or close the mouth of Vesuvius? Then, may be, in some humble measure, you will succeed in crushing out the pure word of life, the higher christian walks, the entire transformation of souls into the blessed image of the Lord Jesus. The work of holiness: God is in it. Touch it by the way of opposition, you touch the apple of his eye! When you lift your puny arm against Bible holiness, you fight against Omnipotence, the King of kings, the Lord of lords. Beware how you touch this work of God, or attempt to steady it. Think of Uzzah, "he put forth his hand to the ark, and took hold of it. . . . And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Uzzah, and God smote him there for his error." 2 Sam. 6: 6.

Stay the onward progress of glory on glory? Presumptuous man! Turn, twist, screw, throw cold water—still the fire will out, kindle afresh, burn hotter and hotter. Do your utmost to keep out or smother this superlative grace, it will burst out increasingly, here, there, all about. Hush the gentle breezes, stop the sun in his course, conceal his glorious effulgence at mid-day—can you? As soon blot out the planetary systems, the starry firmament, quench the glowing fires of heaven, as the burning love of God in the sanctified soul. Close the lips of those enjoying the sweets of this redeeming, sanctifying grace, you do it to your own confusion. All you can say and do in opposition to a holy, consecrated life, will return upon you like the stone of Sysiphus, with shame upon your own head.

It is too late in the day for editors, ministers, bishops, elders, deacons, and class leaders to shut out these glorious beams of heavenly day, to put this gospel light under a bushel. "Holiness to the Lord" is a candle on a candlestick, giving light to all in the house; a city set on a hill which cannot be concealed. Beware, friend, how you fight against God, offend one of these little ones, place a stumbling-block in the way of the least of his disciples. Better a thousand times hang a millstone about your neck, plunge henceforth into the depths of the sea.

"This slumber from thy spirit shake;
Warned by the Spirit's inward call,
Be thou to righteousness awake,
And pray that you may never fall;
Nor give to sin or Satan place,
But walk in all God's righteous ways."

REPORT OF THE DISCUSSION

Held at Stanbridge, C. E., Feb. 10th to Feb. 13th, 1863, between ELDER MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, and REV. DENNIS CHAPIN, Universalist Missionary of the District of Bedford, C. E.

WRITTEN BY C. P. DOW.

Friday morning.—Prayer by Elder Grant.

ELDER GRANT'S FIRST SPEECH.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—By consulting my friend on the negative, I learn that he will not consent to the continuance of this discussion beyond the nine sessions already arranged for, therefore I shall be obliged to omit many important arguments which might be used to prove the probability of Christ's second advent taking place during or within the nineteenth century.

My friend has made a point of the language found in Rev. 19: 7;—"Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." This is after Babylon is "thrown down and found no more at all." Was this done in the first century? Then perhaps the marriage of the Lamb took place then. But the marriage of the Lamb to "the bride the Lamb's wife," the saints of all ages, "arrayed in fine linen clean and white," which "is the righteousness of saints," cannot take place until the Bridegroom comes, and the saints, "the quick and the dead," are gathered unto him, which will be when he comes "the second time without sin (a sin-offering) unto (or for the purpose of) salvation." This event is certainly future. Rome still exists, but her overthrow is near, as we have shown, and the marriage of the Lamb about to take place.

My friend complains that when I was proving the personal first advent, I turned to the Scriptures, but that in order to prove the second personal advent in the nineteenth century, I have to refer to human history. No inspired history has been written since John wrote, hence if we would see the fulfillment of prophecy, we must consult human history, which is generally reliable. He says history should be inspired to make it proof. We ask, must history be inspired to prove the American Revolution? or the declaration of Independence in 1776? Have we any inspired history to prove that Titus destroyed Jerusalem about A. D. 70? I am astonished that he should repudiate all uninspired history. He seems to intimate that I am against Christ. No, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to be. He claims that I am against Luther and Melancthon, against the church, because I have quoted prophecy, and its fulfillment by the apostate church of Rome. He says he shall stand up for his Romish brethren. Well, he may if he chooses, I shall "stand up for Jesus" and his truth, but never for his enemies.

We, shall now call attention to the signs of the end foretold in prophecy, for, as certainly as we are right about the Napoleon dynasty, as we have explained it, the marriage of the Lamb, which takes place at its overthrow, must take place within the present century. Napoleon, who is now fifty-five years old, cannot live through the present century, and prophecy indicates him as the wonderful man who is the head of the power that is to carry the woman of Rev. 17th chapter to judgment. We will now turn to Matt. 24: 33, and parallel places in Luke 21. Let us commence with Matt. 24: 29;—

"Immediately AFTER the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. Now learn a parable of the fig tree; when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh; so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it (margin, he) is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you this generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." Luke 21: 28;—"And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." 31st verse;—"So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."

Now observe, the signs mentioned herald the coming of the Son of man with the clouds of heaven, the sending forth of his angels to gather his elect; when they appear redemption is nigh,—"the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." And the signs here predicted occur immediately after a certain "tribulation." Now it is important that we locate that tribulation. My friend claims that it was fulfilled at the destruction of Jerusalem. Let us see if that is possible. Could it have been fulfilled there? See Matt. 24: 21, 22;—"For then shall be GREAT TRIBULATION, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

This, then, was to be the great tribulation, greater than had been before it, greater than should be after it, the greatest of its kind; and it appears from what we have read, it comes upon the elect, or the church of God. Now, how about the tribulation at Jerusalem's destruction? It must come upon either the righteous or the wicked. Upon the righteous it did not come, for they all escaped when Cestius Gallus withdrew the forces from Jerusalem for a short time, as if to give them an opportunity of obeying Christ's direction. Luke 21: 20, 21;—"When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out." History records that not one believer in Christ perished in that siege. That tribulation did not come upon believers or the elect, then, but on unbelievers. But was it greater than had been before? Nay, more perished at the time of the flood. It is estimated that as many perished then, as the present population of the earth. Was not the distress at the flood greater than at Jerusalem's destruction, when 1,100,000 perished?

Again, we are informed of a greater tribulation to come upon the wicked at the end of this dispensation, than either the one at the flood or at Jerusalem's destruction. At the time of the flood they sought to save their lives, and only sank in the water when compelled to do so. So at Jerusalem's destruction, they sought to save their lives, and some did by going over to the Romans. But at the end, the tribulation will be so great, that men in utter despair will call for death, saying "to the mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?"—Rev. 6: 16, 17. Some other tribulation must be meant, one upon the church, and, although a great tribulation was experienced by the church under pagan Rome during the second and third centuries in which more than three millions perished, yet we find that the tribulation worthy to be called the "Great Tribulation," the greatest of all, commenced in the sixth century under the dominancy of the "Harlot" woman, and continued for centuries, until more than fifty millions were cruelly slain; so that it might well be said that "except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved." Then "immediately after" the signs appear, as we have read to you. Now do not let my opponent get over the little word AFTER in this connection. When he does get over it, take notice how he does it.

Where did the Great Tribulation end? Where the Harlot woman lost the power to put the saints to death. This took place in 1798. What immediately follows? In 1780 the sun was supernaturally darkened. We will give the account of the fulfillment of this sign, as written by impartial witnesses. We quote some extracts:—

"The nineteenth of May, 1780, was a remarkable dark day. Candles were lighted in many houses. The birds were silent and disappeared. The fowls retired to roost. It was the general opinion that the day of judgment was at hand. The legislature of Connecticut was in session at Hartford, but, being unable to transact business, adjourned."—President Dwight in Conn. His. Collections.

"In the month of May, 1780, there was a very terrific dark day in New England, when all faces seemed to gather blackness, and the people were filled with fear."—Life of Edward Lee, of Mass.

Elam Potter preached from Matt. 24: 29-30, about a week after the dark day, and says, when referring to it:—

"Then, as in our text, the sun was darkened. Such a darkness as was probably never known since the crucifixion of our Lord."

Another historian says, "It was as dark at noon, as it is an hour after sunset in a cloudy day." It is quite dark an hour after sunset in a clear day; but in a cloudy day, it would be such darkness as was never known before or since the Christian dispensation. Thus we have the first sign accomplished that was to indicate that the second coming of Christ "is near." (Time expired.)

FRIDAY MORNING.

Mr. Chapin's First Speech.

Mr. Moderator, Ladies and Gentlemen:—My friend thinks he has established the fact, that the woman spoken of in the 18th chapter of the book of Revelation, is the Roman Catholic church. Now we have shown that this woman was somehow connected with the blood of the apostles. But why does he think that this woman symbolizes the Roman Catholic church? Was there not an ecclesia or church polity in the Pagan world? We say the beast represents a civil polity. But my friend quotes history again. I want to ask, What can we know by history? Does he expect that we will receive all of his history? We shall object to his history. We call attention to the Scriptures. We don't care what historians say. Let us read the Scriptures. Matt 24: 3;—"And as he sat on the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" The first and second verses will inform us. "And Jesus went out, and departed from the temple; and his disciples came to him for to show him the buildings of the temple. And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things?" Verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." Hence you see they were inquiring about Jerusalem's destruction, about something that concerned them, not about events that would not take place until the nineteenth century. Therefore Christ said (fourth verse), "Take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many." You perceive that all my friend has done was to read Christ's explanation of his own words, and quote a little more history concerning a dark day that happened sometime.

He has quoted something about calling for rocks and mountains to fall on them; if the apostles are to be in Judea crawling about the mountains, I want to ask, where shall we go? Jesus uttered no new prophecy. The prophecy is to be fulfilled literally. If the earth is to be all burned up, where shall we go? Why talk about the mountains protecting us? He has told you about the tribulation, and says that it was since the destruction of Jerusalem. Does Jesus say so? He pretends to tell the number slain. He says the tribulation at the flood was greater than at Jerusalem's destruction, and there has been a greater one since, and there will be another greater still. Let us see what Jesus says about it; he is good authority.

Mark 13: 13–24:—"And ye shall be hated by all men for my name's sake: but he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved. But when ye shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing where it ought not, (let him that readeth understand), THEN let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains: And let him that is on the housetop not go down into the house, neither enter therein, to take any thing out of his house; and let him that is in the field not turn back again for to take up his garment. But woe to them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days. For IN THOSE DAYS (let us understand it), shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created unto this time, neither shall be." Now we want to ask our candid hearers who is right? Is Jesus right? He must be right. Then my friend is wrong. There can be no doubt about it. 20th verse;—"And except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved: but for the elect's sake, whom he hath chosen, he hath shortened the days." 21st verse;—"And then if any man shall say to you, Lo, here is Christ; or, lo, he is there; believe him not."

Who is right? It reads, "And in THOSE days," and "And THEN in those days." Is not my friend answered about the word tribulation? Who are the elect? Is Jesus or the history right?

23d verse;—"But take YE heed: behold, I have foretold YOU all things." Did he tell any one else? Verses 24–29;—"But in THOSE days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light. And the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory. And then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven. Now learn a parable of the fig tree: when her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near: so ye in like manner, when ye SHALL see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors." Did they see these things? My friend says they did not. Who is right? Is Jesus right? We presume he is right. Mark 13: 34–37;—"For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning: lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, watch." We want to know why watch if he was not coming? Would an householder do so? Where was Christ when he spake these words? In Judea. The prophecy did not go beyond Judea,—it did not go beyond Judea. We say prophecy did not go beyond the first century. It does not travel down to the nineteenth century. Here it is proved my friend is mistaken.

We have seen that his history is imperfect. He was more confident that he was right in 1843 than he is now. And he was mistaken then. But what did they rely upon then as proof? Upon the same history that he quotes now with so much confidence. Where are the wise? They are to understand. But they did not in 1843. They are not the wise then. Why did Christ order his apostles to watch, unless it was necessary for them to be on their guard? The question reads, "Tell us, when shall these things be?" Did he not tell them? It must have concerned them therefore.

We have called attention to the Scriptures. We have not referred to human history at all. The question is, "Do the Scriptures teach?" Unless God's words are better than the words of man, there is no use in referring to them. If they are better, then I have the question. I think I have the argument, although my friend has said that, unless we can prove the Scriptures by History, we cannot believe them. He thinks we must not believe in inspiration unless we have the history. Here we see something wrong, something that strikes us with great force. Let us refer to the Scriptures again. Mark 13: 9–11;—"But take heed to yourselves: for they shall deliver you up to councils; and in the synagogues ye shall be beaten; and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them. And the gospel must first be published among all nations. But when they shall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate: but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye; for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost." Was it not to take place in their lifetime, then? "But he that shall endure unto the end, shall be saved." Unto what end? Unto the end of the age. Nothing can be plainer. Did not all these things come upon that generation? My friend wishes them to go beyond the end.

Daniel's prophecy had reference to the first century. All the prophecies were fulfilled in that century. They were fulfilled in the place where they were proclaimed. Can any thing go beyond the end? (Time expired.)

THE CLERGY AND THE WAR.

The change that has taken place in the talk and preaching of the clergy since the war began is remarkable. Previous to the war, they advocated peace principles, and now the opposite. Do principles change? If not, then one of the two positions must be wrong, as they are antagonistic to each other. Which is right? Said Jesus, "Blessed are the peacemakers." We find the whole New Testament in harmony with this saying of our Savior. And certainly, if the peace principles are ever needed, they are never more so than in war times like these. We admit it is more crossing at the present period to stand up for peace principles, when the popular voice is for war, but the faithful minister of the gospel has no liberty to bow to the popular voice.

The following, from one of our exchanges, is a very true representation of the present state of things:—

"Before this horrible war burst upon the country, the clergy North and South, of all sects, claimed to be apostles of peace. They preached against war as unnecessary, barbarous, wicked and cruel. Every pulpit in the land has echoed with fervent appeals for doing away with all wars and substituting arbitration or the establishing of a Peace Congress to settle all controversies in accordance with the peaceful and benign principles of christianity. They prayed that swords might be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning-hooks. They contended that cruel war has ever receded and would continue to recede just in proportion to the advancing progress of civilization and christianity. They taught us to pray for the millennial time, when wars shall be known no more among men; but the moment the flames of war lighted up between sections of our once peaceful, glorious, happy union, they, with scarcely an exception, arrayed themselves on the side of their respective sections, and instantly became the most urgent advocates of war. During these three years of terrible slaughter, the clergy of the South and the North have been among the most intemperate in urging on the work of horror, and to-day he who ventures to advocate, in either section, a return of peace, by an honorable adjustment, is denounced by the clergy as a traitor to his country, an enemy to humanity and christianity.

When we had peace they professed to delight in peace, and to desire the continuance of its blessings; to hate war and its barbarities; but when we have war, and peace principles become necessary and of some practical utility, then they become the most frenzied advocates of war. Between the members of no profession or class in this country is there at this time a greater feeling of uncharitableness, vindictiveness, hatred and passion than between the clergy, north and south. Instead of seeking to quiet the angry passions of men, and trying to calm the storm, and stop the dreadful work of desolation, carnage and death, as from their position and former professions we should have a right to expect them to do, we see them each in their respective sections justifying, or trying to justify themselves and charging all the sin and wrong upon their opponents, urging on the dreadful conflict, goading on the combatants, and with arms outstretched to heaven, imploring a God of mercy and purity to bestow upon the respective armies of their sections, power to hurl destruction and death at the other, and carry distress and woe to the hearthstones of their opponents, members of one common country.

O, for a clergy, north and south, that would be true to principles of the Prince of Peace in the hour when those principles are needed, a clergy that would seek to save rather than destroy, that would endeavor to calm the angry passions of men, and stay the storm of destruction, instead of adding to our calamities by ministering to the evil passions, and fanning the flames of cruel war."

THE HISTORY OF AN IMMORTAL SOUL.

The above is the title of a new tract of thirty pages, published by Bro. S. S. Brewer. It is an excellent work, and should have a wide circulation. Price, single, 8 cts., postage 2 cts.

The following is an extract from the work, taken from a London publication, issued in 1823. It will pay for a careful reading:—

"The belief of an immortal principle in man stands connected, under some modes of explanation, with all nations, at all periods of history, and under every state of society; forming an important part of all systems of theology, except, as Mr. Lawrence states, the Jewish, and he ought to have added the christian. But as he, in common with his opponents, has not done this, but places the christian doctrine of a future life upon the same ground as the Platonic or Egyptian, it will be my peculiar object to demonstrate the fallacy of their assertions; and to prove, in the first place, that the future state of the christian is as inconsistent with, and opposed to, Mr. Lawrence's 'sublime doctrine of all ages,' as his able lectures are to the puny production of Mr. Abernethy; and, in the second, to demonstrate the vital injury which christianity has sustained from the attempt to incorporate its truths with the heathen schemes of futurity. These latter naturally enough originated in the speculative powers of the human mind, when engaged upon the inequality of human conditions and the gloomy contemplation of an extinction of being: as death was seen to terminate our bodily existence, it was a natural step to set about devising the means by which it might be possible that man should survive this event; and as experience demonstrated that our bodies, when dead, were resolved into dust, and incapable, as it appeared, of reanimation, yet, notwithstanding this inevitable inference, the case was fortunately not hopeless; for since the existence of shadows presented the symbol of a form without a body, and yet exhibiting the form of the body from which it sprung; it was not, perhaps, difficult to conceive some finer and more subtile composition, in which might consist that life to which men cling even in death. Thus these immature efforts, aided by the speculations of what was called philosophy, were nurtured by the learned—venerated by the vulgar; and being suited to the quackery of the schools, and the selfish interest of the priests, they became venerable from age, and formidable in authority—from Plato to Aquinas, from Descartes downward even to Abernethy and the 'Christian Advocate;' but history has ever shown us that speculation upon man's future hopes and condition, however venerable from antiquity or imposing from authority, have, when not derived from the christian revelation, been wild, extravagant, and generally immoral—giving a sanction to practices which debase our nature, and sink men to a low degree of ignorance and depravity.

The Indians, the Chaldeans, and the Egyptians—but more generally the latter—are supposed to have originated, not, as will be shown, the immaterial soul as defined in modern times, but that to which this hypothesis is mainly indebted. The Greek historians say, 'that the Egyptians were the first who maintained that the soul of man is immortal; that when the body dies it enters into that of some other animal; and that when it has transmigrated through all terrestrial, marine, and flying animals, it returns to the body of a man again.' The funeral rites of the Egyptians are supposed to have aided their speculation, as they embalmed their dead bodies, which they deposited in subterranean grottos, where they were supposed to live thousands of years. The Persians, according to the oracles of Zoroaster, believed that all souls were produced from one fire, and therefore partook of the nature of the element from which they sprung. The Chinese consider the soul to be air—to be material, but highly rarified.

The Stoics taught the soul to be a hot fiery blast. Other sects of heathen philosophers, a hot complexion. Others, the harmony of the four elements. Democritus contended that the soul was made up of round atoms, incorporated by air and fire. Some believed that the soul was aerial—some that it was earthy. According to some of the eminent men among the Greeks, the soul of the universe was a vapor, or exhalation from the moist elements; so the souls from animals were vapors from their own bodies. Of those among them who considered the soul incorporeal, some asserted that it was a substance and immortal; whilst others believed that it was neither. Thales taught that it was always in motion, and itself the origin of that motion. Pythagoras contended that it was a self-moving monad, or number. Plato that it was a substance conceivable only by the understanding, and moving according to harmony and number. Aristotle 'that it was the first continual motion of a body natural, having in it those instrumental parts wherein was possibility of life.' The Manicheans taught that there is but one universal soul, which is distributed in portions to all bodies. Plato believed in the existence of this universal soul—supposed that all things lived by its influence, but that those only were living creatures that had separate souls: and it was generally held by the Greeks and other heathen nations, that man was composed of three parts, his body being derived from the earth—his soul from the moon—his spirit from the sun; and that, after death, each of these returned to its proper origin. Even Pythagoras and Plato, to follow whom Mr Abernethy, as a christian, thinks it a great honor, taught that there were two souls—one a celestial substance, or the rational soul—the other the material soul, being the seat of the passions, and that both these souls were united to the body; whilst Aristotle (another pillar in Mr. Abernethy's creed) taught that there were three souls, all distinct, as to essence and substantiality, yet in one body, viz., a rational, a vegetative, and a sensitive soul—two of which act, before the rational soul is induced into the body; and, after that event has taken place, then those two cease to act at all.

Mr. Stanley, in his Lives of the Ancient Philosophers, places souls in the next rank to demons—but under three classes: first, souls separate from matter, called supercelestial intelligences; secondly, souls inseparable from matter; thirdly, rational souls of a middle kind, immaterial, incorporeal, and consequently immortal, having a self-generate and self-animate existence—proceeding from the paternal mind, seated in the moon, and sent down to the earth, either by the reason of the flagging of its wings, or in obedience to the will of the Father. He believes that the soul of man will clasp God to herself; that the paternal mind soweth symbols in the soul, and the soul being a bright fire, by the power of the Father, remaineth immortal, and is mistress of life.

The pre-existence of souls, and their transmigration, forms the prominent features in these several hypotheses; although, in relation to the latter, some variety of explanation occurs: those who believe in only one species of soul, making it pass indiscriminately into the bodies of plants and animals; others two kinds, and others as many as three species of organized structures. Jamblicus confined his transmigration to those of the same species, contending that every soul had a species of structure exactly suited to its own faculties. Plato arranged souls into three classes, and assigned a separate residence to each, placing the first in the belly, the second in the chest, the third in the head. Some considered that the soul, after its separation, remained without a body. Others gave it a body and sent it to the clouds—to the stars—to some happier region; and some, to the regions in the bowels of the earth. Most (like our modern immaterialists) taught that the body was a prison; and that, while the soul was in it, it was surrounded with darkness, and shut up as in a dungeon; whilst, on the contrary, others held that souls were remarkably anxious to occupy an earthly tenement; and, according to Virgil and others, only a few souls retained possession of Elysium—the rest returning into mortal bodies, after a thousand years; but, before they revisited the upper region, they were compelled to drink of the waters of Lethe; an oblivion of former impressions being deemed necessary to prevent them repining in their new habitation, from an anticipation of the extent to which their fiery energy and celestial origin were to be again shackled and obscured, when incumbered with bodies that were noxious and vile. Sallust observes, that were it not for these transmigrations, the Deity would be under the necessity of creating a soul for every new body; and that, as in time this number would be infinite, they could not be contained within a finite world. The rational souls, he observes, never migrate into the bodies of irrational animals, but follow those irrational bodies without, as demons who possess or attend men; some imagined, indeed, that the soul, at last, after wearing out a number of bodies, would in time wear out itself, and perish forever. Thus, without attempting to characterize the supreme wisdom, or the pre-eminent folly of these speculations, it will be apparent that these learned heathens—these gods of Mr. Abernethy's idolatry—these philosophers, to dissent from whom subjects us to the wrath of the 'Christian Advocate' in this world, and to eternal damnation in the next—ascribe to the soul hardly one quality in common with each other, proving to demonstration that the Book of Nature, however suited for study, has afforded but indifferent instruction, when not associated with, and directed by Divine Revelation; the gross absurdities and contradictions which, without exception, characterize the heathen systems, irrefutably proving the necessity of a divine interference to communicate to us man's future destiny.

This consideration naturally leads us to the inquiry, Why and how has it occurred, when man was favored with divine instruction, that these heathen absurdities should, so far from having given way to the light of revelation, become actually incorporated with its truths, and be even now held, by the great body of professing christians, as necessary to the belief of its doctrines, and essential to a participation in its hopes? This inquiry will, perhaps, be best answered by a reference to the rational and simple grounds upon which Jesus and the apostles promulgated their doctrine of a future life. This fact they were commissioned to proclaim; and, without philosophizing upon the component parts of our frame, they took man as he was—a thinking and a responsible being, who had been called into existence by the power of God, and who would be raised from a state of death by the same power, thus receiving a continuation of existence. This mode of simplifying our conceptions of futurity was too humble for the philosopher—too enlightened for the priest—and too rational for the credulous multitude—the very fact of a crucified man's being the founder of such a system was a stumbling block to many; and the resurrection from the dead was held to be the teaching of a strange God, and laughed at by the philosophers of Athens.

There is also reason to infer from the writings of the apostles, that, even during their lives, the leaven of heathenism had evinced its influence; for there were among the christians to whom they wrote, those who had, by 'philosophy and vain deceit, labored to beguile them with enticing words of man's wisdom, to the worshiping of spirits, and angels, and demons, giving heed to fables, rather than to Godly edifying.'

Speedily after this period a race of men arose, claiming to be the successors of the apostles, who added thousands of professors to the christian faith, but at the lamentable sacrifice of christian principles. The Greek philosophers, who became now the disciples of Jesus, succeeded in effecting the unholy union of the christian doctrine of the resurrection from the dead and a future judgment, with the monstrous heathen absurdity of a self-existent, immaterial, immortal soul; a soul suited to the art and cupidity of the Catholic church, which, (in after ages) in addition to the two popular receptacles for souls, (heaven and hell) provided a third, appointing it for the residence of the soul, after the dissolution of the body, as a temporary place of punishment, where some souls were purged by fire, (hence called purgatory;) a penal prison out of which a soul could not be delivered till after the expiration of a considerable time, or a satisfaction given to the priest for his prayers in its behalf—a tenet purely of heathen origin, and adopted in all its details with most religious punctuality; for, as among the Greeks, it was usual to put a piece of money into the mouths of the dead, for the purpose of paying Charon, the ferryman, to transport their souls over the Styx to the elysian fields, so the Catholics placed a silver coin in the mouths of their dead, to pay St. Peter for opening the gates of heaven to their immortal parts. The heathens taught also that the souls of the deceased wandered about the universe until they arrived at the river Styx, thence to be transferred to the elysian fields; and the Catholics imitated their masters by believing that their souls wandered about the earth until they arrived at purgatory; each expected then to be purified by fire from their sins, as a ghost once tainted was required to be purified by brimstone, without which the bodies through which they were designed to migrate, would be of a more degraded character.

Those leading men in the church, entitled 'The Christian Fathers,' taught doctrines respecting the soul's immortality somewhat differing from each other, and all in an equal degree opposed to christianity. Tertullian's opinion was, that the soul of Jesus at his death descended to those of the patriarchs—that the soul of Adam came from God—that the breath of God was vapor. The church, in the days of Origen, had not determined, whether the soul was eternal, or created for a certain time; whether it was the cause of life, or was merely confined in the body as a punishment for previous transgressions. Origen himself taught, that all souls had existed from all eternity, and were imprisoned in the body as a punishment for their sins."

For the World's Crisis.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All monies designed for The World's Crisis, or the Tract Fund of the "Christian Publication Society," should be sent, not to H. L. Hastings, but to MILES GRANT, whose business it is to attend to such matters. My own business is entirely separate from that of the Society, and is done by different hands in a different office in the same building.

I do not keep for sale the miscellaneous tracts, pamphlets, cook books, etc., of A., B., and C., which are sold in the office. My books may be had of Miles Grant, but his books cannot always be had of me. If persons order my books of me, I can obtain a few others of him as a matter of accommodation, but prefer to have the orders go direct to him. Both offices can send books in the same bundle if so ordered at the time.

I sell all my own books and tracts which I write or publish, and also mean to keep on hand Cruden's Concordances, Syriac Testaments, Hebrew and Greek Bibles, Testaments and Concordances, English Bibles, Commentaries, Histories, and such other works as preachers need and cannot well get elsewhere. These I shall keep to accommodate preachers, and sell them at low prices; but I only do it for accommodation's sake, and if preachers could get them elsewhere I would not keep them. For the present, however, I shall keep a small stock of such books on hand.

I have opened an office on the second floor of 167 Hanover St., and shall endeavor to have my business done as promptly as possible. I have long thought of going out of the book business, but I see no way at present to get out, and so I expect to go into it more deeply than before, making more books and selling them cheaper than ever.

I am nearly out of all my books. Some such as "Reasons," "Controversy," and "Spiritualism," cannot be supplied for some weeks to come. I hope soon to have a full stock. If the friends order liberally, they shall have them as cheap as practicable.

Hoping for the co-operation of brethren in the work, I remain your Bro. in Christ,

H. L. HASTINGS.

P. S.—Any persons wishing to aid me in circulating my books and tracts can of course send to me; but monies for the Tract Fund do not properly pass through my hands. When they come I can deliver them, but they should be directed to Miles Grant. Correspondents must be very patient with me. I have piles of letters before me which I cannot answer. I read all, and answer what I can, but I cannot agree to answer all of them. It would kill me, I think, to do that and all my other work. Be patient. Write all you please, but do not feel displeased because I am too busy to answer them all. H. L. H.

For the World's Crisis.

TRACTS.

Books, pamphlets, and tracts,—
Scatter them far and wide;
Sell them, give them, and sow them
All ways and waters beside.

East, west, north and south,
Send out the precious seed;
And pray, as you send, that Jehovah
Will bless his truth indeed.

Books on the end of time,
On the day of God so nigh;
Works that will stir the dreamer,
And utter the warning cry:—

"The end! the end! it cometh!
The Judge is before the door!
Get ready to stand before his face
Ere the day of grace is o'er."

Tracts on man's true nature,
Tracts on the sinner's doom;
Tracts on the blest inheritance,
Our own eternal home.

Sow the good seed in faith,
Harrow it in with tears;
God watches each little seed of truth;
Away, then, with all thy fears.

Sow on till the harvest day,
'Tis coming,—the final goal;
Who knows but thy gift, my brother,
Shall save one precious soul!

One soul to sing and shine for aye
Through the long eternity;
To cross immortal palms and cry,
"THOU didst it all for me!"

THE TRACT FUND.

BRO GRANT:—Seeing a call for the poorest to cast in their mites for the Tract Fund, I thought I was as poor as almost any, my husband having lost the use of his right arm since last July. For three years he has suffered a great deal of pain, and has been barely able to keep his little family together since he lost the use of his arm. We have had to commit two of our children to other hands, and have two at home. The Lord has been kind to us in all our affliction. He has, I believe, supplied all our real wants. I often tell my companion our bread and water are sure. If our temporal blessings have decreased, our spiritual blessings have increased. Blessed be God.

When I read the article from my sister in the Crisis on "Trust," I felt that I, too, in my affliction, had learned to trust the Lord. He has supplied my wants, through my neighbors, and sometimes through strangers in the flesh; but, brothers in Christ, my heart has been cheered by the weekly visit of the Crisis. I have read it and sent it to my neighbors to read, who seem to like to read it. I have tried to get one subscriber. I thought if I was too poor to pay for it myself, it was my duty to try to get others to take it who could pay. I have not got one yet, but I mean to keep trying. I am poor, but I want to do something for my Master.

Long since, I should have sent for some tracts to scatter in this place, but I had no money to pay for them. If you will send me some free, I will read them carefully and then send them to my neighbors. [You shall have them by next mail.—Ed.]

I love the Crisis. It is all the preaching I have, and all the prayer meeting. But I hope to meet all the children when my Savior comes to gather the ransomed home.

The twenty-five cents which the Lord has put into my hands I have been keeping for another purpose, and for two or three weeks I have been asking the Lord to make duty plain. I could n't send it until I could do it cheerfully, for God loveth a cheerful giver; so now I send it, and trust the Lord will bless me in so doing. May all the readers of the Crisis do likewise.

Your Sister, looking for my Savior,
Bethany, Ct. ELIZA P. BEACH.

BRO. GRANT:—Enclosed please find one dollar for the Tract Fund. I am teaching school, and feel as if I wanted to appropriate some of my quarterly earnings to aid our brethren in the spread of the glorious news of Jesus' soon coming. Yours in the hope of soon seeing Jesus. A FRIEND.
Hartford, Ct.

BRO. GRANT:—I enclose five dollars for the "New Tract Fund," praying that God may bless all efforts for the spread of gospel truth in these "perilous times," and prepare his people for Christ's coming and kingdom, which I believe is near, "even at the door."

Yours in the faith, D. BONNELL.

OUR VOLUNTEER AGENTS.

Report of their Doings.

"England expects every man to do his duty," was the rallying cry of Wellington to his troops; and, inspired with national pride and martial enthusiasm, they did it, and conquered.

A nobler warfare engages us, and a greater Captain leads. Grander results hang on the issue of the contest,—the happiness of thousands, here and hereafter. The Prince of Darkness is marshalling his forces, as never before; and the conflict is going on. Truth and Error, Right and Wrong, Life and Death, are struggling for the mastery.

The Crisis is in the field, doing its part valiantly in the great work. A banner of Truth, Righteousness and Glory, it floats on every breeze, rallying thousands to the ranks, and guiding them on to victory. A brave and well-armed host are fighting under it, and a thousand STANDARD BEARERS lead the front, carrying their colors into the camp of the enemy. The battle rages hot. More STANDARD BEARERS are wanted, a thousand more in every part of the great field. Who will enlist, do valiant service, and help swell the ranks of the army of the King of kings? To the faithful soldier victory is sure, and the reward certain,—immortal glory and honor, such as the world never dreamed of. "They that be wise shall shine as the sun; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever."

We continue below reports of volunteers and standard bearers already in the field:—

FROM ELD. S. LAMPSON, Braintree, Vt.

"The Crisis is just the paper we need in these times of peril. We are trying to get subscribers for it. Herewith you will find the name of one, for whom I enclose $2.00. . . . I will do all I can towards making up your number (4000)."

"I will do all I can." A noble resolve, Bro. L. Let every one do that, and what wonderful results will follow. No one knows how much he CAN do, till he tries; and when he does try, and keeps trying, he is surprised to find how much more he HAS done than he thought he could do. Who else will do all he can?

FROM DR. L. C. WASHBURN, Delhi, Ill.

"Enclosed you will find $5.00, for which I want you to send five copies of the Crisis for six months to the following names—all new subscribers. . . . If you send any works to those who get subscribers, I will read and circulate them."

We have sent you, in books and tracts, one-third of the amount enclosed, and shall be happy to send a like amount for the same number again.

FROM BRO. C. D. W. SCOTT, Ottawa, Ill.

"Enclosed please find $8.00. I have made up a club of seven subscribers for the Crisis six months. . . . . You will please send the premium in tracts. We wish them to circulate in this section of country. The people are beginning to open their eyes to the truth as taught in God's Word."

The tracts are sent,—Crisis too,—and our prayers with them. May both bring forth much fruit, and more subscribers.

FROM ELD. H. K. FLAGG, Erving, Mass.

"I send you the names of nine new subscribers, as follows. . . . Will forward more soon, for the Crisis and the Young Pilgrim."

Thanks, Bro. F. Shall be glad of "more" of the same sort. The Lord be with you, and bring many into the kingdom through your labors.

FROM BRO. A. S. SHELDON, Hebron, N. Y.

"I have been around in my neighborhood with the Crisis, soliciting neighbors and friends to subscribe for it six months, and have obtained a club of twenty names, for which you will find enclosed $15.00."

That's the way to do it. Twenty at a time! Two hundred such workers, and our 4000 new subscribers will be made up before the year is half out. Who shall we hear from next with twenty?

FROM ELD. T. W. PIPER, Melvin Village, N. H.

He sends a new subscriber, and signs himself—"Yours, hoping to get at least one subscriber a month."

"One a month! Why, that's easy enough. I can do that," exclaim three hundred voices at once. No doubt of it. And, now, suppose you try. One a month is twelve a year. If 300 brethren will get one a month, it will run up our subscription list to over 10,000 before the year closes. Preaching brethren, and lay brethren too, think of that. Who'll be one of the 300? PROGRESS REPORTED.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Glory to God! He still works with me. I came here from Schenectady four days ago, and commenced labor. Between twenty and thirty have now already come to Christ, and many more are on the way. Amen, Almighty Jesus! I learn from one of the pastors in Schenectady that the work still goes on there. The churches are holding meetings daily in several parts of the town. Before I left Schenectady, I saw one of the most grand and sublime sights I ever did see. I requested all who will be for Christ to stand up and sing with me "Coronation," and let none others arise,—when seven hundred men and women stood up in one mass. Hush, ye devils! some shall escape ye, if others do not. Hail, victorious Immanuel! lead this heavenly regiment to immortal triumph!

I must soon leave these parts for British America. Shall expect to arrive at the city of St. John to preach in Brussel St. church on the second Sabbath in May. Friends in the Provinces will correspond with me in the city of St. John, in care of S. F. Mathews. I will not again report progress at present, lest I seem to bring myself into too much appearance. Let God work, and let his name alone be spoken. I have written these few short reports for your sakes, because I love you. Greeting. EDWIN BURNHAM.

For the World's Crisis.

AN ENGLISHMAN'S EXPERIENCE.

About three years ago I heard there was going to be a discussion in a school-house about a mile from our residence. The names of the disputants were Eld. C. L. Page, known as a Second Adventist, the other a Methodist preacher, a Mr. Hays. I asked a neighbor what the discussion was on. He told me it was on the Immortality of the Soul. This was the first time in my life that I had ever heard that the soul was disputed to be immortal. I must confess I felt very much opposed to the view of the soul being mortal and liable to be destroyed. I listened with great attention to the discussion. The Methodist spoke first, from the text, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." When he had finished his discourse, I thought he had left the other man no room to dispute it. I had never heard C. L. Page or any other Advent preacher. During the time Mr. Page was discussing, I was about to rise to my feet and speak against his argument right in the midst of his discourse, which would have been very bad behavior. O, how bitter I did feel against him for making null and void that which I had been taught to believe from infancy. But something, as it were, constrained me to keep silent till he was through. And then, after I had heard so many proofs from the Word of the Lord, the testimony of Jesus and holy inspired apostles, it seemed to overcome me. A little after that, I heard Eld. Sweet preach. I had considerable argument with him, after preaching, and was convinced of the truth. He gave me some tracts, which are now precious to me. Since that time, thanks be to God, I have enjoyed the truth of the gospel.

Eld. Page has preached in this neighborhood generally once a month, but we meet with great opposition. About a year ago seven of us formed a church, but, being scattered several miles apart, we have not made much headway. However, I hold all scattered brothers and sisters in Christ ever dear to me. The second coming of Christ, and the very name Second Advent, I love. O, how it cheers my heart to hear one single man or woman confess that they are looking for Christ to come and remove the curse from the earth, and restore paradise to its former beauty, and change these vile bodies of ours and fashion them like unto his own glorious body, and raise all the dead in Christ to blooming immortality!

But, oh! how cold and backward do I find the great mass of human beings, who owe their life and existence to an all-wise Creator. They don't want to see Christ come. When I try to talk with our professing christians here on the soon coming of Christ, they seem to give it very little credence. They think that event very uncertain, and that a great many things must be accomplished first.

This is the first time I ever wrote to an editor, but feeling confident you were one to whom I could open my mind, I thought I would write a little to let you know that you have my prayers and well wishes.

I have been trying hard to get subscribers to the Crisis. Think I shall get some soon; but I am in a rather hard place, as the settlement is thin, with but few professors, and they opposed to our views.

Quincy, Minn. RICHARD BRADLEY.

Correspondence.

From Bro. C. P. Dow.

BRO GRANT:—During the past three months, I have held three series of meetings, which were well attended, and resulted in considerable good to the cause of God, besides filling my regular appointments. The first was held in Bolton, C. E., at the Page schoolhouse. Was well attended and resulted in the conversion of several sinners, the extension of the influence of truth, the stirring up of many to search the Scriptures, some of whom are apparently under conviction for sin. We hope for further good results.

The next series of meetings were held at Peasley's Corner, in Bolton, only four miles from the place of the first meeting, where I was invited by friends of the cause, and although the truth encountered some little opposition from a source that it had not ought to have come, yet it turned to the advantage of the cause upon the whole. God knows how to make "the wrath of man to praise him." Several were benefitted, and one started for the kingdom. The last of the three meetings above referred to was held at Wayville, in Barnston, C. E. By the invitation of our beloved brother and fellow-laborer, Bro. John Chapman, of Magog, I accompanied him to the place, and commenced a meeting on Thursday evening, Feb. 25th, which continued each evening of the week, Saturday and Sabbath, commencing with forty-one hearers and rather a discouraging state of the cause. The interests of the meeting steadily increased, the good Spirit rested down upon us, believers were stirred up and united, backslidings confessed, sinners convicted, and the good work progressed so that on the Sabbath we had a large congregation, a lively, social meeting at 9 o'clock, A. M., in which twenty spoke in ten minutes, forty testimonies were brought in in a short time, and I was urgently requested to return on Wednesday (from Bolton and Magog, where I had to go on Monday and Tuesday, and attend appointments) and resume my labors and continue over another Sabbath.

I invited Eld. S. W. Thurber, who resides at Derby Line, to come and help in the meeting, this neighborhood being one of his old fields of labor. We commenced the meeting on Wednesday evening, March 2nd, alternating in preaching, having three sermons per day, Friday and Saturday.

On Sunday, Eld. Thurber had to go to Hatley to attend his appointments. I preached at Wayville to large and interested audiences, and God blessed his word most manifestly. The result was the thorough waking up of old brethren, their becoming united in heart and labor, although differing on some points of doctrine; the reclaiming of several who were entirely backslidden from God, and the conversion of several sinners. Oh! it was a blessed place, as a good brother said the last day of the meeting, "It is not possible to pay in dollars for the good the meeting has done," adding, that when the meeting commenced, and for a time before, he had concluded that the devil had got entire possession, and thought no more could be done in that place, but had been happily disappointed.

Now many have been thus discouraged, and ceased their earnest efforts in the cause of God, and thus allowed "Satan to get the advantage." This is one of his devices. Oh! let us have faith in God. My faith has increased by what I have seen of late, and I have fully made up my mind to

"Let worldly care

and devote myself entirely to preaching "this gospel of the kingdom" and associated truth, and see whether the Lord will support me. I have been laboring to help myself by working with my hands, and have succeeded in that well enough, but the cause of God has suffered in consequence. I have let out my small farm and shall depend on the "stewards of God's manifold bounties" for the most of my support. I have many calls for labor, more than I can fill.

Let us all engage anew. Let us learn to "approve the things that are excellent," and not judge one another any more in meats and drinks, or minor points of doctrine, making one an offender for a word. As Adventists, we claim the right to "search the Scriptures," for in them we think we have eternal life, but we have no right to make our opinion on non-essentials, or points which do not necessarily effect christian character, a test of fellowship. Division has thus been caused to the distraction of the cause of truth and holiness. Let us learn wisdom by the things we have suffered, and do better for time to come, and study the things that make for peace, and things whereby one may edify another.

Our King and Savior is coming soon. Let us be ready to hail the glad day of triumph. Said Jesus, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." But what may they know, if the converse be true of us? Let our motto be, "In essential things unity, in doubtful things liberty, in all things charity," and God will bless us more and more.

Brethren, pray for me, that God's word may have free course and be glorified. May grace be with you all. Amen. C. P. Dow.

From Bro. Wm. Greenleaf.

Bro. Grant:—As I feel myself indebted to your kindness for the privilege of reading the Crisis, I must at least thank you, and also contribute my mite, if you will allow a poor pilgrim and stranger a little space in your worthy paper. I am glad there is a general waking up among the brethren east and west, and they have got enough of the grace of God and Spirit of Jesus in their hearts to look on the opinions or faith of others without crying "heresy," before they examine to see whether these things are so or not. I have no clubs to throw at any one. I love all that love the truth and are trying to do God's will, but sectarianism I abominate.

Some pieces written for the Crisis have been bitter, partaking more of the spirit of politics, or of the world, or of the "old Mother," saying,—I am right—than of the Spirit of that blessed Jesus for whom we are all looking. These things should not be. But as I read those articles, I find an antidote, thank God! in some of those precious letters written by brothers and sisters—God bless them! fresh from their closets. They have no sect, no poetry, no enemies, can pray for all, and truly love all that yield obedience to gospel truth just as fast as they can see them.

I do rejoice we have formed a conference in Michigan and Indiana, on the Bible platform —as I believe;—one meeting, at least, where all could call each other brother and sister, even if they did not all see eye to eye. This seemed so Christ-like, to treat all honest believers as christians. Now I have a few words to say to those dear ones in Christ. I am acquainted with but few personally, but some I have known for years and—

"Though sundered far, by faith we meet Around one common mercy-seat."

Among them I might mention Bro. and Sr. Willard. I see this dear sister complaining that she has not done her duty in inviting the poor, etc.

Time flies, but I do not forget some nineteen years ago, I came west as a Baptist preacher, without money or friends. The gospel of the kingdom had been sounded in my ears before I left New York. After an examination of the Bible I came out and preached the doctrine. Of course I soon became unpopular and an outcast. Now I was poor indeed! A dear wife, who had left friends and worldly comforts, four small children, all of us sick more or less. Now what was I to do? Poor, alone—all but God—sick and an outcast. My elder brother in New York had said to me before leaving, "There is a farm I will give you, if you will let this preaching alone." I told him no, put my fingers in my ears, and fled, crying, "Life! eternal life!" But now reduced, shall I go back to the flesh pots of Egypt? Ah! no. Bless God! Bro. and Sr. Willard said, "Come, we have a plenty—a feast—come, thou poor." Opened their doors, and in we went to the FEAST, not of one meal, or one day, but for eight months. Now has Sr. Willard not done her duty to the poor? If not, who has?

Ah! how much real comfort to an old way-worn pilgrim to read letters of those who have been long in the faith and earnestly contending for it.

Well now, beloved, contend and keep humble a little longer. Obey all the commands, and the Lord sanctify you wholly. I feel the storm is raging, the nations are angry. God's wrath will soon come. And shall I meet all the dear ones in the air, saved, redeemed, unworthy as I am? God grant it, for his Son's sake. Your brother striving for the kingdom,

Orland, Ind. Wm. Greenleaf.

From Bro. D. M. Kinter.

Bro. Grant:—I am just in receipt of a package of tracts and two copies of the World's Crisis. The tracts are gratefully received, as the harvest is truly great and laborers few in this section of the country. I am alone as far as public teachers are concerned, and have much opposition to contend against. I am engaged during the week in teaching school for a livelihood, and hence have no opportunity of traveling far, and as a good tract is worth as much to the possessor as a good sermon, I am happy to have a few to distribute.

Our country has suffered much from the ravages of war, and the few faithful are in quite limited circumstances, as the crops last season were quite short, and every thing is very dear. But as the night is far spent, and what we do we must do quickly, I expect to give every dollar I can, and exert myself (the Lord being my helper), to the best of my abilities, in warning a sleeping church of the coming crisis, and will call on my brethren, who are willing and able, to remember that there is a "little flock" in this portion of the great West that needs their help and their prayers.

I am much pleased with the World's Crisis, and will do all I can to get subscribers.

Any tracts sent to me shall be properly distributed, as there are many who will read them; especially the young, and I trust profitably. I shall be very anxious until I receive the Crisis, as I feel much interested in it.

May God bless the good work in which you are engaged, and hasten the glorious day which will gather us all home to his kingdom, where we shall see eye to eye, and know even as we are known. At some future day I may give you a short sketch of the condition of the church here, which may, perhaps, edify some. God's grace be with us.

Your brother in Christ, D. M. Kinter.

Kirksville, Adair Co., Mo.

From Bro. S. Sherwin.

Dear Brethren and Sisters scattered abroad: —Is it true, that according as we understand the word of truth, we have got almost home? We have seen the signs of the Master's approach. The morning sun is about to rise, the glory is soon to be revealed, and our heavenly home, that we have been looking for these number of years, is to be revealed in a very short time. Are we ready to have our faith tried? Have we got on the whole panoply of heaven? Have we the Spirit of the Master that will enable us to be changed in a moment, and caught up to meet the Lord? What a day it will be for us, when we have cried, "Lord, Lord," if he shall say, "I never knew you." In this critical moment of time, called "quickly," let us see to it that we have our lamps trimmed and burning, and are well provided with oil.

We are living in a day when there is much scoffing, by those from whom we ought to expect better things. But it is as the Master said it would be in the last days; therefore let us be ready to give a reason of our hope to all around us. May our example be such as shall lead our friends and neighbors to seek the same blessed hope that we enjoy, that we may at the coming of Christ receive the welcome plaudit, "Well done!"

Yours in hope of speedy redemption,

Grafton, Vt. Stephen Sherwin.

For the World's Crisis.

MAINE WESTERN QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.

According to appointment this conference commenced in Hollis, Thursday evening, March 10th. The roads were bad, neither sleighing nor wheeling. The only one present from abroad was I. C. Wellcome, who was nearly disabled by much journeying on bad roads. A few came together and listened to the word spoken, with good interest. Friday we enjoyed an excellent season in the Lord in a social meeting, and in the preaching of the word of life. Saturday, Brn. Wm. H. Mitchell and Tarbox were present to participate in the blessings of the Lord, and assist in the ministry of the word. It was a good day in the Lord. Some few from Buxton, and Sunday, a few from Lyman, were with us.

Sunday, Brn. B. S. Emery and Peter Libby were with us, and assisted in the services. The house was filled with attentive hearers, and the word was preached in a forcible manner, to the joy of the disciples, and the conviction and persuasion of sinners. It was a solemn and interesting day. At the close of the afternoon sermon the Lord's table was spread, and the brethren and sisters enjoyed a precious season in observing that ordinance, in the joyous hope of soon meeting at the marriage supper of the Lamb, in the kingdom of God.

In the evening we enjoyed an interesting meeting, many of the brethren and sisters were ready to improve their gifts, and as they had a mind to work, the Lord blessed them. Some confessed their backslidings and resolved to begin anew in the service of the Lord. Others were deeply impressed with their duty to repent of sin and enlist in the Lord's army. We hope the Lord will make this meeting a lasting blessing to that people.

It was a very encouraging feature, that those who attended this conference remained through it instead of starting off Sunday noon for home to save a half day's work. This custom to seek to save "time and money," by traveling home from conference Sunday, which breaks the interest of the meeting at its most important point, is a growing evil, and ought to be abandoned by christians.

As our scribe was not present, and it is of interest to the flock to have all our conferences reported, I consented to report this, and would some others, had I known that they were not to be reported.

I. C. Wellcome.

Obituaries.

Caleb H. Arnold.

Died at Gettysburg, from wounds received in that terrible strife, Sergt. Caleb H. Arnold, of Blackstone, Co. K, 15th Regt. Mass. Vols., aged twenty-two years, eleven months.

Obituaries are the every day sermonizing of the world; and yet there are individual circumstances in real life that shed across its pathway a heroic nobility worthy to live, and will exist through all time and eternity, a perpetual memorial of past and present worth.

Nature is not lavish of her prodigies, but an occasional display of her character glimmers through the crude perceptions of social life, for in this untimely sacrifice she enshrined a moral excellence which carried captive the sympathies of society, and which culminated only as the sun of life set upon his pathway. Throughout every phase of character in which I knew him, his deportment was proverbial for its sincerity, and tempered with a majestic spirit of reverence, he shone like a star among the galaxy of men. The world's wide sea was all before him when he launched his dancing barque out upon its unknown waters. E'er the joyousness of young time had half begun, he had a blushing bride wreathed in her innocence cold in the grave, and the shattered wrecks came surging back the storms of relentless woe. It were sacrilege to question the motive which led him to the carnival of death; but I know no impulsive or blood-drunken spirit, no vindictive restlessness ever usurped the quiet self-possession that ever actuated him. He called it patriotism; it were impiety to doubt it; and however reproachful may be the commentary of war, it was through an honorable consciousness that he gave his life for his country. It is but justice to say there are but few whose short earthly career argues such a favorable justification.

But his burden is laid down, and not many mourning ones will survive his memory. He will be remembered, but not emulated. Life is all sensuality; and though virtue struggles for life, it is against destiny. A few brave companions in arms will miss him at the morning and evening reveille, and the bereaved ones who journey to meet him will need the lapse of silent years to soften the poignant realization of this precious sacrifice as holy memories will plead amid all new and pleasant connections for a place in their hearts. He slumbers among his kindred, embalmed in the flesh, and in the recollections of friends. C. G. Carre.

Eliza S. Randal.

Died in Boston, Mass., March 17th, 1864, of consumption, Eliza S. Randal, aged fifty-six years, ten months, seven days.

Sr. Randal was a resident of Portsmouth, N. H. She experienced religion in early life, and united with the people of God. Her religion was that of the heart, and manifested itself in her every day life, which gave her an influence wherever she was. She embraced the great truths of the Advent doctrine with all her heart, the coming of Christ, the unconscious state of the dead, and the resurrection of all that sleep in their graves, and remained firm until she breathed her last. Her delight was to administer to the necessities of the sick in their affliction, and to keep herself unspotted from the world, and even wore herself out in the good cause, and found the promise sure in the forty-first Psalm, first and third verses. She died without a struggle, leaving two orphan daughters, with a large circle of relatives and friends, to mourn. It can truly be said, "A mother in Israel has fallen."

Her funeral was attended by the writer at the Advent chapel in Portsmouth, N. H., March 20th. A sermon was preached from Rev. 14 : 13, to a large and sympathetic congregation. She rests from her labor, and her works do follow her.

"Peaceful be thy silent slumber."

Chas. S. Emerson.

Benjamin Trask.

On Dec. 4th, 1863, Bro. Benj. Trask, of Salem, Mass., at the age of sixty-three years, fell asleep in Jesus.

For twenty-five years Bro. T. was a Congregationalist. In 1854 he embraced the literal view, that "the wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." At that time he identified himself with the company of believers of the same precious truth in Salem.

The testimony of those who knew our brother is, "Bro. T. was a good man." A modest, but weighty testimony, concerning one who was willing to bear reproach for the truth's sake, because it was God's word. He loved the cause, not in tongue and word only, but in deed and in truth.

Asleep in Jesus! How comforting to the companion and children, who know that God having "brought again from the dead the Lord Jesus," will bring from their graves those that sleep in Him. How glorious the coming of the Lord to them. To see him coming with the keys of hell and of death, opening the graves and tombs, which have concealed so many precious saints of Jesus. Our brother will "have part in the first resurrection."

Funeral services were conducted by Eld. R. Wendell, who spoke from 1 Cor. 15th chapter.

The Austrian troops having been molested by the inhabitants of Viele, Gen. Goblens has ordered that all munitions of war and arms in the possession of civilians shall be delivered up to the military authorities within twenty-four hours.

The roads in Jutland are impassable in consequence of heavy rains.

Marshal Wrangle has prohibited the export of horses, cattle and grain from Jutland.

The Prussians had occupied several places near Duppel, and an important engagement had occurred near the same place.

The Archduke Maximilian is visiting Queen Victoria.

A Paris letter of the 8th says: "The Archduke Maximilian and the Archduchess arrived at the Tuileries on the 6th inst., and were received with all honor by the Emperor. They will proceed some day this week to London. After a stay of a few days they return to Vienna, without passing through Paris: thence to Trieste, where they embark on board of an Austrian ship-of-war, escorted by two French vessels, commanded by an Admiral, for Vera Cruz. The new Emperor accepts, it is said, a war debt of 230,000,000."

Vienna, March 11. The Presse of to-day says: "A fresh Austrian circular note has been issued, with the object of tranquilizing the foreign powers relative to the advance of the Allies in Jutland. The note declares the readiness of Austria to participate in the conference and to consent to an armistice.

Austria states also that Jutland would be evacuated by the Austrians and Prussians on condition of the evacuation of the Sundewitt and the island of Alsen by the Danes, who are also to cease capturing any German shipping, and to release all shipping they may have already captured."

It is Russia, and not Prussia, as the telegraph stated, that is reported to have set on foot the raising of 150,000 troops, to keep Sweden from going to the aid of Denmark.

The Paris correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser, speaking of the Archduke Maximilian's setting out for Mexico, says: "But here is a singular detail of the affair, in view of what are supposed to be the sympathies of France in the Danish question. On account of the pressing demands on the Austrian navy in its conflict with that of Denmark, the Emperor Napoleon is going to place one of his vessels of war at the disposition of the Archduke to transport him to the Vera Cruz, so as not to deprive the Austrian navy of any of its force.

From this curious chain of facts, the conclusion is drawn that the Archduke Maximilian and the King of Belgium are at this moment controling the destinies of Europe. Thus in order not to break up the Mexican programme Maximilian begs of his brother Francis Joseph not to do anything which shall compel Napoleon to become an open enemy to Austria, and the surest way to do this is to give a guaranty to France neither to remain in Jutland nor to seek to provoke a war in Italy. Francis Joseph makes the promise, and thus this eternal Mexican question comes back as the big thing which controls all Napoleon's acts, and which secures peace to Europe! The fact is singular enough in itself, and one is lost in conjecture in trying to fathom the mystery which enshrouds this Mexican scheme."

The Boston Conference.—We are expecting that the conference to be held in Boston will be one of much interest and profit. But if we would reap any special benefit from it, we must look to the Lord for help. For this reason we would propose that those who feel an interest in this important gathering, should observe Friday, April 1st, as a day of fasting and special prayer, that the proposed conference may be the best we ever enjoyed.

Discussion at Lynn.—Our discussion at Lynn, Mass., with Eld. Moses Hull, Spiritualist, formerly Seventh-Day Adventist, was one of great interest. It was remarked by one who has traveled extensively as a lecturer and debater, that the audiences were the largest he ever saw at a discussion where an admittance fee was required.

The discussion is to be continued at the same place, April 12th, 14th and 15th. Thus far we are very much pleased with the results of the discussion. We forbear to make any further reports till its close. Pray the Lord to assist us in the defense of his truth.

The Chapin Discussion.—It will be observed that Bro. Dow has forwarded the remainder of our discussion with Mr. Chapin at Stanbridge, C. E. We think this part will be found the most interesting. The first part of it was published last summer.

CONFERENCE IN BOSTON.

The church of the Lord Jesus Christ worshiping at Lowell Street Chapel, Boston; to those of like precious faith, and who wait for the Son of God from heaven, greeting:—

Beloved in the Lord, we give thanks to our heavenly Father, who hath loved us and blessed us with all spiritual blessings, that through his grace we trust we are enabled to continue steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, and fellowship, and in the breaking of bread, and in prayers, and that God in his rich mercy yet is pleased, as we trust, to count us as members of his little flock, and to grant us peace and unity among ourselves, and some degree of prosperity as a church of Christ.

We give thanks to God also, that we have been so kept by the power of God, that we have not been moved away from the hope of the gospel, but that we have been enabled to continue in the faith rooted and grounded, holding fast those principles of the doctrine of Christ, repentance from dead works, and faith toward God, the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment; and that in the patience of hope we do yet wait for the coming and kingdom of our Lord, believing that yet a little while, and he that shall come will come and will not tarry, and that now the just shall live by faith.

And as the signs of the times indicate that we are among the predicted perils of the last days, and that we are approaching those scenes of final trouble such as never was, which shall convulse the world with sorrow and distress; we have thought it good to invite our brethren in Christ and the preachers of his word, who are interested in these momentous themes, without distinction of sect or name, to meet us at our place of worship, at the corner of Lowell and Causeway Streets, Boston, on Tuesday evening, April 5th, 1864; and to continue with us over the coming First Day of the week:

To unite in worship and thanksgiving to God for his abundant mercies to all men, and us who have learned his will and tasted that he is gracious.

To offer up our prayers, and supplications and intercessions for all men; for kings and all that are in authority, that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty; for the peace and prosperity of mankind, and the spreading abroad of the gospel among the nations; for the church of Jesus Christ, that they may all come to the unity of the faith, and may be enriched in every christian grace, and preserved blameless till the appearing of the Lord, being delivered from the devices of evil men and the power of lies, and the delusions of Satan:

For the ministers of the word of God, that they may be preserved from errors of faith which distract and divide the church, and from sins of practice which dishonor the Lord and his truth; that God may mercifully deliver them from ignorance and prejudice, give them great understanding in the mysteries of his word, and great boldness and an open door for the declaring of the same; and also to unite in praying the Lord of the harvest that he may send forth laborers into his harvest, who shall be men of God, men of faith, of zeal; men of patience and love, purity and power; men who fear the Lord and hate covetousness, and that thus he may preserve unto us the faithful ministration of his word to the end:

To listen to the proclamation of the truth of God for the edification of the church, and to the preaching of the glad tidings of the salvation and kingdom of God, and to give heed to the sure word of prophecy, which is as a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise:

To exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching, thus confirming the souls of the disciples that they may be of good courage, even though they must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God:

To invite sinners to Christ, the refuge from approaching wrath; to warn the perishing of their impending danger, and point them to their great deliverer, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world:

To encourage each other in the great work of saving men and proclaiming the gospel in the regions beyond, thus sounding out the word of the Lord: and,

To remember the death of Christ in the breaking of bread and the drinking of the cup which he has given us, by which to testify our grateful recollection of his sorrows, and to show forth his death till he shall come.

For these objects we invite our brethren, and sisters, and the servants of the Lord, and shall make them welcome to our worship, our homes, and our hospitalities; trusting that we may thus be blessed and comforted together. And we desire the prayers of God's people that the good hand of God may prosper us in our meeting together; that we may gather in harmony, and love, and quietness, that we may be mercifully preserved from all confusion and strife, from vain jangling and bitterness of speech, from all perverse disputations and words that edify not, and from all sectarian narrowness of spirit, and that endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, we may honor and glorify our heavenly Father, and make ready for the marriage of the Lamb and the approaching kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.

On behalf of the church:

THE LONELY PILGRIM.

(From the Jubilee Harp.)

I walk a lonely pilgrim here,
O'er life's uneven way;
My aching heart keeps hoping for
A bright and better day;
A glorious home, a goodly land,
The blessed, heavenly rest;
And well I know that land is near,
The home of all who're blest.

I walk alone, and oft am sad,
And fall the briny tears;
My heart is grieved with trials sore,
And pressed with many cares.
The better land no sorrow knows,—
There hushed is every sigh;
The Savior's hand in kindness wipes
The tear-drop from each eye.

I walk alone, and yet am glad;
The blessed promise's given
To cheer the heart, the lowly one,
Towards that promised heaven.
The humble path my Savior walked,
I scorn it not to tread;
The frowns and scoffs my Savior bore
May fall upon my head.

I stand upon his precious word,
My soul rejoiceth free,
The glorious light the gospel gives
Is light that shines for me.
I'll suffer now, I'll triumph then;
I'll die for Jesus here;
In that bright world I'll live again,
A conqueror's crown to wear.

For the World's Crisis.

NO PROBATION AFTER THE SECOND ADVENT.

I think it must be apparent to all who "search the Scriptures," that the coming of the Lord in the clouds of heaven is ever represented, both in the Old and New Testaments, as a day of joy, perfect and everlasting triumph to the child of God; but of sorrow, anguish, and utter hopelessness and despair to those who "know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."—2 Thes. 1: 8. But as the readers of the Crisis believe generally that they shall receive their reward with Paul AT THAT DAY, I forbear multiplying scripture on that point. 2 Tim. 4: 8. And let us ever bear in mind that the Scriptures ever recognize but TWO classes—the righteous and wicked; and to one of these classes each of us belongs, according to Christ,—"He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad"; and these two classes are eternally separated "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him," as is fully apparent from Matt. 25: 32 and 13: 49, as well as many other passages.

I know that an effort has been put forth to make out that "infants" constitute a third class, as being neither righteous or wicked; but inspiration has positively decided them to belong to the righteous,—"Of such is the kingdom of God"; and then 1 Cor. 6: 9 says, "The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God." And then when some of Christ's disciples began to feel so uplifted they needed converting over, Christ took a little child and set him in their midst as an example, and plainly told them that except they reformed and became like little children, they should not enter the kingdom of God. These scriptures as well as others plainly prove that God recognizes children as belonging to the class called righteous.

But a few scriptures to show that the coming of Christ will be a day of terror and utter despair to those who know not God:—

Isa. 13: 6: 9,—"Howl ye; for the day of the Lord is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty. Therefore shall all hands be faint, and every man's heart shall melt: and they shall be afraid; pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them; they shall be in pain as a woman that travaileth: they shall be amazed one at another; their faces shall be as flames. Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it." Joel 1: "Alas for the day! for the day of the Lord is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come." Jer. 6: 10,—"For this is the day of the Lord God of hosts, a day of vengeance, that he may avenge him of his adversaries." Zeph. 1: 14–18,—"The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord: the mighty man shall cry there bitterly. That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness. A day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high towers. And I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk as blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord: and their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as the dung. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy: for he shall make even a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land."

This is a small part of what might be taken from the Old Testament, but we will come to the New, where it speaks of the sign of the Son of man appearing in heaven, which causes all the tribes of the earth to mourn. Then in Rev. 1: 7,—"Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him."

Question. Will the Jews be an exception to these ALL? Then in Rev. 6, where we are carried through a chain of prophecy spanning this dispensation, and the heavens depart as a scroll, there is a description of the anguish and despair of all classes and conditions of those unprepared, commencing with kings, and going down to slaves. "And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond-man, and every free-man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?"

Is there any thing here that looks like an opportunity or privilege of embracing Christ? Does not every bond-man and every free-man embrace all mortals who are left on the earth? If any were to have opportunity to embrace Christ after the second advent, it would seem the most like God to give it to the poor bondman who has been kept in heathenish darkness, not having been permitted to read the Word; instead of those who have had the first and highest privilege, and yet obstinately refused to receive Christ when they could see the prophecies fulfilled before their eyes in his person; and when they saw him raise the dead, their hardened hearts determined from that time forth to imbrue their hands in his blood!

But notwithstanding reason and the many plain declarations of Scripture to the contrary, there are those who tenaciously maintain that there will be a "large class" who will have the opportunity to make their peace with God after Christ comes in the clouds of heaven. There seems however to be a variety of opinion as to who shall constitute this favored class. But all who believe in probation after the second advent agree that the JEWS will be thus favored, and most with whom I am acquainted include the heathen. I have heard some argue that all young persons (who have the good fortune to live at the second advent) who had been blinded by their teachers, would then have opportunity to get ready for the kingdom.

Well, now, if JEWS are to receive pardon for their sinful rebellion after Christ comes, permit me again to ask, Who are Jews? Are they American Indians, Mohammedans, Anglo-Saxons, or those who nominally profess the name of Jews, keeping some part of the Mosaic law? I have before given the historical argument in favor of Mohammedans and Anglo-Saxons being the fleshly descendants of Abraham, and would now mention that a number of reasons are given by Penn and others that the American Indians descended from the Israelites; but I will only give one quoted by Mr. Robbins, author of "All Religions," etc., relative to Dr. Boudinot.

"Few persons have taken more pains to learn the character and manners of the American Indians than the late venerable Dr. Boudinot of New Jersey. In his valuable and very interesting work, entitled 'A STAR IN THE WEST,' he has given to the world the results of his researches on this subject. He is fully persuaded that a part, at least, of the American Indians are the descendants of the long lost ten tribes of Israel! A great number of facts are introduced, from the manners of the Indians, from their language, and especially from their religious rites and opinions, which, if they do not prove the correctness of his opinion, give it at least a high degree of probability."

Now to which of these classes do the promises belong, if it still be contended that they belong to the flesh? There is quite a difference in the faith of these parties. Mohammedans and Anglo-Saxons believe the Savior has come once,—the nominal Jews do not: but it appears the two former classes possess the greatest amount of Abrahamic blood. I think we shall be obliged to return to the Word of God,—that it takes an inward work to make a Jew.—Rom. 2: 28.

Is there opportunity for any, be their name or blood what it may, who are found unreconciled to God at the second advent, to make their peace with him after this time? How will Jesus Christ be revealed? In mercy, as when the angels chanted his natal song on Bethlehem's plains? Nay, verily; but "in flaming fire"! Dispensing mercy? Nay, but "taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." Have the nominal Jews obeyed the gospel of Jesus Christ? Well, what then? Why, they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." At what period will this punishment occur? The next verse will tell: "When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe."

In Rev. 12th the church is represented as bringing forth a man-child, which was caught up to God and his throne. This man-child was to rule all nations with a rod of iron.—Verse 5. As this has never been fulfilled, we would inquire, WHEN will it be? Ps. 2: 8, 9, shows it is when Christ asks and the Father gives him the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. The Father gives the wicked world to Christ at his (Christ's) request, but at the same time stipulates what shall be done with them. Read the next verse: "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel."

The 19th of Rev. brings to view in glowing language the second coming of Christ, the joy of his saints in celebrating the marriage supper, etc., and the 15th verse shows that the same disposition will be made of the nations as in Ps. 2: 9: "And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God."

There are many passages which prove that the saints will be with Christ in the execution of the judgment. Rev. 2; 26, 27 proves they will act in full harmony with the command given to the Son in Ps. 2: 9;—"And he that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations." Well, Master, how will this power over the nations you give this overcomer be exercised? In dispensing mercy, and offering them salvation? Read the next verse, and that will decide the matter: "And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father."

Now if ruling with a rod of iron and dashing the nations in shivers is dispensing mercy, I do not understand language. Look at the figure employed—an earthern dish broken in shivers! Question: Are such shivered fragments ever made of great use by the potter?

This agrees with the parable of the Nobleman (Luke 19), who went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and return; and at his return reckoned with his servants, and at the same time disposes of his enemies in the following way: "But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me." Now who so positively declares they will not have Jesus of Nazareth to reign over them as the nominal Jew?

Some time since a christian minister broached the subject of Christ to a Jewish Rabbi in New York city. The Rabbi with an air of contempt described to him the mean, low birth of his Savior; how Joseph and Mary had to run away in the night to go to Egypt to save the life of his Savior: and his proud heart manifested itself in his person as he brought his splendid walking cane to the floor and sneeringly inquired of him, "Do you think I shall worship such a being as that?" Facts, from the days of Christ until the present, show it is not for want of knowledge that the nominal Jew rejects Christ, but pride and obstinacy. They are determined to have a Savior that will give them great pomp and power in this state. Truly, "Rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft."

In the parable of the wheat and tares, the Savior expressly declares "the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels." It is THE harvest (definite), not a harvest, as though there might be another. Christ shows in this parable an eternal separation of the two classes (righteous and wicked) at the harvest; the one "shines forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father," the other is cast into a furnace of fire, where there is wailing and gnashing of teeth. In the 47th verse of the same chapter another likeness is presented proving the same thing: "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."

But I hasten to where the disciples asked Christ to tell them what should be the sign of his coming and the end of the world. Christ complies with this request, and gives them a series of events embracing the papal persecution, then the darkening of the sun, moon, falling stars, distress of nations; then further adds it shall be as it was in the days of Noah and in the days of Lot, at his second coming.

Let us inquire, In what particulars will it be as in the days of Noah and Lot? Every thing will not be the same. No. The prominent particulars set forth are, unbelief in the EVENT, and the entire destruction of all who did not believe. Hence they were going on in pleasure and their worldly schemes, though they had been faithfully warned. Please read the Savior's own words, and see if there looks like any chance after the Son of man is revealed. "And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot: they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all: even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." "Even thus"—that is, just so, in the same manner, as the Sodomites who did not believe were destroyed the same day that Lot went out of Sodom. So shall it be IN THE DAY when the Son of man is revealed! What think you? will there be any opportunity to obtain an interest in Christ after he is revealed in the clouds of heaven?

Bible students well know I have not presented a tithe of what might be quoted on this point, but this must suffice for the present. The more I examine this subject, the more exceedingly do I marvel that any should teach such a doctrine. B. MATHEWSON.

DEATH AND RESURRECTION.—NO. 2.

(This was written for the Harbinger and refused.)

Having shown in number one that death as entailed upon our race by our federal head and parent of all, is not penal, and also that as the family of Adam fell under the penalty of law, without reference to their own individual and personal action, and consequently needed the grace of Jehovah to be executed in their behalf to relieve them from a doom, that they as independent individuals had no agency in bringing on themselves,—I shall now proceed to show that the grace of God to the race of Adam's children is as universal as the sentence of death, and will as positively be executed without reference to the individual acts of the children of Adam. First, reason claims that if God executed upon Adam's children the death penalty pronounced upon him while they were in his loins, to maintain the honor of his own name and majesty of his holy law without reference to this personal act, then in his grace he should also without reference to their personal acts, after the majesty of law has been vindicated, and his own honor maintained, set them at liberty, that they may not say his ways are not equal. Reason also says that his grace thus manifested to a sinful race would redound to his glory. But what is reason, if not in harmony with the word of God? Nothing at all. Then do the Scriptures support reason in the foregoing conclusion? Yes, they do when they are not choked and frightened away, until they speak any thing, nothing, and every thing, according to the will, tradition, or caprice of their interpreters.

Paul, the apostle of Jesus, most fully sets forth the subject in Rom. 5, where he saith, "But not as the offence, so also is the FREE GIFT; for if through the offence of "ONE" (man, Adam,) many be dead, much more the "GRACE" of God, and the gift (of life) by (his) GRACE, which is by ONE MAN, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many." Now would it be handling the word of God faithfully to affirm that the many in the latter clause of the text does not contain or embrace as much as the former? If not, the conclusion is that the gracious gift of life from the dead entailed by Adam is just as extensive as the judgment inflicted by Jehovah's sentence, being executed on Adam's children; and thus we see that "life from the dead" is a blessing to all the human family; the result of the disinterested benevolence of our Father in heaven, an exhibition of his kindness and mercy to a sinful race; and to pervert his goodness into a vindictive malevolence, may do for perverted reason, and those who appear to be willingly misled and deceived, but not for those whose eye is single, and the whole body full of light.

But says the affirmant, "If then it is a truth that the wicked dead are to be made alive for any purpose, it must not be left to inference, because if they live again from the dead it is a penal life." We might with just as much truth say that the life of Adam's children in the present state is a "penal life," as to say that life from the dead is a penal life; for the one is cut off in the end by the death penalty for sin, as really as the other; and if one is penal, why not the other? and then the longer the life of mortal aches, pains, and woes, the greater the penal curse. Upon such hypothesis the venerable patriarch Methuselah was cursed above all men.

If God in his grace bestow the blessing of life upon all the posterity of man from the dead, and that without reference to their acts, or agency, as really as death was entailed without their agency, is it not turning the grace of God into malevolence to say that because some of the recipients of this grace, having abused the same by continuing in sin and rebellion against his beneficence, and by consequence compelling him as a moral governor of the universe to execute the law of sin and death upon them individually for their own individual and personal transgression, that therefore the gracious gift of life from the dead is designed and given by Jehovah's goodness as a "penal" curse; for the gracious gift is as distant from the penal curse as life is opposite to death, and to blend them together as a penal curse, is to bring a reproach upon the administration of the just and holy Arbiter of human destiny.

But it is said by some, that Christ Jesus our Lord, cannot raise up the wicked to corporeal mortal life, because he has no such life in himself, being since his own resurrection immortal and spiritual, hence can only give such life. My reason tells me that if Jesus is possessed of "all power in heaven and earth," as he claimed, he can do as he pleases about the matter. "But will such a re-living be participated in by the unholy?" To settle this question, it is necessary to determine what is the penalty or wages of sin? what is its proper penalty? Wrong here again, for the re-living is no part of the penalty, but Jehovah's GRACE, unmerited, unasked, and yet freely bestowed. Hence the "re-living of the unholy," instead of depending in the least on the nature of the penalty for sin, depends entirely and solely upon Jehovah's purpose as given to man in his revelation, together with his power to perform his words or purpose; and if he designs the "reliving" of "the unholy," that they may appear before him in the day of his judgment, he has so revealed, and will so execute in his own time. Hence if no such revelation exists, we have no light on the subject. But if it does exist, let us not resist it, but meekly acquiesce in Jehovah's administration to the glory of his adorable name forever. C. F. SWEET.

PRAYER.—No. 2.

Years had passed away. Notwithstanding the many miracles and deliverances wrought out for Israel, they were still a rebellious people, an idolatrous nation, forsaking Him who had shown them multiplied wonders and mighty deeds for the worship of idols. Through the faithful admonitions of Samuel the prophet, they were induced to return to the true worship, being assured by him that when they did this God would deliver them out of the hand of the Philistines. So they gathered together to Mizpeh, and offered sacrifices to the Lord. When their enemies heard this, they, with their lords, went up against them. Then the children of Israel were afraid, and entreated Samuel to cry unto God for them, that they might be delivered. Then the prophet offered up a burnt offering, and while the fire was consuming the lamb on the altar, the Philistines drew near to battle; but the prayer of Samuel went up as holy incense with the smoke of the sacrifice before God, and the Lord answered and sent such mighty thunderings as to utterly rout the army of the Philistines, and they were smitten before Israel and so fully subdued as no more to trouble Israel all the days of Samuel.

It was in answer to prayer,—the prayer of one of like passions with us,—that for three years and six months the heavens gave forth no rain. It was in answer to his supplications the rain again descended to refresh the dry and barren soil. It was in answer to Elijah's prayer the widow's son was raised to life. It was in answer to his prayer the fire descended and consumed the sacrifice offered by him to the Most High, although four barrels of water had previously been poured thereon and the wood three successive times, thus drenching it completely and filling the trench also with water. The fire consumed not only the offering, but also the twelve stones on which it was laid, the wood and the water also, thus giving to the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal, the four hundred prophets of the groves, and all Israel, the proof that the God he worshiped was the only true God who answers prayer.

It would seem as though this miracle would have had a wide-spread and lasting influence; but it was not so, and fire must again descend from heaven to remind idolators that there is a God in Israel.

About fourteen years after the event spoken of, Moab rebelled against Israel, in the days of Ahaziah the son of Ahab. And Ahaziah fell through a lattice that was in his upper room, and was in consequence much injured. Instead of sending to a prophet of the Lord for counsel, he sent messengers to inquire of Baalzebub, the god of Ekron, if he should recover of his disease. While on their way they met Elijah, who rebuked them for their rejection of the Lord, and then told them that the king would surely die. They immediately retraced their steps, and gave the king the message of the prophet. Then the king sent unto Elijah a captain with fifty men to bid the prophet come to him.

Then Elijah prayed if he were a man of God that fire might come down from heaven and consume the captain and his fifty. Immediately fire descended and consumed them. Again another captain of fifty was sent, and again the prophet called for the fire to come down and consume them, and his prayer was immediately answered. The king dispatched a third captain with his fifty, and now, a sufficient demonstration having been given of his divine commission, he is permitted to accompany them to the king.

It was in answer to Elisha's prayer that the vast host of the Syrians who surrounded the city of Dothan were smitten with blindness, and while thus blind he conducted them into the midst of Samaria, and then he asked the Lord to open their eyes, and when they saw, behold they were in Samaria, in the power of their enemies. But the prophet would not suffer the king of Israel to smite them, but commanded a bountiful provision to be made for them, and then kindly sent them to their master. The result was, the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Israel. Elisha also prayed for the restoration of a dead child to life, and was answered.

At one time Hezekiah the king of Judah was sick unto death. Then he cried unto the Lord for restoration, and the Lord heard his prayer and sent the prophet Isaiah to tell him his petition was granted, that he would heal him, and on the third day he should go up to the house of the Lord. Then the king asked a sign, by which he might be assured that he would go up to the temple on the third day, even that the shadow might return ten degrees backward in the dial of Ahaz. Then the prophet cried unto the Lord for the sign, and it was graciously granted for the confirmation of the promise.

We might multiply the instances recorded in the Old Testament record of the wonderful deliverances wrought out for God's people in answer to prayer. We might dwell upon the interesting illustrations recorded in the book of Daniel, of the power of prayer in behalf of the worthies cast into the fiery furnace; of Daniel in the lion's den, and the visit of the angel Gabriel to the prophet, who had been fasting and praying several days for light respecting "the times and seasons."

We have, however, adduced enough to show how man could prevail with God by fervent prayer, even before the "new and living way" had been consecrated, opening a communication within the Holy place; and now we will briefly examine some of those instances recorded under the new dispensation, and we shall find that God has not changed, but still attends to the cry of his church, and enriches them with many exceeding great and precious promises for their encouragement. Jesus had told his disciples that "all things whatsoever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." Again, "And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." "Ask and receive, that your joy may be full." These are a few of the precious promises bequeathed to his people. Were there none others, they are alone sufficient to inspire faith in every consecrated heart. M. D. W.

THE HAPPY LAND.

I have heard of a land that is ever bright,
Where friends never change, nor fade from our sight;
To meet my dear Savior who thither will come,
With all the redeemed, my spirit doth long.

CHORUS.

I want to cross over, don't you, where he reigns,
And join the bright angels on Eden's fair plains?
I want to be gathered with all the redeemed,—
'Tis over the river, where the fields are all green.

I have heard that there flowers are ever in bloom,
And always send forth the richest perfume;
I've heard that no sickness or death will be there,
No sin to molest, or fill with despair.

I've heard that the blest on that happy shore
Will never be hungry or thirst any more;
The light of the city which sweetly hath shone,
Proceeds from the Lamb, who sits on the throne.

I've heard there are pleasures unspeakably sweet,
And tones of affection both holy and deep;
I've heard that all tears will be wiped from the eye;
For that happy land my spirit doth sigh.

Then on let us press, for Jesus is near,
And strengthen each other with words of good cheer;
With zeal ever buoyant and courage ne'er slack,
Let's be true to our King, and never draw back.

GOOD SERMONS.

I like them, certainly I do, real good ones. I want the best. Those sermons that men read after somebody else writes them, those that men take out of their own "wits," those that are said off independent of Him who said, "I am with you," I do not like them.

There is another sort of sermons that I am in love with. None other edify or comfort me. They are not found in "lawyers' paper," nor made in colleges. They are not made up of quotations, or any human heads. They are built on Bible truths. They come from the heart. They go to the heart. They do good. I will tell you where such sermons may be found. ON YOUR KNEES! That is where Daniel got his wisdom.

O, ye "servants and handmaids," on whom the Spirit of God has been poured, abide in the Spirit, be filled with the Spirit, so shall you talk in the Spirit and do good to those who hear.

Ask no DD.'s with you to stay,
But kneel alone and read and pray,

if you want to be effectual laborers. Let the BIBLE be your text-book, your commentary, your dictionary, the Holy Ghost your counselor, your guide, and the Lord Jesus Christ the Master whom you serve. "PREACH THE WORD."

Go into the "highways and hedges." The people need you there. Climb the hills and mountains, stop in the valleys, for there are a few sheep hid away in these places. Preach to the CHURCH. Get that right, and then you can have boldness to speak to sinners. Reprove them for cheating, tattling, coveting, and going contrary to the Bible in various directions. Encourage those that are living right to keep moving on. Tell them of victory and ETERNAL LIFE. God bless his servants and bring them where they can sing—

"Safe at home."

GOOD NEWS FROM MAINE.

BRO. GRANT:—Our hearts have been made glad, recently, by a new manifestation that the hand of the Lord is not shortened, nor his ear heavy. Bro. J. T. Jordan, of Poland, and Bro. French, of Norway, were here on the 30th of February, and held a short series of meetings, in which the power of God seemed clearly evinced. Being persuaded that duty called, they returned on the 4th of March, and held meetings over the following Sabbath; and from this series of meetings three of our neighbors have to date their starting point, in the narrow way, from nature's darkness, into the marvellous light of the Son of God. Others concerned for their safety, are inquiring the way. May they find that new and living way created by the blood of the everlasting covenant, without which, no man cometh unto the Father.

Thus amid the gathering omens of these last days, and the oft-repeated query, "Where is the promise of his coming?" God seems to be plucking some as brands from the burning; and thus, we trust he will continue to do, till the sunset of probation. "The Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy."

DEATH WARRANT OF CHRIST.

Chance has put into our hands the most imposing and interesting judicial document, to all christians, that has ever been recorded in human annals; that is, the identical death warrant of our Lord Jesus Christ. We transcribe the document from a copy of the translation:

Sentence rendered by Pontius Pilate, acting Governor of Lower Galilee, that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death on the cross.

In the year seventeen of the empire of Tiberius Cæsar and the 25th day of March, the city of Holy Jerusalem; Anna and Caiphas being priests, sacrificators of the people of God, Pontius Pilate, Governor of Lower Galilee, sitting on the presidential chair of the pretory, condemns Jesus of Nazareth to die on the cross between two thieves—the great and notorious evidence of the people—saying:

1. He is a seducer.
2. He is seditious.
3. He is an enemy of the law.
4. He calls himself falsely the Son of God.
5. He calls himself King of Israel.
6. He entered into the temple followed by a multitude, bearing palm branches in their hands.

Order the first centurion, Quilius Cornelius, to lead him to the place of execution.

Forbid any person whomsoever, either poor or rich, to oppose the death of Jesus.

The witnesses that signed the death of Jesus are, 1st. Daniel Robani, a Pharisee; 2d. Joannus Horobable; 3d. Raphael Robani; 4th. Capet, a citizen.

Jesus shall go out of the city by the gate Strenous.

The above sentences are engraved on a copper plate; on one side are written these words: "A similar plate is sent to each tribe." It was found in an antiquate vase of white marble, while excavating in the city Aquilla in the kingdom of Naples, in the year 1825, and was discovered by the Commissariat of Arts, attached to the French armies. At the expedition of Naples it was found enclosed in a box of ebony, in the sacristy of the Cuartem. The vase is in the chapel of Caserta. The French translation was made by the members of the Commission of Arts. The children requested earnestly that the plate might not be taken away from them. The request was granted as a reward for the army. M. Denon, one of the savans, caused a plate to be made of the model, on which he had engraved the above sentence; at the sale of his collection of curiosities, it was bought by Lord Loward for 5,880f.

ROUND SHOULDERS.

In some parts of Switzerland, that land of beautiful scenery, but principally in low damp valleys, shut out from the full influence of sunshine, and a free circulation of the air by high mountains, the inhabitants are seriously afflicted with a swelling of the neck called "goiter." It is sometimes seen in this country, and all will at once recognize the fact that it is a hideous deformity. Now, so common is goiter in these valleys, that little is thought of it, and by some it is considered rather an ornament than otherwise. In our own country, land of freedom, land of progress, land of promise, nearly all the ladies, nearly all the gentlemen, be they rich or poor, in high or low life, have a deformity. And so common is it that, like the Swiss goitered people, they don't think anything about it. Indeed, if we now and then find a person free from it, we are certain he is proud and haughty, rather than natural, so much has our taste been perverted. I speak of "round shoulders," hollow chests, and stooping forms. There are, perhaps, not three persons in any school of fifty pupils, but have them. It is so among people of nearly all professions and occupations, sexes and ages. Indeed, our whole arrangement of society could have been no better calculated if on purpose to produce them. Military men and sea captains are usually exempt, and so are Indians and those peasant women of Italy and other countries who carry burthens on their heads. School teachers are often exempt, though not always. Ladies with excessive vanity often escape.

Now what are the causes of this deformity, the consequences, and the remedy? First, and in general, round shoulders are caused by the prevailing practice of doing everything in a bent-over position from childhood up, so that, like the pumpkin growing between two rails, we grow into bad forms. The low desks in our school rooms, and the habit of placing our books on them and bending over to study, produces round shoulders. I never knew a school-house with desks high enough, and do not believe there is one in America—perhaps not in the world. They ought to be so high that bending over them would be impossible, and the top adjustable so as to be set at any angle of inclination. The desks we use in all our offices, shops, and places of business, are constructed as if man was hardly yet metamorphosed from some lower order of four-footed being to what God made him—upright.

The posititions which we assume in our work tend to produce stooping. Digging potatoes, hoeing corn, and chopping, bring us into stooping posture; and unless we counteract the effects of such postures, we stay there. All sorts of women's work, and especially sewing, produce stooping. Mechanics stoop because their work makes them. Every sort of labor in a bent-over position, unless counteracted in some other way, tends to produce round shoulders.

The chairs we sit in are mostly made for deformed people. Persons with square shoulders are pained and made uneasy by sitting in them. It is even questionable whether our chairs were not better without backs—(I mean those in which we sit to write and do work, and not our chairs for parlor and sitting room use)—than that they should, as they now do, crowd the shoulders forward and cramp the chest, and these with backs should be made after a normal and not abnormal standard.

The way in which we lie in bed, helps to produce round shoulders. High bolsters and higher pillows on top of them, may make a bed look fine, and be very convenient for those who wish to watch their pretty toes all night; but if we wish to rise in the mornins an inch taller than when we went to bed, and preserve an upright form, we must not seek it by such means. True, the head should be kept higher than the feet, but not by bending the neck or back. Let the foot of the bed be a little the lowest; and if we lie on the back, lie without a pillow; or if on the side, with one high enough to keep the head in a line with the body.

Weakness of the muscles of the side and back produces stooping. The spinal column is kept in an upright position by groups of muscles which move the spine in any direction. When these muscles act harmoniously, the body is held in its proper position; but when they become weak they fail to support the spinal column, and over it goes.

But enough of causes which may vary for different persons. Let us look at effects:

First, round shoulders and stooping forms detract from a fine personal appearance, either when standing, sitting, or walking. Women like a beautiful face, eyes, feet, hands, fine dress, ornaments, splendid houses, horses, etc., and take great pains, often run great risks of life to obtain them. Why not work as hard for fine forms?

But, laying aside all thoughts of good looks, and turning for a moment to our ability to "do and to dare," we find that a truly graceful posture is the only easy one; that where the "bearing" of the body is not correct, as in stooping, we wear ourselves out by spending strength to support ourselves in an unnatural position; that those who go about their business gracefully, do more, and do it easier, than the awkward. The boy who sits erect in writing does not become exhausted as he who leans over on the desk. If we were to displace the bearings of our watches, printing-presses, and engines, so as to cause great friction where there should be none, very soon our machinery would wear out; besides, it would require so much power to accomplish results. Although the human body is more accommodating than machinery, yet the same rule is applicable in degree.

Stooping is unhealthful. The lungs are cramped, and do not fully inflate. This brings on consumption; and besides the blood being only half oxygenized, we only half live. Nothing is so important in securing good health and good feelings, as thorough breathing.

The cure lies in higher desks in our school-houses, better chairs, smaller pillows on our beds, less work in bad positions, and vigorous training of the muscles of the chest, back, and sides, in proper positions for counteracting the effects of sedentary habits and of work.

Gymnasiums in all our schools, with competent persons to give instructions and training, will do much; but the drill must be more than a slow, measured walk; it must be vigorous drill, and, besides, it must not allow any training that permits false positions, and must strengthen those muscles, weakness in which produces stooping.

Plato said no republic was complete without its gymnasiums. This is true of all schools; and more, in all cities and towns the gymnastic hall, well ventilated, lighted, and warmed, where the sedentary, the studious, those confined much in-doors, both male and female, can, in appropriate costume, throw off the restraints of a confined life, and take vigorous body training under a master, with music, is full as important as was the gymnasium in the days of Plato.—Home Journal.

EFFECTS OF TOBACCO.

The London Lancet, in referring to the recent researches of Dr. Richardson with regard to the effects of tobacco upon the health, says:—

"In this inquiry every position has been founded on individual research, and though in some instances the research has rested on the previous labors of other inquirers, the evidence has been confirmed by new observation. Condensed into a few sentences the details of the recent inquiry will be found in the following summary:

1. The effects that result from smoking are due to different agents imbibed by the smoker—viz., carbonic acid, ammonia, nicotine, a volatile empyreumatic substance, and a bitter extract. The more common effects are traceable to the carbonic acid and ammonia; the rarer and more severe to the nicotine, the empyreumatic substance, and the extract.

2. The effects produced are very transitory, the poison finding a ready exit from the body.

3. All the evils of smoking are functional in character; and no confirmed smoker can ever be said, so long as he indulges in the habit, to be well. But it does not follow that he is becoming the subject of organic and fatal disease because he smokes.

4. Smoking produces disturbances in the blood, of the stomach, of the heart, of the organs of sense, of the brain, of the nervous filaments and sympathetic or organic nerves, of the mucous membrane of the mouth, and of the bronchial surface of the lungs."

TREATMENT OF CROUP.

Hall's Journal of Health says: Croup is an inflamation of the inner surface of the windpipe. Inflamation implies heat, and that heat must be subdued, or the patient will inevitably die. If prompt efforts are made to cool the parts in case of an attack of croup, relief will be as prompt as it is surprising and delightful. All know that cold applied to a hot skin cools it, but all do not as well know and understand that hot water applied to an inflamed skin will as certainly cool it off. Hence the application of ice-cold water with linen cloths, or almost boiling water with woolen flannel, is very efficient in the cure of croup. Take two or three pieces of woolen flannel, or two folds, large enough to cover the whole throat and upper part of the chest; put these in a pan of water as hot as the hand can bear, and keep it thus hot by adding water from a boiling tea-kettle at hand; let two or three of the flannels be in hot water all the time, and one on the throat all the time, with a dry flannel covering the wet one, so as to keep the heat in to some extent; the flannels should not be so wet when put on as to dribble the water, for it is important to keep the clothing as dry as possible, and keep up the process until the phlegm is loose, the child is easier, and begins to fall asleep; then gently wrap a day flannel over the wet one which is on, so as to cover it up entirely, and the child is saved. When it wakes up both flannels will be dry.

OVERWORK.

The majority of the fatal diseases arising from overwork are now discovered. Give a human being overwork, and deficient food, and he is the victim of diarrhœa and dysentery. Give him overwork and bad air and bad food, and he is the victim of typhus. Give him overwork and bad air, and he is the victim of consumption. Give him over mental work, with whatever air and whatever food, and he is the victim of brain disease, and of one or another of its sequences; insanity, paralysis, diabetes, premature death in any case; death by suicide not unfrequently. Give him overwork purely physical, with air, with food, and the laboring heart, trying to keep up against its weariness, succumbs; and so the overworked smith, boatman, or woodheaver falls suddenly, not more honored than the prize-fighter of to-day, or the fleet slave and gladiator of a past and more barbarous age.—Dr. Richardson.

OVER-EATING.—As soon as you are sensible that you have eaten too much, take a walk, gradually increasing its rapidity until there is a free perspiration, and continue at this gait until every feeling of discomfort about the stomach or lungs has disappeared, then cool off very slowly in a closed room, and eat not an atom until the second meal thereafter, thus omitting one.

FRIED IN FAT.—All articles of food prepared by the action of hot fat, are rendered indigestible in proportion as they are thus acted upon. This fact is so well known, and so thoroughly demonstrated by experiment and scientific investigation, that I do not deem it necessary to argue this point at all—Ex.

THE LONELY PILGRIM.

(From the Jubilee Harp.)

I walk a lonely pilgrim here,
O'er life's uneven way;
My aching heart keeps hoping for
A bright and better day;
A glorious home, a goodly land,
The blessed, heavenly rest;
And well I know that land is near,
The home of all who're blest.

I walk alone, and oft am sad,
And fall the briny tears;
My heart is grieved with trials sorey
And pressed with many cares.
The better land no sorrow knows,—
There hushed is every sigh;
The Savior's hand in kindness wipes
The tear-drop from each eye.

I walk alone, and yet am glad;
The blessed promise's given,
To cheer the heart, the lowly one,
Towards that promised heaven.
The humble path my Savior walked,
I scorn it not to tread;
The frowns and scoffs my Savior bore
May fall upon my head.

I stand upon his precious word,
My soul rejoiceth free,
The glorious light the gospel gives
Is light that shines for me.
I'll suffer now, I'll triumph then;
I'll die for Jesus here;
In that bright world I'll live again,
A conqueror's crown to wear.

For the World's Crisis.

NO PROBATION AFTER THE SECOND ADVENT.

I think it must be apparent to all who "search the Scriptures," that the coming of the Lord in the clouds of heaven is ever represented, both in the Old and New Testaments, as a day of joy, perfect and everlasting triumph to the child of God; but of sorrow, anguish, and utter hopelessness and despair to those who "know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."—2 Thes. 1: 8. But as the readers of the Crisis believe generally that they shall receive their reward with Paul AT THAT DAY, I forbear multiplying scripture on that point. 2 Tim. 4: 8. And let us ever bear in mind that the Scriptures ever recognize but TWO classes—the righteous and wicked; and to one of these classes each of us belongs, according to Christ,—"He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad"; and these two classes are eternally separated "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him," as is fully apparent from Matt. 25: 32 and 13: 49, as well as many other passages.

I know that an effort has been put forth to make out that "infants" constitute a third class, as being neither righteous or wicked; but inspiration has positively decided them to belong to the righteous,—"Of such is the kingdom of God"; and then 1 Cor. 6: 9 says, "The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God." And then when some of Christ's disciples began to feel so uplifted they needed converting over, Christ took a little child and set him in their midst as an example, and plainly told them that except they reformed and became like little children, they should not enter the kingdom of God. These scriptures as well as others plainly prove that God recognizes children as belonging to the class called righteous.

But a few scriptures to show that the coming of Christ will be a day of terror and utter despair to those who know not God:—

Isa. 13: 6: 9,—"Howl ye; for the day of the Lord is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty. Therefore shall all hands be faint, and every man's heart shall melt: and they shall be afraid; pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them; they shall be in pain as a woman that travaileth: they shall be amazed one at another; their faces shall be as flames. Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it." Joel 1: "Alas for the day! for the day of the Lord is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come." Jer. 6: 10,—"For this is the day of the Lord God of hosts, a day of vengeance, that he may avenge him of his adversaries." Zeph. 1: 14–18,—"The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord: the mighty man shall cry there bitterly. That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness. A day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high towers. And I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk as blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord: and their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as the dung. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy: for he shall make even a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land."

This is a small part of what might be taken from the Old Testament, but we will come to the New, where it speaks of the sign of the Son of man appearing in heaven, which causes all the tribes of the earth to mourn. Then in Rev. 1: 7,—"Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him."

Question. Will the Jews be an exception to these ALL? Then in Rev. 6, where we are carried through a chain of prophecy spanning this dispensation, and the heavens depart as a scroll, there is a description of the anguish and despair of all classes and conditions of those unprepared, commencing with kings, and going down to slaves. "And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond-man, and every free-man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?"

Is there any thing here that looks like an opportunity or privilege of embracing Christ? Does not every bond-man and every free-man embrace all mortals who are left on the earth? If any were to have opportunity to embrace Christ after the second advent, it would seem the most like God to give it to the poor bond-man who has been kept in heathenish darkness, not having been permitted to read the Word; instead of those who have had the first and highest privilege, and yet obstinately refused to receive Christ when they could see the prophecies fulfilled before their eyes in his person; and when they saw him raise the dead, their hardened hearts determined from that time forth to imbrue their hands in his blood!

But notwithstanding reason and the many positive declarations of Scripture to the contrary, there are those who tenaciously maintain that there will be a "large class" who will have the opportunity to make their peace with God after Christ comes in the clouds of heaven. There seems however to be a variety of opinion as to who shall constitute this favored class. But all who believe in probation after the second advent agree that the JEWS will be thus favored, and most with whom I am acquainted include the heathen. I have heard some argue that all young persons (who have the good fortune to live at the second advent) who had been blinded by their teachers, would then have opportunity to get ready for the kingdom.

Well, now, if JEWS are to receive pardon for their sinful rebellion after Christ comes, permit me again to ask, Who are Jews? Are they American Indians, Mohammedans, Anglo-Saxons, or those who nominally profess the name of Jews, keeping some part of the Mosaic law? I have before given the historical argument in favor of Mohammedans and Anglo-Saxons being the fleshly descendants of Abraham, and would now mention that a number of reasons are given by Penn and others that the American Indians descended from the Israelites; but I will only give one quoted by Mr. Robbins, author of "All Religions," etc., relative to Dr. Boudinot.

"Few persons have taken more pains to learn the character and manners of the American Indians than the late venerable Dr. Boudinot of New Jersey. In his valuable and very interesting work, entitled 'A STAR IN THE WEST,' he has given to the world the results of his researches on this subject. He is fully persuaded that a part, at least, of the American Indians are the descendants of the long lost ten tribes of Israel! A great number of facts are introduced, from the manners of the Indians, from their language, and especially from their religious rites and opinions, which, if they do not prove the correctness of his opinion, give it at least a high degree of probability."

Now to which of these classes do the promises belong, if it still be contended that they belong to the flesh? There is quite a difference in the faith of these parties. Mohammedans and Anglo-Saxons believe the Savior has come once,—the nominal Jews do not: but it appears the two former classes possess the greatest amount of Abrahamic blood. I think we shall be obliged to return to the Word of God,—that it takes an inward work to make a Jew.—Rom. 2: 28.

Is there opportunity for any, be their name or blood what it may, who are found unreconciled to God at the second advent, to make their peace with him after this time? How will Jesus Christ be revealed? In mercy, as when the angels chanted his natal song on Bethlehem's plains? Nay, verily; but "in flaming fire"! Dispensing mercy? Nay, but "taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." Have the nominal Jews obeyed the gospel of Jesus Christ? Well, what then? Why, they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." At what period will this punishment occur? The next verse will tell: "When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe."

In Rev. 12th the church is represented as bringing forth a man-child, which was caught up to God and his throne. This man-child was to rule all nations with a rod of iron.—Verse 5. As this has never been fulfilled, we would inquire, WHEN will it be? Ps. 2: 8, 9, shows it is when Christ asks and the Father gives him the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. The Father gives the wicked world to Christ at his (Christ's) request, but at the same time stipulates what shall be done with them. Read the next verse: "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel."

The 19th of Rev. brings to view in glowing language the second coming of Christ, the joy of his saints in celebrating the marriage supper, etc., and the 15th verse shows that the same disposition will be made of the nations as in Ps. 2: 9: "And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God."

There are many passages which prove that the saints will be with Christ in the execution of the judgment. Rev. 2; 26, 27 proves they will act in full harmony with the command given to the Son in Ps. 2: 9;—"And he that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations." Well, Master, how will this power over the nations you give this overcomer be exercised? In dispensing mercy, and offering them salvation? Read the next verse, and that will decide the matter: "And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father."

Now if ruling with a rod of iron and dashing the nations in shivers is dispensing mercy, I do not understand language. Look at the figure employed—an earthern dish broken in shivers! Question: Are such shivered fragments ever made of great use by the potter?

This agrees with the parable of the Nobleman (Luke 19), who went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and return; and at his return reckoned with his servants, and at the same time disposes of his enemies in the following way: "But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me." Now who so positively declares they will not have Jesus of Nazareth to reign over them as the nominal Jew?

Some time since a christian minister broached the subject of Christ to a Jewish Rabbi in New York city. The Rabbi with an air of contempt described to him the mean, low birth of his Savior; how Joseph and Mary had to run away in the night to go to Egypt to save the life of his Savior: and his proud heart manifested itself in his person as he brought his splendid walking cane to the floor and sneeringly inquired of him, "Do you think I shall worship such a being as that?" Facts, from the days of Christ until the present, show it is not for want of knowledge that the nominal Jew rejects Christ, but malice and obstinacy. They are determined to have a Savior that will give them great pomp and power in this state. Truly, "Rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft."

In the parable of the wheat and tares, the Savior expressly declares "the harvest is the end of the world," and the reapers are the angels. It is THE harvest, (definite), not a harvest, as though there might be another. Christ shows in this parable an eternal separation of the two classes (righteous and wicked) at the harvest; the one "shines forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father," the other is cast into a furnace of fire, where there is wailing and gnashing of teeth. In the 47th verse of the same chapter another likeness is presented proving the same thing: "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."

But I hasten to where the disciples asked Christ to tell them what should be the sign of his coming and the end of the world. Christ complies with this request, and gives them a series of events embracing the papal persecution, then the darkening of the sun, moon, falling stars, distress of nations; then further adds it shall be as it was in the days of Noah and in the days of Lot, at his second coming.

Let us inquire, In what particulars will it be as in the days of Noah and Lot? Every thing will not be the same. No. The prominent particulars set forth are, unbelief in the EVENT, and the entire destruction of all who did not believe. Hence they were going on in pleasure and their worldly schemes, though they had been faithfully warned. Please read the Savior's own words, and see if there looks like any chance after the Son of man is revealed. "And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot: they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all: even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." "Even thus"—that is, just so, in the same manner, as the Sodomites who did not believe were destroyed the same day that Lot went out of Sodom. So shall it be IN THE DAY when the Son of man is revealed! What think you? will there be any opportunity to obtain an interest in Christ after he is revealed in the clouds of heaven?

Bible students well know I have not presented a tithe of what might be quoted on this point, but this must suffice for the present. The more I examine this subject, the more exceedingly do I marvel that any should teach such a doctrine.

DEATH AND RESURRECTION.—NO. 2.

(This was written for the Harbinger and refused.)

Having shown in number one that death as entailed upon our race by our federal head and parent of all, is not penal, and also that as the family of Adam fell under the penalty of law, without reference to their own individual and personal action, and consequently needed the grace of Jehovah to be executed in their behalf to relieve them from a doom, that they as independent individuals had no agency in bringing on themselves,—I shall now proceed to show that the grace of God to the race of Adam's children is as universal as the sentence of death, and will as positively be executed without reference to the individual acts of the children of Adam. First, reason claims that if God executed upon Adam's children the death penalty pronounced upon him while they were in his loins, to maintain the honor of his own name and majesty of his holy law without reference to this personal act, then in his grace he should also without reference to their personal acts, after the majesty of law has been vindicated, and his own honor maintained, set them at liberty, that they may not say his ways are not equal. Reason also says that his grace thus manifested to a sinful race would redound to his glory. But what is reason, if not in harmony with the word of God? Nothing at all. Then do the Scriptures support reason in the foregoing conclusion? Yes, they do when they are not choked and frightened away, until they speak any thing, nothing, and every thing, according to the will, tradition, or caprice of their interpreters.

Paul, the apostle of Jesus, most fully sets forth the subject in Rom. 5, where he saith, "But not as the offence, so also is the FREE GIFT; for if through the offence of "ONE" (man, Adam,) many be dead, much more the "GRACE" of God, and the gift (of life) by (his) GRACE, which is by ONE MAN, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many." Now would it be handling the word of God faithfully to affirm that the many in the latter clause of the text does not contain or embrace as much as the former? If not, the conclusion is that the gracious gift of life from the dead entailed by Adam is just as extensive as the judgment inflicted by Jehovah's sentence, being executed on Adam's children; and thus we see that "life from the dead" is a blessing to all the human family; the result of the disinterested benevolence of our Father in heaven, an exhibition of his kindness and mercy to a sinful race; and to pervert his goodness into a vindictive malevolence, may do for perverted reason, and those who appear to be willingly misled and deceived, but not for those whose eye is single, and the whole body full of light.

But says the affirmant, "If then it is a truth that the wicked dead are to be made alive for any purpose, it must not be left to inference, because if they live again from the dead it is a penal life." We might with just as much truth say that the life of Adam's children in the present state is a "penal life," as to say that life from the dead is a penal life; for the one is cut off in the end by the death penalty for sin, as really as the other; and if one is penal, why not the other? and then the longer the life of mortal aches, pains, and woes, the greater the penal curse. Upon such hypothesis the venerable patriarch Methuselah was cursed above all men.

If God in his grace bestow the blessing of life upon all the posterity of man from the dead, and that without reference to their acts, or agency, as really as death was entailed without their agency, is it not turning the grace of God into malevolence to say that because some of the recipients of this grace, having abused the same by continuing in sin and rebellion against his beneficence, and by consequence compelling him as a moral governor of the universe to execute the law of sin and death upon them individually for their own individual and personal transgressions, that therefore the gracious gift of life from the dead is designed and given by Jehovah's goodness as a "penal" curse; for the gracious gift is as distant from the penal curse as life is opposite to death, and to blend them together as a penal curse, is to bring a reproach upon the administration of the just and holy Arbiter of human destiny.

But it is said by some, that Christ Jesus our Lord, cannot raise up the wicked to corporeal mortal life, because he has no such life in himself, being since his own resurrection immortal and spiritual, hence can only give such life. My reason tells me that if Jesus is possessed of "all power in heaven and earth," as he claimed, he can do as he pleases about the matter. "But will such a re-living be participated in by the unholy?" To settle this question, it is necessary to determine what is the penalty or wages of sin? what is its proper penalty? Wrong here again, for the re-living is no part of the penalty, but Jehovah's GRACE, unmerited, unasked, and yet freely bestowed. Hence the "re-living of the unholy," instead of depending in the least on the nature of the penalty for sin, depends entirely and solely upon Jehovah's purpose as given to man in his revelation, together with his power to perform his words or purpose; and if he designs the "reliving" of "the unholy," that they may appear before him in the day of his judgment, he has so revealed, and will so execute in his own time. Hence if no such revelation exists, we have no light on the subject. But if it does exist, let us not resist it, but meekly acquiesce in Jehovah's administration to the glory of his adorable name forever.

PRAYER.—No. 2.

Years had passed away. Notwithstanding the many miracles and deliverances wrought out for Israel, they were still a rebellious people, an idolatrous nation, forsaking Him who had shown them multiplied wonders and mighty deeds for the worship of idols. Through the faithful admonitions of Samuel the prophet, they were induced to return to the true worship, being assured by him that when they did this God would deliver them out of the hand of the Philistines. So they gathered together to Mizpeh, and offered sacrifices to the Lord. When their enemies heard this, they, with their lords, went up against them. Then the children of Israel were afraid, and entreated Samuel to cry unto God for them, that they might be delivered. Then the prophet offered up a burnt offering, and while the fire was consuming the lamb on the altar, the Philistines drew near to battle; but the prayer of Samuel went up as holy incense with the smoke of the sacrifice before God, and the Lord answered and sent such mighty thunderings as to utterly rout the army of the Philistines, and they were smitten before Israel and so fully subdued as no more to trouble Israel all the days of Samuel.

It was in answer to prayer,—the prayer of one of like passions with us,—that for three years and six months the heavens gave forth no rain. It was in answer to his supplications the rain again descended to refresh the dry and barren soil. It was in answer to Elijah's prayer the widow's son was raised to life. It was in answer to his prayer the fire descended and consumed the sacrifice offered by him to the Most High, although four barrels of water had previously been poured thereon and the wood three successive times, thus drenching it completely and filling the trench also with water. The fire consumed not only the offering, but also the twelve stones on which it was laid, the wood and the water also, thus giving to the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal, the four hundred prophets of the groves, and all Israel, the proof that the God he worshiped was the only true God who answers prayer.

It would seem as though this miracle would have had a wide-spread and lasting influence; but it was not so, and fire must again descend from heaven to remind idolators that there is a God in Israel.

About fourteen years after the event spoken of, Moab rebelled against Israel, in the days of Ahaziah the son of Ahab. And Ahaziah fell through a lattice that was in his upper room, and was in consequence much injured. Instead of sending to a prophet of the Lord for counsel, he sent messengers to inquire of Baalzebub, the god of Ekron, if he should recover of his disease. While on their way they met Elijah, who rebuked them for their rejection of the Lord, and then told them that the king would surely die. They immediately retraced their steps, and gave the king the message of the prophet. Then the king sent unto Elijah a captain with fifty men to bid the prophet come to him.

Then Elijah prayed if he were a man of God that fire might come down from heaven and consume the captain and his fifty. Immediately fire descended and consumed them. Again another captain of fifty was sent, and again the prophet called for the fire to come down and consume them, and his prayer was immediately answered. The king dispatched a third captain with his fifty, and now, a sufficient demonstration having been given of his divine commission, he is permitted to accompany them to the king.

It was in answer to Elisha's prayer that the vast host of the Syrians who surrounded the city of Dothan were smitten with blindness, and while thus blind he conducted them into the midst of Samaria, and then he asked the Lord to open their eyes, and when they saw, behold they were in Samaria, in the power of their enemies. But the prophet would not suffer the king of Israel to smite them, but commanded a bountiful provision to be made for them, and then kindly sent them to their master. The result was, the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Israel. Elisha also prayed for the restoration of a dead child to life, and was answered.

At one time Hezekiah the king of Judah was sick unto death. Then he cried unto the Lord for restoration, and the Lord heard his prayer and sent the prophet Isaiah to tell him his petition was granted, that he would heal him, and on the third day he should go up to the house of the Lord. Then the king asked a sign, by which he might be assured that he would go up to the temple on the third day, even that the shadow might return ten degrees backward in the dial of Ahaz. Then the prophet cried unto the Lord for the sign, and it was graciously granted for the confirmation of the promise.

We might multiply the instances recorded in the Old Testament record of the wonderful deliverances wrought out for God's people in answer to prayer. We might dwell upon the interesting illustrations recorded in the book of Daniel; of the power of prayer in behalf of the worthies cast into the fiery furnace; of Daniel in the lion's den, and the visit of the angel Gabriel to the prophet, who had been fasting and praying several days for light respecting "the times and seasons."

We have, however, adduced enough to show how man could prevail with God by fervent prayer, even before the "new and living way" had been consecrated, opening a communication within the Holy place; and now we will briefly examine some of those instances recorded under the new dispensation, and we shall find that God has not changed, but still attends to the cry of his church, and enriches them with many exceeding great and precious promises for their encouragement. Jesus had told his disciples that "all things whatsoever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." Again, "And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." "Ask and receive, that your joy may be full." These are a few of the precious promises bequeathed to his people. Were there none others, they are alone sufficient to inspire faith in every consecrated heart.

THE HAPPY LAND.

I have heard of a land that is ever bright,
Where friends never change, nor fade from our sight;
To meet my dear Savior who thither will come,
With all the redeemed, my spirit doth long.

CHORUS.

I want to cross over, don't you, where he reigns,
And join the bright angels on Eden's fair plains?
I want to be gathered with all the redeemed,—
'Tis over the river, where the fields are all green.

I have heard that there flowers are ever in bloom,
And always send forth the richest perfume;
I've heard that no sickness or death will be there,
No sin to molest, or fill with despair.

I've heard that the blest on that happy shore
Will never be hungry or thirst any more;
The light of the city which sweetly hath shone,
Proceeds from the Lamb, who sits on the throne.

I've heard there are pleasures unspeakably sweet,
And tones of affection both holy and deep;
I've heard that all tears will be wiped from the eye;
For that happy land my spirit doth sigh.

Then on let us press, for Jesus is near,
And strengthen each other with words of good cheer;
With zeal ever buoyant and courage ne'er slack,
Let's be true to our King, and never draw back.

GOOD SERMONS.

I like them, certainly I do, real good ones. I want the best. Those sermons that men read after somebody else writes them, those that men take out of their own "wits," those that are said off independent of Him who said, "I am with you," I do not like them.

There is another sort of sermons that I am in love with. None other edify or comfort me. They are not found in "lawyers' paper," nor made in colleges. They are not made up of quotations, or any human heads. They are built on Bible truths. They come from the heart. They go to the heart. They do good. I will tell you where such sermons may be found. ON YOUR KNEES! That is where Daniel got his wisdom.

O, ye "servants and handmaids," on whom the Spirit of God has been poured, abide in the Spirit, be filled with the Spirit, so shall you talk in the Spirit and do good to those who hear.

Ask no DD.'s with you to stay,
But kneel alone and read and pray,

if you want to be effectual laborers. Let the BIBLE be your text-book, your commentary, your dictionary, the Holy Ghost your counselor, your guide, and the Lord Jesus Christ the Master whom you serve. "PREACH THE WORD."

Go into the "highways and hedges." The people need you there. Climb the hills and mountains, stop in the valleys, for there are a few sheep hid away in these places. Preach to the CHURCH. Get that right, and then you can have boldness to speak to sinners. Reprove them for cheating, tattling, coveting, and going contrary to the Bible in various directions. Encourage those that are living right to keep moving on. Tell them of victory and ETERNAL LIFE. God bless his servants and bring them where they can sing—

"Safe at home."

GOOD NEWS FROM MAINE.

BRO. GRANT:—Our hearts have been made glad, recently, by a new manifestation that the hand of the Lord is not shortened, nor his ear heavy. Bro. J. T. Jordan, of Poland, and Bro. French, of Norway, were here on the 30th of February, and held a short series of meetings, in which the power of God seemed clearly evinced. Being persuaded that duty called, they returned on the 4th of March, and held meetings over the following Sabbath; and from this series of meetings three of our neighbors have to date their starting point, in the narrow way, from nature's darkness, into the marvellous light of the Son of God. Others concerned for their safety, are inquiring the way. May they find that new and living way created by the blood of the everlasting covenant, without which, no man cometh unto the Father.

Thus amid the gathering omens of these last days, and the oft-repeated query, "Where is the promise of his coming?" God seems to be plucking some as brands from the burning; and thus, we trust he will continue to do, till the sunset of probation. "The Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy."

DEATH WARRANT OF CHRIST.

Chance has put into our hands the most imposing and interesting judicial document, to all christians, that has ever been recorded in human annals; that is, the identical death warrant of our Lord Jesus Christ. We transcribe the document from a copy of the translation:

Sentence rendered by Pontius Pilate, acting Governor of Lower Galilee, that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death on the cross.

In the year seventeen of the empire of Tiberius Cæsar and the 25th day of March, the city of Holy Jerusalem; Anna and Caiphas being priests, sacrificators of the people of God, Pontius Pilate, Governor of Lower Galilee, sitting on the presidential chair of the pretory, condemns Jesus of Nazareth to die on the cross between two thieves—the great and notorious evidence of the people—saying:

1. He is a seducer.
2. He is seditious.
3. He is an enemy of the law.
4. He calls himself falsely the Son of God.
5. He calls himself King of Israel.
6. He entered into the temple followed by a multitude, bearing palm branches in their hands.

Order the first centurion, Quillus Cornelius, to lead him to the place of execution.

Forbid any person whomsoever, either poor or rich, to oppose the death of Jesus.

The witnesses that signed the death of Jesus are, 1st. Daniel Robani, a Pharisee; 2d. Joannus Horobable; 3d. Rhapdel Robadi; 4th. Capet, a citizen.

Jesus shall go out of the city by the gate "Strenuous."

The above sentences are engraved on a copper plate; on one side are written these words: "A similar plate is sent to each tribe." It was found in an antiquate vase of white marble, while excavating in the city Aquilla in the kingdom of Naples, in the year 1825, and was discovered by the Commissariat of Arts, attached to the French armies. At the expedition of Naples it was found enclosed in a box of ebony, in the sacristy of the Cuartem. The vase is in the chapel of Caserta. The French translation was made by the members of the Commission of Arts. The children requested earnestly that the plate might not be taken away from them. The request was granted as a reward for the army. M. Denon, one of the savans, caused a plate to be made of the model, on which he had engraved the above sentence; at the sale of his collection of curiosities, it was bought by Lord Loward for 5,880f.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

ROUND SHOULDERS.

In some parts of Switzerland, that land of beautiful scenery, but principally in low damp valleys, shut out from the full influence of sunshine, and a free circulation of the air by high mountains, the inhabitants are seriously afflicted with a swelling of the neck called "goiter." It is sometimes seen in this country, and all will at once recognize the fact that it is a hideous deformity. Now, so common is goiter in these valleys, that little is thought of it, and by some it is considered rather an ornament than otherwise. In our own country, land of freedom, land of progress, land of promise, nearly all the ladies, nearly all the gentlemen, be they rich or poor, in high or low life, have a deformity. And so common is it that, like the Swiss goitered people, they don't think anything about it. Indeed, if we now and then find a person free from it, we are certain he is proud and haughty, rather than natural, so much has our taste been perverted. I speak of "round shoulders," hollow chests, and stooping forms. There are, perhaps, not three persons in any school of fifty pupils, but have them. It is so among people of nearly all professions and occupations, sexes and ages. Indeed, our whole arrangement of society could have been no better calculated if on purpose to produce them. Military men and sea captains are usually exempt, and so are Indians and those peasant women of Italy and other countries who carry burthens on their heads. School teachers are often exempt, though not always. Ladies with excessive vanity often escape.

Now what are the causes of this deformity, the consequences, and the remedy? First, and in general, round shoulders are caused by the prevailing practice of doing everything in a bent-over position from childhood up, so that, like the pumpkin growing between two rails, we grow into bad forms. The low desks in our school rooms, and the habit of placing our books on them and bending over to study, produces round shoulders. I never knew a school-house with desks high enough, and do not believe there is one in America—perhaps not in the world. They ought to be so high that bending over them would be impossible, and the top adjustable so as to be set at any angle of inclination. The desks we use in all our offices, shops, and places of business, are constructed as if man was hardly yet metamarphosed from some lower order of four-footed being to what God made him—upright.

The posititions which we assume in our work tend to produce stooping. Digging potatoes, hoeing corn, and chopping, bring us into stooping posture; and unless we counteract the effects of such postures, we stay there. All sorts of women's work, and especially sewing, produce stooping. Mechanics stoop because their work makes them. Every sort of labor in a bent-over position, unless counteracted in some other way, tends to produce round shoulders.

The chairs we sit in are mostly made for deformed people. Persons with square shoulders are pained and made uneasy by sitting in them. It is even questionable whether our chairs were not better without backs—(I mean those in which we sit to write and do work, and not our chairs for parlor and sitting room use)—than that they should, as they now do, crowd the shoulders forward and cramp the chest, and these with backs should be made after a normal and not abnormal standard.

The way in which we lie in bed, helps to produce round shoulders. High bolsters and higher pillows on top of them, may make a bed look fine, and be very convenient for those who wish to watch their pretty toes all night; but if we wish to rise in the mornins an inch taller than when we went to bed, and preserve an upright form, we must not seek it by such means. True, the head should be kept higher than the feet, but not by bending the neck or back. Let the foot of the bed be a little the lowest; and if we lie on the back, lie without a pillow; or if on the side, with one high enough to keep the head in a line with the body.

Weakness of the muscles of the side and back produces stooping. The spinal column is kept in an upright position by groups of muscles which move the spine in any direction. When these muscles act harmoniously, the body is held in its proper position; but when they become weak they fail to support the spinal column, and over it goes.

But enough of causes which may vary for different persons. Let us look at effects:

First, round shoulders and stooping forms detract from a fine personal appearance, either when standing, sitting, or walking. Women like a beautiful face, eyes, feet, hands, fine dress, ornaments, splendid houses, horses, etc., and take great pains, often run great risks of life to obtain them. Why not work as hard for fine forms?

But, laying aside all thoughts of good looks, and turning for a moment to our ability to "do and to dare," we find that a truly graceful posture is the only easy one; that where the "bearing" of the body is not correct, as in stooping, we wear ourselves out by spending strength to support ourselves in an unnatural position; that those who go about their business gracefully, do more, and do it easier, than the awkward. The boy who sits erect in writing does not become exhausted as he who leans over on the desk. If we were to displace the bearings of our watches, printing-presses, and engines, so as to cause great friction where there should be none, very soon our machinery would wear out; besides, it would require so much power to accomplish results. Although the human body is more accommodating than machinery, yet the same rule is applicable in degree.

Stooping is unhealthful. The lungs are cramped, and do not fully inflate. This brings on consumption; and besides the blood being only half oxygenized, we only half live. Nothing is so important in securing good health and good feelings, as thorough breathing.

The cure lies in higher desks in our schoolhouses, better chairs, smaller pillows on our beds, less work in bad positions, and vigorous training of the muscles of the chest, back, and sides, in proper positions for counteracting the effects of sedentary habits and of work.

Gymnasiums in all our schools, with competent persons to give instructions and training, will do much; but the drill must be more than a slow, measured walk; it must be vigorous drill, and, besides, it must not allow any training that permits false positions, and must strengthen those muscles, weakness in which produces stooping.

Plato said no republic was complete without its gymnasiums. This is true of all schools; and more, in all cities and towns the gymnastic hall, well ventilated, lighted, and warmed, where the sedentary, the studious, those confined much in-doors, both male and female, can, in appropriate costume, throw off the restraints of a confined life, and take vigorous body training under a master, with music, is full as important as was the gymnasium in the days of Plato.—Home Journal.

EFFECTS OF TOBACCO.

The London Lancet, in referring to the recent researches of Dr. Richardson with regard to the effects of tobacco upon the health, says:—

"In this inquiry every position has been founded on individual research, and though in some instances the research has rested on the previous labors of other inquirers, the evidence has been confirmed by new observation. Condensed into a few sentences the details of the recent inquiry will be found in the following summary:

1. The effects that result from smoking are due to different agents imbibed by the smoker—viz., carbonic acid, ammonia, nicotine, a volatile empyreumatic substance, and a bitter extract. The more common effects are traceable to the carbonic acid and ammonia; the rarer and more severe to the nicotine, the empyreumatic substance, and the extract.

2. The effects produced are very transitory, the poison finding a ready exit from the body.

3. All the evils of smoking are functional in character; and no confirmed smoker can ever be said, so long as he indulges in the habit, to be well. But it does not follow that he is becoming the subject of organic and fatal disease because he smokes.

4. Smoking produces disturbances in the blood, of the stomach, of the heart, of the organs of sense, of the brain, of the nervous filaments and sympathetic or organic nerves, of the mucous membrane of the mouth, and of the bronchial surface of the lungs."

TREATMENT OF CROUP.

Hall's Journal of Health says: Croup is an inflamation of the inner surface of the windpipe. Inflamation implies heat, and that heat must be subdued, or the patient will inevitably die. If prompt efforts are made to cool the parts in case of an attack of croup, relief will be as prompt as it is surprising and delightful. All know that cold applied to a hot skin cools it, but all do not as well know and understand that hot water applied to an inflamed skin will as certainly cool it off. Hence the application of ice-cold water with linen cloths, or almost boiling water with woolen flannel, is very efficient in the cure of croup. Take two or three pieces of woolen flannel, or two folds, large enough to cover the whole throat and upper part of the chest; put these in a pan of water as hot as the hand can bear, and keep it thus hot by adding water from a boiling tea-kettle at hand; let two or three of the flannels be in hot water all the time, and one on the throat all the time, with a dry flannel covering the wet one, so as to keep the heat in to some extent; the flannels should not be so wet when put on as to dribble the water, for it is important to keep the clothing as dry as possible, and keep up the process until the phlegm is loose, the child is easier, and begins to fall asleep; then gently wrap a day flannel over the wet one which is on, so as to cover it up entirely, and the child is saved. When it wakes up both flannels will be dry.

OVERWORK.

The majority of the fatal diseases arising from overwork are now discovered. Give a human being overwork, and deficient food, and he is the victim of diarrhœa and dysentery. Give him overwork and bad air and bad food, and he is the victim of typhus. Give him overwork and bad air, and he is the victim of consumption. Give him over mental work, with whatever air and whatever food, and he is the victim of brain disease, and of one or another of its sequences; insanity, paralysis, diabetes, premature death in any case; death by suicide not unfrequently. Give him overwork purely physical, with air, with food, and the laboring heart, trying to keep up against its weariness, succumbs; and so the overworked smith, boatman, or woodheaver falls suddenly, not more honored than the prize-fighter of to-day, or the fleet slave and gladiator of a past and more barbarous age.—Dr. Richardson.

OVER-EATING.—As soon as you are sensible that you have eaten too much, take a walk, gradually increasing its rapidity until there is a free perspiration, and continue at this gait until every feeling of discomfort about the stomach or lungs has disappeared, then cool off very slowly in a closed room, and eat not an atom until the second meal thereafter, thus omitting one.

FRIED IN FAT.—All articles of food prepared by the action of hot fat, are rendered indigestible in proportion as they are thus acted upon. This fact is so well known, and so thoroughly demonstrated by experiment and scientific investigation, that I do not deem it necessary to argue this point at all.—Ex.

ALL HAIL!

"Behold He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him." Even so, Amen.

Hail! thou long expected Savior,
On thy bright celestial throne;
With all the host of holy angels,
Claim the kingdom as thine own.

Tune your harps anew, ye seraphs,
Let your loud hosannas ring;
Now all praise and power and glory
Be to Christ our heavenly King.

Now redemption's work is ended,
Now the jubilee's begun;
Sound it loud through all creation,
Saints and angels, in your song.

Brightness of thy Father's glory,
Thou hast set thy people free;
Thou alone hast brought salvation,
Praise, unceasing praise to thee.

Sinner, now your days are ended,
See, the harvest now is past;
You who mercy's call rejected,
Lo! your doom is sealed at last.

"ALL LIVE UNTO GOD."—No. 3.

The Means,—The Release.

But the query naturally arises, How did the dying, rising, and reviving—living again—of Christ constitute him Lord of both? The term here seems to be used in a proprietary sense, from which comes the idea of his right of disposal, and the power of investiture seems to rest in the fulfilled conditions of dying—rising—and living again. But there was a work of obedience that Christ had to perform as a necessary prerequisite to the dying, in order to make that death available, neither expressed or implied in the text, but amply referred to by the apostle elsewhere. The proprietary investment could not have been an endowment from the Father, for he had pronounced the irreversible sentence by which "man" became a legal subject of death's empire, and not being a God of the dead, he could not go beyond the execution of sentence.

If then the investiture of proprietary Lordship was not by endowment, neither by obedience, whence the imperative necessity of filling full the law of obedience That never has nor ever will be abrogated, nor the execution of the sentence of death for sin, abnegated by its author; and there never was, or will be a time when justice can legitimately become injustice, and the law that only demanded obedience of man, was founded in justice and framed upon it, made only for man, it was expressly designed for his rule of action, and adapted to his nature and condition; hence, it was holy, just, and good But man only could and did by its transgression incur its penalty, man therefore only could satisfy its demand.

I am not insensible that the cry of heresy may be raised to this declaration, but the objectors themselves come to it when they admit that it was the "human nature only" that suffered and died. The infinity of the transgression is made the ground-work of the objection, but to me it is very singular that those who can and do see that the transgression of a "finite creature," being infinite in its effects, if not "counter-worked," cannot also see that an implicit obedience to the same divine commandment, also by a finite creature, being in accord with the will of God should not also to a greater extent, if possible, produce an infinite effect. Or, if Adam, as man, being finite, by going contrary to God's law could produce an infinite effect in transgression, then should it not necessarily follow that Christ, the second Adam, as man, by going in harmony with God's law much more produce an infinite effect, and consequently "since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead." The disastrous results of the transgression, nor the everlasting benefits of the atonement, do not therefore in either case depend so much upon the nature of the actors, as upon the nature of their actions. Consequently all this disturbance in the professedly christian world, as to Christ being the unoriginated and self-existent Deity, is abortive of good to his church, and would be better left alone until the "watchmen see eye to eye." So Clarke on Eph. 4: 8, taken from Ps. 68: 18, in his criticisms on, lakachta mattanoth baadam: "thou hast taken gifts in man, in Adam. The gifts which Jesus Christ distributes to man, he has received in man, in and by virtue of his incarnation." See Clarke.

Consequently, had a demon, or an angel, or any other being, even the Father, come and kept that law, without "taking on man's nature, the seed of Abraham," as Christ did, it would have availed nothing in man's behalf, it could have conferred no power "to save" on them; because they, being spirit, by the appetites of the flesh are not susceptible of being tempted—tried—in all points as man is, and without triumphing, gaining the victory over all fleshly lusts, there could be no such thing as raising flesh above and paramount to the law.

THUS CHRIST did do, and this was Christ's obedience, extending that submission even to death, i. e., gaining the victory even over the strongest natural or fleshly instinct, the love of LIFE. I apprehend this is what Paul alludes to in Heb. 5: 7, and constituted his "agony in the garden."

By this obedience, Christ wrought out for himself a legal fitness to become a SAVIOR, and he was only able to render such obedience, because of "the Spirit having been given to him not by measure," hence it is of grace and not of debt at last. Now, justice moved by goodness had cut Adam off from the tree of life lest he should eat and live forever, a miserable sinner in a suffering world, and sent him into the dominion of death. The soul life was forfeited and justice claimed its own, the sentence is executed, the penal claim is satisfied, and God is just in executing his laws. The first Adam by his disobedience had fallen under the power of a just law, and became the UNJUST; and the second Adam by his obedience, had raised himself entirely above the power of the same law, and became the JUST.

Now, if the obedience of Christ was any part of the redemption, and not a necessary preparatory work thereunto, why should HE DIE? Dr. Adam Clarke says, if my memory be correct, that he, having kept the law, might then have claimed an immunity from death, and theologians scatter the same doctrine broad cast all over the land, and skeptics, scoffers, and infidels repeat and make merry over it. Now I deny the correctness of the doctrine, and yet hold that he "died the JUST, for (on account of) the unjust," not that he suffered in the sinner's stead, "paid his debt," for then should the sinner, debtor, have been discharged, but CHRIST being just in his own personal relations to the law of God through obedience, yet having consented to "take on the seed of Abraham," (Heb. 2: 16, "Sinful flesh," Rom. 8: 3,) he had the sentence of death in himself, (i. e. in his flesh) from the moment that "human nature was taken on," for that was the Adamic nature that he took on, upon which the sentence of death had been pronounced in Adam as shown in its mortality, PROVING that men do not pass into hades for their personal sins, but as or on account of the UNJUST, Adam, in whom ALL DIED, not excepting the SINLESS SAVIOR of the world.

This view of the subject harmonizes with Christ's own declaration in Jno. 10: 17, 18. —"I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh—i. e., can take—it from me, but I lay it down of myself I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment—LAW—have I received of my Father." This power to lay down his soul life was in the commandment (law) of God that passed the sentence on the Adamic nature; and the power to take it again, rested in the same just law that gave Adam a right to the tree of life, in his—or while he was in obedience, and Christ voluntarily consented to come under its power, by taking on our nature. Justice killed the condemned, and justice made alive the innocent, and he recognized the principle as a righteous one in God's law.

CHRIST,—THE SAINTS,—THE KINGDOM AND DOMINION.

"But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever." Dan. 7: 18. Dan. 7: 27, shows where the kingdom is located. "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom." Please note, this kingdom is not located in the sky, as some teach. Daniel "saw in the night visions and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven. . . . . And there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

The above texts are sufficient to prove not only the locality, but also the extent or duration of the kingdom of Christ and the saints. But we are not left to these texts alone. Paul tells us in 2 Tim. 2, that "if we be dead with him (Christ) we shall also live with him. If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." The saints have the promise of sitting with Christ in his throne, even as he overcame and is sit down with his Father in his throne. To sit with Christ in his throne implies reigning and power. At the ascension of Christ to the Father's throne, he announced to his disciples that all power was given him in heaven and in earth. Paul says he is to retain that seat at the Father's right hand until his enemies are made his footstool. Christ is now our high priest, whom Paul says is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens. Heb. 8: 1. 1 Peter 3: 22 reads, —"Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God." Stephen at his death looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. According to the expressed determination of Jehovah, Christ shall sit at his right hand or in his throne, "until his enemies are made his footstool."

Another important text relative to this subject is found in 1 Cor. 15: 24–28. The subject of this chapter is the resurrection of the dead. "Then"—after the resurrection of them that are Christ's at his coming,—"then cometh the end." End of what? We think the meaning of the apostle is, that Christ has up to this time occupied his Father's throne, and ordered the affairs of heaven and earth to prepare a holy people to share with him the dominion and the kingdom. The time allotted to that object may be called the day of grace, which now ends. The seventh and last trumpet sounds; the voice of the archangel is heard; the dead in Christ are raised, the living righteous are changed, Christ no longer sits as our high priest at the right hand of power, but as executioner, as the judge of quick and dead; his work in the heavenly place is finished; his Spirit no longer strives with man. Great voices in heaven are heard saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11: 15. When the seventh vial is poured out, a great voice out of the temple of heaven from the throne is heard to say,—"It is done." Rev. 16. The great work of redemption is accomplished; the last servant of Christ is sealed.

Now comes the day of God, and a doomed world is on fire. "For the heavens and earth which are now, by the word of God are reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death," and him who hath the power of it, which is the devil. The last enemy that is opposed to Christ's reign will be destroyed. And just beyond the rolling elements of the mighty conflagration, looms up a world of glory, with its millions upon millions of glorified saints. The holy city, New Jerusalem, is seen coming down "from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." Christ takes the throne of his father David, the diadem of earth, and all the saints, a great multitude, say, "Alleluia! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." The saints though persecuted here in this wicked world, and despised by those who have a name to live yet are dead, will rise when Jesus comes in his glory; for he will say to them, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." All things are yours; immortality and eternal life, glory and honor.

O, what an exaltation! from the dust to a seat with Christ in his throne, to live and reign forever and ever. The people of that fair world will all be righteous. There the loved of earth will meet to spend an endless day. How joyous the thought, when this scene of blood, and sorrow, and broken hearts shall pass away, and Eden is restored, when we can forever behold the smiling countenance of our blessed Redeemer. There shall be no battle-fields, no booming cannon, nothing that shall suddenly tear from our embrace those whom we love. There shall be no more death, nor any crying. There we shall greet those martyrs from the Alpine gorges, the holy prophets of old, those who wandered about, having no continuing city or abiding place, but were destitute, afflicted, tormented, of whom the world was not worthy, poor in this world, but rich in faith; these all will share the blessings and honor with Christ in the glorified kingdom of God. This earth, now desolated by wars and bloodshed, and by the warrings of the elements, sickness, and death, at the second advent of our Savior and King will be banished forever. He will make all things new. A new heaven and earth, a new creation,—the old one having passed away.

This is our only hope—the coming of Christ to restore all things spoken by all the holy prophets since the world began. So that after the great change—the passing away of all earthly governments, Christ with his saints will assume the reins of government, and there shall be one kingdom and dominion, which shall never pass away. There shall be one holy, united, and happy people, who will with one voice crown Christ Jesus Lord of all.

THE RETURN OF OUR SAVIOR.

Many centuries have elapsed since the Son of God walked this sin-polluted earth, and mortals were permitted to enjoy the heaven-bought privilege of associating and conversing with a pure and sinless being. He has performed his earthly mission and ascended on high, there to intercede with the Father in our behalf. But he has left the sure promise on record that if he went away to prepare a place for his true disciples, he would come again and receive them unto himself, that where he is there they may be also.

When he came to earth on his mission of love and mercy, he was rejected by the masses as an impostor, scoffed at, ridiculed, and in obedience to his Father's will rendered his life a willing and acceptable sacrifice for the redemption of a fallen race. When he makes his second advent to this world, it will be in a far different manner from his first. He will come as King, clothed with majesty and power, to execute justice on all those who have rejected him and his offers of mercy and salvation, and to reward his faithful followers with eternal life and a home in the kingdom.

The fulfillment of prophecy, and the words of Christ which foretell what events should take place in the last days, to the candid observer should be infallible evidence that we are living very near the closing drama of this world's history, and that we may look for the speedy return of the heavenly Bridegroom. We are commanded when we see these things come to pass, to know that the kingdom of God is at hand. Yet how few rightly understand the meaning and application of the Scriptures. Many have departed from the apostolic faith, being misled and guided by the traditional teachings of men instead of abiding by the precepts taught in the Bible, and denounce as fanatical and dangerous the doctrine advocated by that humble and persecuted class who take the Bible for their guide, and boldly proclaim its truths, which teach them to discern the signs of the times, which they believe plainly indicate the coming of Christ.

This is not a popular doctrine, neither was it when Christ and the apostles taught it. But there are a few who are willing to renounce all for Jesus, and to bear patiently the scorn and contumely of the wicked, that they may be enabled to reign with their once persecuted but victorious Lord. I trust that I now address many of this class. May we as christians, professedly believing as we do, stand firm in the strength of God, prove our faith by our works, and thus show to a proud and unbelieving world that we act in accordance with our faith.

It requires much grace and wisdom in such perilous times to enable us to resist the powerful efforts of the enemy to decoy us from the path of rectitude. But Jesus has promised to be with us to the end. May we trust in him, and if temptations beset, and trials assail, let this thought console us that we shall endure them but a short time, for soon the parting heavens will disclose the form of our returning Savior. Then, if faithful, we shall be forever released from the evils connected with a state of mortality, and experience the new and blissful realities of a immortal existence.

"Lord, help us by thy mighty grace
To keep in view the prize,
Till thou dost come to take us home
To that blest paradise."

DEUTERONOMY 3: 25.

"I pray thee, let me go over and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain and Lebanon."

Pray, let me go over and see that good land,
That lies beyond Jordan's rough, billowy strand;
That goodly blest mountain and Lebanon's there,
And green fertile valleys, with climes ever fair.

Pray, let me go over its rough, swelling tide,
I'm weary of dwelling on Jordan's near side;
Long years I've been toiling by sin sore oppres't,
And striving to enter where weary ones rest.

Pray, let me go over and rest on that shore,
Where night's sable curtain is spread out no more;
There lasting bright glory lights up the blest plains,
And the King in his beauty triumphantly reigns.

Pray, let me go over where life's healing trees
Are waving their branches in heaven's sweet breeze;
The boughs are well laden with fruits rich and rare,
That food with the angel's God's people shall share.

We soon shall go over, list! now the low roar
Of earth's wild commotion, which shakes every shore;
At these thunders of wrath hearts are failing for fear,
The fig tree has budded, the summer is near.

REPORT OF THE DISCUSSION

Held at Stanbridge, C. E., Feb. 10th to Feb. 13th, 1863, between ELDER MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, and REV. DENNIS CHAPIN, Universalist Missionary of the District of Bedford, C. E.

WRITTEN BY C. P. DOW.

FRIDAY MORNING.—ELDER GRANT'S SECOND SPEECH.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—I must confess that I am exceedingly surprised to hear my friend say that prophecy does not go beyond the first century; or, to use his language, "All the prophecies were fulfilled in that (the first) century." This is a position I did not expect my friend to assume. I did expect him to apply some prophecies there that fall elsewhere, but I did not expect him to apply them all there. What then can be known about the glorious future, to say nothing concerning the present? for all we know of the future is known by prophecy. Are we then without the least glimmering ray of light? In total darkness! This is a worse condition than I thought the world was in. A bad condition indeed, unless "ignorance is bliss." This is indeed a fearful position to assume, and a hard one to maintain. If proved, it overturns all history of events since the first century, and destroys all the expositions of prophecy written by able men concerning the events of the last seventeen hundred years.

Again, he says prophecies were always "fulfilled in the place where they were proclaimed." I am surprised at such unwarrantable assumptions This is narrowing prophecy down to a point, I had almost said to nothing. He says I am wrong. I suppose he really thinks so. I am wrong, or else he is; we cannot both be right, for we are wide apart surely. You are to judge between us. He has proclaimed me wrong often enough, but it happens to be true that mere assertion is not proof.

My friend seems anxious to know where we shall go when "the earth is all burnt up." We want to know where the Bible says that the earth shall be all burned up, in the sense of being destroyed or annihilated? It is to undergo a fiery baptism, but before this the saints are to be "caught up to meet the Lord in the air," the angels are to "gather the elect from the four winds, from the one end of the earth to the other."

My friend has referred to the great tribulation in a way to indicate a desire to throw doubt upon my explanation. Concerning the flight of the saints, Bower says:—

"While the Arian king was striving, by the most just and equitable laws, to clear the church from all simony in the west, the Catholic emperor was employing the most unjust and unchristian means of clearing her from all heresies in the east, that of persecution, and the most cruel persecution any christian emperor had yet set on foot, or countenanced. For by an edict which he issued to unite all men in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles, or Christians, such as did not, in the term of three months, embrace and profess the Catholic faith, were declared infamous, and, as such, excluded from all employments, both civil and military, rendered incapable of leaving any thing by will, and their estates confiscated, whether real or personal. These were convincing arguments of the truth of the Catholic faith; but many, however, withstood them, and against such as did, the imperial edict was executed with the utmost rigor. Great numbers were driven from their habitations with their wives and children, stripped and naked. Others betook themselves to flight, carrying with them what they could conceal, for their support and maintenance; but they were plundered of the little they had, and many of them inhumanly massacred by the Catholic peasants, or the soldiery, who guarded the passes."—Bower's History of the Popes, p. 334.

Mark 13: 24 reads: "But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars of heaven shall fall"; thus locating the signs after the tribulation. Matthew has it, immediately after, and in those days, evidently the 1260 days of Daniel's prophecy, during which the saints were to be given into the hands of the little horn, "until a time, and times, and the dividing of a time," or the forty-two months of the Revelator. This was the time predicted for the dominancy of the little horn power over the saints; but their tribulation was so great that, for the elect's sake, the days of tribulation were shortened, and right here, as chronologically indicated, the first sign appears—the sun was darkened. Stubborn facts confirm this view and demonstrate the correctness of our position. Therefore, his fling about our mistake in 1843 will not invalidate our present argument. His statement needs a little correction.

He has said that we relied "upon the same HISTORY" for proof, that I have quoted during this discussion. Now it is well known, or ought to be, that the argument of Mr. Miller, for the coming of Christ "about the year 1843," was based on the prophetic periods, and not upon an exposition of Rev. 17th chapter, and those periods we have not used in our present argument.

We will now resume our direct argument where we left it in our last speech. We had quoted some testimony to prove that the sun was darkened when and where it should have shone, on the 19th day of May, 1780. And for this darkness no natural cause could be assigned. The impression at the time was, that the day of judgment had come, or was about to come. After the day had passed, several ministers of the gospel prepared and delivered sermons upon the subject, explaining this darkness as a sign of the judgment, and a fulfillment of this and other similar scriptures. Let us add another testimony to those already presented. "Dark day of May 19th, 1780.—The sun rose clear, and shone for several hours; at length the sky became overcast with clouds, and by 10 o'clock A. M. the darkness was such as to occasion the farmers to leave their work in the field, and retire to their dwellings; fowls went to their roosts, and before noon lights became necessary to the transaction of business within doors. The darkness continued through the day, and the night till near morning was as unusually dark as the day."—Gage's History of Rowley, Mass.

But Christ says;—"And the moon shall not give her light." This has been literally fulfilled at the proper time, as the following extracts will show:—

"The night succeeding that day, (May 19th, 1780), was of such pitchy darkness, that, in some instances, horses could not be compelled to leave the stable when wanted for service. About midnight the clouds were dispersed, and the moon and stars appeared with unimpaired brilliancy."—Extract from Stone's History of Beverley.

"Night after the dark day of 1780. The darkness of the following evening was probably as gross as has ever been observed since the Almighty first gave birth to light. I could not help conceiving at the time, that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not be more complete. A sheet of white paper held within a few inches of the eyes, was equally invisible with the blackest velvet."—Mr. Tenny, a preacher of the gospel, Exeter, N. H., quoted by Mr. Gage to the Historical Society.

"In the evening, (of the 19th of May, 1780), though the moon was up and FULL, yet it was darker till twelve o'clock than ever seen by any."—Annals of Salem, Vol. 2, p. 144.

"And the stars shall fall from heaven." Has this sign appeared, adding its testimony? Yes, it has been fully accomplished, as the following testimonies will show:—

. . . "At the cry 'Look out of the window,' I sprang from a deep sleep, and with wonder saw the east lighted up with the dawn and meteors. The zenith, the north, and the west, also showed the falling stars, in the very image of one thing, and of only one, I ever heard of. I called to my wife to behold; and while robing, she exclaimed, 'See how the stars fall!' I replied, 'that is the wonder;' and we felt in our hearts that it was a sign of the last days. For truly 'the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.' Rev. 6: 13. This language of the prophet has always been received as metaphorical. Yesterday it was literally fulfilled. The ancients understood by aster in Greek, and stella in Latin, the smaller lights of heaven. The refinement of modern astronomy has made the distinction between the stars of heaven and the meteors of heaven. Therefore, the idea of the prophet, as it is expressed in the original Greek, was literally fulfilled in the phenomena of yesterday, so as no man before yesterday had conceived to be possible that it should be fulfilled. The immense size and distance of the planets and fixed stars forbid the idea of their falling unto the earth. Larger bodies cannot fall in myriads unto a smaller body; but most of the planets and all the fixed stars are many times larger than our earth. They cannot fall unto the earth; but these fell toward it.

And how did they fall? Neither myself, nor one of the family, heard any report; and were I to hunt through nature for a simile, I could not find one so apt to illustrate the appearance of the heavens as that which St. John uses in the prophecy before quoted. 'It rained fire!' says one—another, 'It was like a shower of fire!' Another, 'it was like the large flakes of falling snow, before a coming storm, or large drops of rain before a shower.' I admit their fitness for common accuracy; but they came far short of the accuracy of the figure used by the prophet:—'The stars of heaven fell unto the earth;' they were not sheets, or flakes, or drops of fire; but they were what the world understands by 'falling stars,' and one speaking to his fellow, in the midst of the scene, would say, 'See how the stars fall!' And he who heard, would not pause to correct the astronomy of the speaker, any more than he would be so precise as to reply, 'the sun does not move,' to one who should tell him, 'the sun is rising.' The stars fell, 'even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.' Here is the exactness of the prophet. The falling stars did not come as if from several trees shaken, but from one; those which appeared in the east fell toward the east; those which appeared in the north fell toward the north; those which appeared in the west fell toward the west; and those which appeared in the south (for I went out of my residence into the Park) fell towards the south. And they fell not as the ripe fruit falls. Far from it; but they flew, they were CAST like the unripe fruit, which at first refuses to leave the branch; and, when, under a violent pressure it does break its hold, it flies swiftly, straight off, descending; and in the multitude falling, some cross the track of others, as they are thrown with more or less force, but each one falls on its own side of the tree. Such was the appearance of the above phenomenon to the inmates of my house."

In a sermon, published in the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Sept. 15, 1808, on the "signs" mentioned by our Savior, the author says, the "signs in the sun and moon" were fulfilled May 19th, 1780, and remarks of the "signs in the stars," "we may expect them soon."

Said Tho. Burnett, in 1697, "The last sign before the coming of Christ is the falling stars."

We now give further evidence that this sign was fulfilled in 1833. Says a writer in the Annals of Salem, vol. 2, p. 139, when speaking of the falling stars:

"They looked like brilliant stars descending from the zenith. It was calculated that from 2 o'clock till daylight, there were 207,840 of these bodies which fell."

The whole number of stars that can be seen in a clear night by the naked eye, is about one thousand; hence, according to the calculation, about two hundred and seven times as many stars fell that night as can be seen at any one time.

Says Prof. Olmsted, of Yale college:

"The extent of the shower in 1833 was such as to cover no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface from the middle of the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the west; and from the northern coast of South America, to undefined regions among the British possessions on the north, the exhibition was visible, and everywhere presented nearly the same appearance. In nearly all places, the meteors began to attract notice by their unusual frequency as early as 11 o'clock, and increased in numbers and splendor until about 4 o'clock, from which time they gradually declined, but were visible until lost in the light of day. The meteors did not fly at random over all parts of the sky, but appeared to emanate from a point in the constellation Leo, near a star called Gamma Leonis, in the bend of the sickle

Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13, 1833, probably saw the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the pages of history."

Again he says, describing their manner of falling, "To form some idea of the phenomenon, the reader may imagine a constant succession of fire balls, resembling sky rockets, radiating in all directions from a point in the heavens, a few degrees south-east of the zenith, and following the arch of the sky toward the horizon. They commenced their progress at different distances from the radiating point, but their directions were uniformly such, that the lines they described, if produced upward, would all have met in the same part of the heavens Around this point was a circular space of several degrees, within which no meteors were observed." FRIDAY MORNING.

Mr. Chapin's Second Speech.

Mr. Moderator, Ladies and Gentlemen:—My friend says he is "astonished." Mr. Moderator, I am astonished. He complains that I said that prophecy was fulfilled in the country where it was proclaimed. I said that the vision was seen where the visionist lived. Let us refer for proof to the Scriptures. Dan. 8: 1, 2;—"In the third year of the reign of king Belshazzar, a vision appeared unto me, even unto me Daniel, after that which appeared unto me at the first. And I saw in a vision; and it came to pass, when I saw, that I was at Shushan in the palace, which is in the province of Elam; and I saw in a vision, and I was by the river Ulai." I meant that prophecy must be fulfilled in the country where the prophet lived. ALL of Daniel's prophecy was fulfilled in the locality where it was seen.

My friend has been pleased to entertain you with an account of falling meteors, or, as he calls them, falling stars, as a sign that Christ will come in the 19th century. Now we want to ask, Who believes that a star could fall to this earth? Who supposes such a thing? Talk about the stars falling! Did not writers call them meteoric showers? We think if they should fall they would jostle the earth a little.

He says Christ is coming to gather his elect. Now who are his elect or chosen? The apostles. This brings forward the idea, none of his elect are here, then why does he come? There must be a mistake somewhere. Let us be careful and notice where it is. If the tribulation was "in those days," as my friend seems to us to admit, then all is right. We read, "Then shall YE see the Son of man coming with power and great glory." We want to ask, How could they see him coming unless present? There must be a difficulty here somewhere. Now, let us turn to the Scriptures. Mark 13: 34–37.

"For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye, therefore; for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning: lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch."

Now suppose we take the ground that he is not coming back to the same persons. Would not this scripture contradict it? Christ says, "What I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." Why watch for him if he was not coming to them in some manner? Why watch, if he was not coming until the nineteenth century? Christ did not teach such a doctrine. Matt. 24: 32–35;—"Now learn a parable of the fig tree; when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, THIS generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

Will his words pass away? Or will they be fulfilled? It seems to me that it requires no history to interpret revelation. It is plain enough without. We see that he would come to the same persons. We must come to that generation. It reads "this generation," meaning the generation living then. You see the principle, my friends. This scripture cannot be made to mean the nineteenth century. It meant the first century; it was fulfilled then. There seems to be a difficulty here, with my brother's view. He applies this scripture to the nineteenth century, and I apply it to the generation then alive. Who is right? Is Jesus right?

Let him notice that the book of Daniel was sealed. Dan. 12: 4;—"But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end; many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Thus we see that Daniel's prophecy was sealed, but the book of Revelation was not sealed. Rev. 22: 10. We read;—"And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand." Was not the time at hand? The prophecy of Daniel was in the distance, but Revelation was to be fulfilled immediately. Let him explain how this is, by history or any other way, if he can.

It requires no history to interpret the revelations of St. John the divine. There seems to be a difficulty here with my friend. We wish to know, Is it proper for me to ask you to receive the Bible in preference to history? The Bible and history will not agree. It seems to us there is a clashing here. We should not try to make a clash.

We read, Luke 21: 20–22;—"And when YE shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto, for these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled." Then the things that were written were fulfilled, not the things that were not written. Daniel's prophecy was written. Christ connects this with Daniel's prophecy. He spake of Jerusalem's destruction. Did Jesus understand what he was talking about? Did Christ understand the prophecy as well as my friend? We think he understood it better. He said, Matt. 23: 37;—"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."

My friend wishes to know if this prophecy was located in Jerusalem, in the land of Judea? Let us hear what Jesus says about it? "Verily I say unto you, ALL these things shall come upon this generation." Thus you see, Christ himself has set the bounds, but you perceive that he leaps out, and says the signs were given since. Is he right, or is Jesus right? Did not he tell the porter to watch in that day? Did he not come back to see the servants? He said, "He that believeth in me shall never die." You will observe, Christ does not say, He that believeth in ALL history shall never die. Jesus says that "all things written shall be fulfilled," not those things that are not written. The Old Testament was written then. (Time expired.)

IS IT TRUE?

Is it true, that we are living in the last days, when perilous times shall come?

Is it true, that the end of all things is at hand?

Is it true, that in all ages of this world, when the inhabitants of earth got to be as wicked as they now are, that God destroyed them off the earth?

Is it true, that the great mass of professors of religion believe God and his holy word, that will judge them in the last day?

Is it true, that the greater portion of our Advent brethren believe the King of glory is near, even at the doors, and all engaged in political affairs?

Is it true that they profess to have living faith in God, and his word, and by their works deny him?

Is it true, that the greater part of our Advent brethren are as much engaged in the things of the world as any class of people whatever, adding farms, and being overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life?

Is it true, that some of our Advent ministers, who profess to be giving meat in due season, and are worth their thousands of dollars, will take the poor widow's mite to cast into their own treasury?

A LOVER OF TRUTH.

PARENTAL RESPONSIBILITY.

A solemn responsibility rests upon us as parents, to feed the inquiring minds of our little ones with proper food. In childhood their minds are tender, and easily impressed, and equally susceptible to good or evil. Then is the time to feed them with that which will quicken their understanding and develop their moral nature. This is the time to sow the seeds of wisdom and truth. Let us, therefore, who have neglected so great a duty and privilege, commence to-day to teach them aright, both by precept and example, and at last reap the good fruits we have sown, and receive the approving smile of heaven.

ALL HAIL!

"Behold He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him." Even so, Amen.

Hail! thou long expected Savior,
On thy bright celestial throne;
With all the host of holy angels,
Claim the kingdom as thine own.

Tune your harps anew, ye seraphs,
Let your loud hosannas ring;
Now all praise and power and glory
Be to Christ our heavenly King.

Now redemption's work is ended,
Now the jubilee's begun;
Sound it loud through all creation,
Saints and angels, in your song.

Brightness of thy Father's glory,
Thou hast set thy people free;
Thou alone hast brought salvation,
Praise, unceasing praise to thee.

Sinner, now your days are ended,
See, the harvest now is past;
You who mercy's call rejected,
Lo! your doom is sealed at last.

"ALL LIVE UNTO GOD."—No. 3.

The Means,—The Release.

But the query naturally arises, How did the dying, rising, and reviving—living again—of Christ constitute him Lord of both? The term here seems to be used in a proprietary sense, from which comes the idea of his right of disposal, and the power of investiture seems to rest in the fulfilled conditions of dying—rising—and living again. But there was a work of obedience that Christ had to perform as a necessary prerequisite to the dying, in order to make that death available, neither expressed or implied in the text, but amply referred to by the apostle elsewhere. The proprietary investment could not have been an endowment from the Father, for he had pronounced the irreversible sentence by which "man" became a legal subject of death's empire, and not being a God of the dead, he could not go beyond the execution of sentence.

If then the investiture of proprietary Lordship was not by endowment, neither by obedience, whence the imperative necessity of filling full the law of obedience That never has nor ever will be abrogated, nor the execution of the sentence of death for sin, abnegated by its author; and there never was, or will be a time when justice can legitimately become injustice, and the law that only demanded obedience of man, was founded in justice and framed upon it, made only for man, it was expressly designed for his rule of action, and adapted to his nature and condition; hence, it was holy, just, and good But man only could and did by its transgression incur its penalty, man therefore only could satisfy its demand.

I am not insensible that the cry of heresy may be raised to this declaration, but the objectors themselves come to it when they admit that it was the "human nature only" that suffered and died. The infinity of the transgression is made the ground-work of the objection, but to me it is very singular that those who can and do see that the transgression of a "finite creature," being infinite in its effects, if not "counter-worked," cannot also see that an implicit obedience to the same divine commandment, also by a finite creature, being in accord with the will of God should not also to a greater extent, if possible, produce an infinite effect. Or, if Adam, as man, being finite, by going contrary to God's law could produce an infinite effect in transgression, then should it not necessarily follow that Christ, the second Adam, as man, by going in harmony with God's law much more produce an infinite effect, and consequently "since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead." The disastrous results of the transgression, nor the everlasting benefits of the atonement, do not therefore in either case depend so much upon the nature of the actors, as upon the nature of their actions. Consequently all this disturbance in the professedly christian world, as to Christ being the unoriginated and self-existent Deity, is abortive of good to his church, and would be better left alone until the "watchmen see eye to eye." So Clarke on Eph. 4: 8, taken from Ps. 68: 18, in his criticisms on, lakachta mattanoth baadam: "thou hast taken gifts in man, in Adam. The gifts which Jesus Christ distributes to man, he has received in man, in and by virtue of his incarnation." See Clarke.

Consequently, had a demon, or an angel, or any other being, even the Father, come and kept that law, without "taking on man's nature, the seed of Abraham," as Christ did, it would have availed nothing in man's behalf, it could have conferred no power "to save" on them; because they, being spirit, by the appetites of the flesh are not susceptible of being tempted—tried—in all points as man is, and without triumphing, gaining the victory over all fleshly lusts, there could be no such thing as raising flesh above and paramount to the law.

Thus Christ did do, and this was Christ's obedience, extending that submission even to death, i. e., yielding the victory even over the strongest natural or fleshly instinct, the love of LIFE. I apprehend this is what Paul alludes to in Heb. 5: 7, and constituted his "agony in the garden."

By this obedience, Christ wrought out for himself a legal fitness to become a SAVIOR, and he was only able to render such obedience, because of "the Spirit, having been given to him not by measure," hence it is of grace and not of debt at last. Now, justice moved by goodness had cut Adam off from the tree of life lest he should eat and live forever, a miserable sinner in a suffering world, and sent him into the dominion of death. The soul life was forfeited and justice claimed its own, the sentence is executed, the penal claim is satisfied, and God is just in executing the law. The first Adam by his disobedience had fallen under the power of a just law, and became the UNJUST; and the second Adam by his obedience, had raised himself entirely above the power of the same law, and became the JUST.

Now, if the obedience of Christ was any part of the redemption, and not a necessary preparatory work thereunto, why should HE DIE? Dr. Adam Clarke says, if my memory be correct, that he, having kept the law, might then have claimed an immunity from death, and theologians scatter the same doctrine broad cast all over the land, and skeptics, scoffers, and infidels repeat and make merry over it. Now I deny the correctness of the doctrine, and yet hold that he "died the JUST, for (on account of) the unjust," not that he suffered in the sinner's stead, "paid his debt," for then should the sinner, debtor, have been discharged, but CHRIST being just in his own personal relations to the law of God through obedience, yet having consented to "take on the seed of Abraham," (Heb. 2: 16, "Sinful flesh," Rom. 8: 3,) he had the sentence of death in himself, (i. e. in his flesh) from the moment that "human nature was taken on," for that was the Adamic nature that he took on, upon which the sentence of death had been pronounced in Adam as shown in its mortality, PROVING that men do not pass into hades for their personal sins, but as or on account of the UNJUST, Adam, in whom ALL DIED, not excepting the SINLESS SAVIOR of the world.

This view of the subject harmonizes with Christ's own declaration in Jno. 10: 17, 18. —"I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh—i. e., can take—it from me, but I lay it down of myself I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment—LAW—have I received of my Father." This power to lay down his soul life was in the commandment (law) of God that passed the sentence on the Adamic nature; and the power to take it again, rested in the same just law that gave Adam a right to the tree of life, in his —or while he was in obedience, and Christ voluntarily consented to come under its power, by taking on our nature. Justice killed the condemned, and justice made alive the innocent, and he recognized the principle as a righteous one in God's law.

G. W. STETSON.

For the World's Crisis.

CHRIST,—THE SAINTS,—THE KINGDOM AND DOMINION.

"But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever." Dan. 7: 18. Dan. 7: 27, shows where the kingdom is located. "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom." Please note, this kingdom is not located in the sky, as some teach. Daniel "saw in the night visions and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven. . . . And there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

The above texts are sufficient to prove not only the locality, but also the extent or duration of the kingdom of Christ and the saints. But we are not left to these texts alone. Paul tells us in 2 Tim. 2, that "if we be dead with him (Christ) we shall also live with him. If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." The saints have the promise of sitting with Christ in his throne, even as he overcame and is sit down with his Father in his throne. To sit with Christ in his throne implies reigning and power. At the ascension of Christ to the Father's throne, he announced to his disciples that all power was given him in heaven and in earth. Paul says he is to retain that seat at the Father's right hand until his enemies are made his footstool. Christ is now our high priest, whom Paul says is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens. Heb. 8: 1. 1 Peter 3: 22 reads, —"Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God." Stephen at his death looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. According to the expressed determination of Jehovah, Christ shall sit at his right hand or in his throne, "until his enemies are made his footstool."

Another important text relative to this subject is found in 1 Cor. 15: 24–28. The subject of this chapter is the resurrection of the dead. "Then"—after the resurrection of them that are Christ's, at his coming,—"then cometh the end." End of what? We think the meaning of the apostle is, that Christ has up to this time occupied his Father's throne, and ordered the affairs of heaven and earth to prepare a holy people to share with him the dominion and the kingdom. The time alloted to that object may be called the day of grace, which now ends. The seventh and last trumpet sounds; the voice of the archangel is heard; the dead in Christ are raised, the living righteous are changed, Christ no longer sits as our high priest at the right hand of power, but as executioner, as the judge of quick and dead; his work in the heavenly place is finished; his Spirit no longer strives with man. Great voices in heaven are heard saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11: 15. When the seventh vial is poured out, a great voice out of the temple of heaven from the throne is heard to say,—"It is done." Rev. 16. The great work of redemption is accomplished; the last servant of Christ is sealed.

Now comes the day of God, and a doomed world is on fire. "For the heavens and earth which are now, by the word of God are reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death," and him who hath the power of it, which is the devil. The last enemy that is opposed to Christ's reign will be destroyed. And just beyond the rolling elements of the mighty conflagration, looms up a world of glory, with its millions upon millions of glorified saints. The holy city, New Jerusalem, is seen coming down "from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." Christ takes the throne of his father David, the diadem of earth, and all the saints, a great multitude, say, "Alleluia! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." The saints though persecuted here in this wicked world, and despised by those who have a name to live yet are dead, will rise when Jesus comes in his glory; for he will say to them, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." All things are yours; immortality and eternal life, glory and honor.

O, what an exaltation! from the dust to a seat with Christ in his throne, to live and reign forever and ever. The people of that fair world will all be righteous. There the loved of earth will meet to spend an endless day. How joyous the thought, when this scene of blood, and sorrow, and broken hearts shall pass away, and Eden is restored, when we can forever behold the smiling countenance of our blessed Redeemer. There shall be no battle-fields, no booming cannon, nothing that shall suddenly tear from our embrace those whom we love. There shall be no more death, nor any crying. There we shall greet those martyrs from the Alpine gorges, the holy prophets of old, those who wandered about, having no continuing city or abiding place, but were destitute, afflicted, tormented, of whom the world was not worthy, poor in this world, but rich in faith; these all will share the blessings and honor with Christ in the glorified kingdom of God. This earth, now desolated by wars and bloodshed, and by the warrings of the elements, sickness, and death, at the second advent of our Savior and King will be banished forever. He will make all things new. A new heaven and earth, a new creation,—the old one having passed away.

This is our only hope—the coming of Christ to restore all things spoken by all the holy prophets since the world began. So that after the great change—the passing away of all earthly governments, Christ with his saints will assume the reins of government, and there shall be one kingdom and dominion, which shall never pass away. There shall be one holy, united, and happy people, who will with one voice crown Christ Jesus Lord of all.

THE RETURN OF OUR SAVIOR.

Many centuries have elapsed since the Son of God walked this sin-polluted earth, and mortals were permitted to enjoy the heaven-bought privilege of associating and conversing with a pure and sinless being. He has performed his earthly mission and ascended on high, there to intercede with the Father in our behalf. But he has left the sure promise on record that if he went away to prepare a place for his true disciples, he would come again and receive them unto himself, that where he is there they may be also.

When he came to earth on his mission of love and mercy, he was rejected by the masses as an impostor, scoffed at, ridiculed, and in obedience to his Father's will rendered his life a willing and acceptable sacrifice for the redemption of a fallen race. When he makes his second advent to this world, it will be in a far different manner from his first. He will come as King, clothed with majesty and power, to execute justice on all those who have rejected him and his offers of mercy and salvation, and to reward his faithful followers with eternal life and a home in the kingdom.

The fulfillment of prophecy, and the words of Christ which foretell what events should take place in the last days, to the candid observer should be infallible evidence that we are living very near the closing drama of this world's history, and that we may look for the speedy return of the heavenly Bridegroom. We are commanded when we see these things come to pass, to know that the kingdom of God is at hand. Yet how few rightly understand the meaning and application of the Scriptures. Many have departed from the apostolic faith, being misled and guided by the traditional teachings of men instead of abiding by the precepts taught in the Bible, and denounce as fanatical and dangerous the doctrine advocated by that humble and persecuted class who take the Bible for their guide, and boldly proclaim its truths, which teach them to discern the signs of the times, which they believe plainly indicate the coming of Christ.

This is not a popular doctrine, neither was it when Christ and the apostles taught it. But there are a few who are willing to renounce all for Jesus, and to bear patiently the scorn and contempt of the wicked, that they may be enabled to reign with their once persecuted but victorious Lord. I trust that I now address many of this class. May we as christians, professedly believing as we do, stand firm in the strength of God, prove our faith by our works, and thus show to a proud and unbelieving world that we act in accordance with our faith.

It requires much grace and wisdom in such perilous times to enable us to resist the powerful efforts of the enemy to decoy us from the path of rectitude. But Jesus has promised to be with us to the end. May we trust in him, and if temptations beset and trials assail, let this thought console us, that we shall endure them but a short time, for soon the parting heavens will disclose the form of our returning Savior. Then, if faithful, we shall be forever released from the evils connected with a state of mortality, and experience the new and blissful realities of a immortal existence.

"Lord, help us by thy mighty grace
To keep in view the prize,
Till thou dost come to take us home
To that blest paradise."

DEUTERONOMY 3: 25.

"I pray thee, let me go over and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain and Lebanon."

Pray, let me go over and see that good land,
That lies beyond Jordan's rough, billowy strand;
That goodly blest mountain and Lebanon's there,
And green fertile valleys, with climes ever fair.

Pray, let me go over its rough, swelling tide,
I'm weary of dwelling on Jordan's near side;
Long years I've been toiling by sin sore oppress'd,
And striving to enter where weary ones rest.

Pray, let me go over and rest on that shore,
Where night's sable curtain is spread out no more;
There lasting bright glory lights up the blest plains,
And the King in his beauty triumphantly reigns.

Pray, let me go over where life's healing trees
Are waving their branches in heaven's sweet breeze;
The boughs are well laden with fruits rich and rare,
That food with the angel's God's people shall share.

We soon shall go over; list! now the low roar
Of earth's wild commotion, which shakes every shore;
At these thunders of wrath hearts are failing for fear,
The fig tree has budded, the summer is near.

REPORT OF THE DISCUSSION

Held at Stanbridge, C. E., Feb. 10th to Feb. 13th, 1863, between ELDER MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, and REV. DENNIS CHAPIN, Universalist Missionary of the District of Bedford, C. E.

WRITTEN BY C. P. DOW.

FRIDAY MORNING.—ELDER GRANT'S SECOND SPEECH.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—I must confess that I am exceedingly surprised to hear my friend say that prophecy does not go beyond the first century; or, to use his language, "All the prophecies were fulfilled in that (the first) century." This is a position I did not expect my friend to assume. I did expect him to apply some prophecies there that fall elsewhere, but I did not expect him to apply them all there. What then can be known about the glorious future, to say nothing concerning the present? for all we know of the future is known by prophecy. Are we then without the least glimmering ray of light? In total darkness! This is a worse condition than I thought the world was in. A bad condition indeed, unless "ignorance is bliss." This is indeed a fearful position to assume, and a hard one to maintain. If proved, it overturns all history of events since the first century, and destroys all the expositions of prophecy written by able men concerning the events of the last seventeen hundred years.

Again, he says prophecies were always "fulfilled in the place where they were proclaimed." I am surprised at such unwarrantable assumptions. This is narrowing prophecy down to a point, I had almost said to nothing. He says I am wrong. I suppose he really thinks so. I am wrong, or else he is; we cannot both be right, for we are wide apart surely. You are to judge between us. He has proclaimed me wrong often enough, but it happens to be true that mere assertion is not proof.

My friend seems anxious to know where we shall go when "the earth is all burnt up." We want to know where the Bible says that the earth shall be all burned up, in the sense of being destroyed or annihilated? It is to undergo a fiery baptism, but before this the saints are to be "caught up to meet the Lord in the air," the angels are to "gather the elect from the four winds, from the one end of the earth to the other."

My friend has referred to the great tribulation in a way to indicate a desire to throw doubt upon my explanation. Concerning the flight of the saints, Bower says:—

"While the Arian king was striving, by the most just and equitable laws, to clear the church from all simony in the west, the Catholic emperor was employing the most unjust and unchristian means of clearing her from all heresies in the east, that of persecution, and the most cruel persecution any christian emperor had yet set on foot, or countenanced. For by an edict which he issued to unite all men in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles, or Christians, such as did not, in the term of three months, embrace and profess the Catholic faith, were declared infamous, and, as such, excluded from all employments, both civil and military, rendered incapable of leaving any thing by will, and their estates confiscated, whether real or personal. These were convincing arguments of the truth of the Catholic faith; but many, however, withstood them, and against such as did, the imperial edict was executed with the utmost rigor. Great numbers were driven from their habitations with their wives and children, stripped and naked. Others betook themselves to flight, carrying with them what they could conceal, for their support and maintenance; but they were plundered of the little they had, and many of them inhumanly massacred by the Catholic peasants, or the soldiery, who guarded the passes."—Bower's History of the Popes, p. 334.

Mark 13: 24 reads: "But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars of heaven shall fall"; thus locating the signs after the tribulation. Matthew has it, immediately after, and in those days, evidently the 1260 days of Daniel's prophecy, during which the saints were to be given into the hands of the little horn, "until a time, and times, and the dividing of a time," or the forty-two months of the Revelator. This was the time predicted for the dominancy of the little horn power over the saints; but their tribulation was so great that, for the elect's sake, the days of tribulation were shortened, and right here, as chronologically indicated, the first sign appears—the sun was darkened. Stubborn facts confirm this view and demonstrate the correctness of our position. Therefore, his fling about our mistake in 1843 will not invalidate our present argument. His statement needs a little correction.

He has said that we relied "upon the same HISTORY" for proof, that I have quoted during this discussion. Now it is well known, or ought to be, that the argument of Mr. Miller, for the coming of Christ "about the year 1843," was based on the prophetic periods, and not upon an exposition of Rev. 17th chapter, and those periods we have not used in our present argument.

We will now resume our direct argument where we left it in our last speech. We had quoted some testimony to prove that the sun was darkened when and where it should have shone, on the 19th day of May, 1780. And for this darkness no natural cause could be assigned. The impression at the time was, that the day of judgment had come, or was about to come. After the day had passed, several ministers of the gospel prepared and delivered sermons upon the subject, explaining this darkness as a sign of the judgment, and a fulfillment of this and other similar scriptures. Let us add another testimony to those already presented. "Dark day of May 19th, 1780.—The sun rose clear, and shone for several hours; at length the sky became overcast with clouds, and by 10 o'clock A. M. the darkness was such as to occasion the farmers to leave their work in the field, and retire to their dwellings; fowls went to their roosts, and before noon lights became necessary to the transaction of business within doors. The darkness continued through the day, and the night till near morning was as unusually dark as the day."—Gage's History of Rowley, Mass.

But Christ says;—"And the moon shall not give her light." This has been literally fulfilled at the proper time, as the following extracts will show:—

"The night succeeding that day, (May 19th, 1780), was of such pitchy darkness, that, in some instances, horses could not be compelled to leave the stable when wanted for service. About midnight the clouds were dispersed, and the moon and stars appeared with unimpaired brilliancy."—Extract from Stone's History of Beverley.

"Night after the dark day of 1780. The darkness of the following evening was probably as gross as has ever been observed since the Almighty first gave birth to light. I could not help conceiving at the time, that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not be more complete. A sheet of white paper held within a few inches of the eyes, was equally invisible with the blackest velvet."—Mr. Tenny, a preacher of the gospel, Exeter, N. H., quoted by Mr. Gage to the Historical Society.

"In the evening, (of the 19th of May, 1780), though the moon was up and FULL, yet it was darker till twelve o'clock than ever seen by any."—Annals of Salem, Vol. 2, p. 144.

"And the stars shall fall from heaven." Has this sign appeared, adding its testimony? Yes, it has been fully accomplished, as the following testimonies will show:—

. . . "At the cry 'Look out of the window,' I sprang from a deep sleep, and with wonder saw the east lighted up with the dawn and meteors. The zenith, the north, and the west, also showed the falling stars, in the very image of one thing, and of only one, I ever heard of. I called to my wife to behold; and while robing, she exclaimed, 'See how the stars fall!' I replied, 'that is the wonder;' and we felt in our hearts that it was a sign of the last days. For truly 'the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.' Rev. 6: 13. This language of the prophet has always been received as metaphorical. Yesterday it was literally fulfilled. The ancients understood by aster in Greek, and stella in Latin, the smaller lights of heaven. The refinement of modern astronomy has made the distinction between the stars of heaven and the meteors of heaven. Therefore, the idea of the prophet, as it is expressed in the original Greek, was literally fulfilled in the phenomena of yesterday, so as no man before yesterday had conceived to be possible that it should be fulfilled. The immense size and distance of the planets and fixed stars forbid the idea of their falling unto the earth. Larger bodies cannot fall in myriads unto a smaller body; but most of the planets and all the fixed stars are many times larger than our earth. They cannot fall unto the earth; but these fell toward it.

And how did they fall? Neither myself, nor one of the family, heard any report; and were I to hunt through nature for a simile, I could not find one so apt to illustrate the appearance of the heavens as that which St. John uses in the prophecy before quoted. 'It rained fire!' says one—another, 'It was like a shower of fire!' Another, 'it was like the large flakes of falling snow, before a coming storm, or large drops of rain before a shower.' I admit their fitness for common accuracy; but they came far short of the accuracy of the figure used by the prophet:—'The stars of heaven fell unto the earth;' they were not sheets, or flakes, or drops of fire; but they were what the world understands by 'falling stars,' and one speaking to his fellow, in the midst of the scene, would say, 'See how the stars fall!' And he who heard, would not pause to correct the astronomy of the speaker, any more than he would be so precise as to reply, 'the sun does not move,' to one who should tell him, 'the sun is rising.' The stars fell, 'even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.' Here is the exactness of the prophet. The falling stars did not come as if from several trees shaken, but from one: those which appeared in the east fell toward the east; those which appeared in the north fell toward the north; those which appeared in the west fell toward the west; and those which appeared in the south (for I went out of my residence into the Park) fell towards the south. And they fell not as the ripe fruit falls. Far from it; but they flew, they were CAST like the unripe fruit, which at first refuses to leave the branch; and when, under a violent pressure it does break its hold, it flies swiftly, straight off, descending; and in the multitude falling, some cross the track of others, as they are thrown with more or less force, but each one falls on its own side of the tree. Such was the appearance of the above phenomenon to the inmates of my house."

In a sermon, published in the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Sept. 15, 1808, on the "signs" mentioned by our Savior, the author says, the "signs in the sun and moon" were fulfilled May 19th, 1780, and remarks of the "signs in the stars," "we may expect them soon."

Said Tho. Burnett, in 1697, "The last sign before the coming of Christ is the falling stars."

We now give further evidence that this sign was fulfilled in 1833. Says a writer in the Annals of Salem, vol. 2, p. 139, when speaking of the falling stars:

"They looked like brilliant stars descending from the zenith. It was calculated that from 2 o'clock till daylight, there were 207, 840 of these bodies which fell."

The whole number of stars that can be seen in a clear night by the naked eye, is about one thousand; hence, according to the calculation, about two hundred and seven times as many stars fell that night as can be seen at any one time.

Says Prof. Olmsted, of Yale college:

"The extent of the shower in 1833 was such as to cover no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface from the middle of the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the west; and from the northern coast of South America, to undefined regions among the British possessions on the north, the exhibition was visible, and everywhere presented nearly the same appearance. In nearly all places, the meteors began to attract notice by their unusual frequency as early as 11 o'clock, and increased in numbers and splendor until about 4 o'clock, from which time they gradually declined, but were visible until lost in the light of day. The meteors did not fly at random over all parts of the sky, but appeared to emanate from a point in the constellation Leo, near a star called Gamma Leonis, in the bend of the sickle.

Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13, 1833, probably saw the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the pages of history."

Again he says, describing their manner of falling, "To form some idea of the phenomenon, the reader may imagine a constant succession of fire balls, resembling sky rockets, radiating in all directions from a point in the heavens, a few degrees south-east of the zenith, and following the arch of the sky toward the horizon. They commenced their progress at different distances from the radiating point, but their directions were uniformly such, that the lines they described, if produced upward, would all have met in the same part of the heavens. Around this point was a circular space of several degrees, within which no meteors were observed." (Time expired.)

FRIDAY MORNING.

Mr. Chapin's Second Speech.

Mr. Moderator, Ladies and Gentlemen:—My friend says he is "astonished." Mr. Moderator, I am astonished. He complains that I said that prophecy was fulfilled in the country where it was proclaimed. I said that the vision was seen where the visionist lived. Let us refer for proof to the Scriptures. Dan. 8: 1, 2;—"In the third year of the reign of king Belshazzar, a vision appeared unto me, even unto me Daniel, after that which appeared unto me at the first. And I saw in a vision; and it came to pass, when I saw, that I was at Shushan in the palace, which is in the province of Elam; and I saw in a vision, and I was by the river Ulai." I meant that prophecy must be fulfilled in the country where the prophet lived. ALL of Daniel's prophecy was fulfilled in the locality where it was seen.

My friend has been pleased to entertain you with an account of falling meteors, or, as he calls them, falling stars, as a sign that Christ will come in the 19th century. Now we want to ask, Who believes that a star could fall to this earth? Who supposes such a thing? Talk about the stars falling! Did not writers call them meteoric showers? We think if they should fall they would jostle the earth a little.

He says Christ is coming to gather his elect. Now who are his elect or chosen? The apostles. This brings forward the idea, none of his elect are here; then why does he come? There must be a mistake somewhere. Let us be careful and notice where it is. If the tribulation was "in those days," as my friend seems to us to admit, then all is right. We read, "Then shall YE see the Son of man coming with power and great glory." We want to ask, How could they see him coming unless present? There must be a difficulty here somewhere. Now, let us turn to the Scriptures. Mark 13: 34–37.

"For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye, therefore; for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning: lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch."

Now suppose we take the ground that he is not coming back to the same persons. Would not this scripture contradict it? Christ says, "What I say unto YOU, I say unto all, Watch." Why watch for him if he was not coming to them in some manner? Why watch, if he was not coming until the nineteenth century? Christ did not teach such a doctrine. Matt. 24: 32–35;—"Now learn a parable of the fig tree; when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, THIS generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

Will his words pass away? Or will they be fulfilled? It seems to me that it requires no history to interpret revelation. It is plain enough without. We see that he would come to the same persons. We must come to that generation. It reads "this generation," meaning the generation living then. You see the principle, my friends. This scripture cannot be made to mean the nineteenth century. It meant the first century; it was fulfilled then. There seems to be a difficulty here, with my brother's view. He applies this scripture to the nineteenth century, and I apply it to the generation then alive. Who is right? Is Jesus right?

Let him notice that the book of Daniel was sealed. Dan. 12: 4;—"But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end; many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Thus we see that Daniel's prophecy was sealed, but the book of Revelation was not sealed. Rev. 22: 10. We read;—"And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand." Was not the time at hand? The prophecy of Daniel was in the distance, but Revelation was to be fulfilled immediately. Let him explain how this is, by history or any other way, if he can.

It requires no history to interpret the revelations of St. John the divine. There seems to be a difficulty here with my friend. We wish to know, Is it proper for me to ask you to receive the Bible in preference to history? The Bible and history will not agree. It seems to us there is a clashing here. We should not try to make a clash.

We read, Luke 21: 20–22;—"And when YE shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto, for these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled." Then the things that were written were fulfilled, not the things that were not written. Daniel's prophecy was written. Christ connects this with Daniel's prophecy. He spake of Jerusalem's destruction. Did Jesus understand what he was talking about? Did Christ understand the prophecy as well as my friend? We think he understood it better. He said, Matt. 23: 37;—"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."

My friend wishes to know if this prophecy was located in Jerusalem, in the land of Judea? Let us hear what Jesus says about it? "Verily I say unto you, ALL these things shall come upon this generation." Thus you see, Christ himself has set the bounds, but you perceive that he leaps out, and says the signs were given since. Is he right, or is Jesus right? Did not he tell the porter to watch in that day? Did he not come back to see the servants? He said, "He that believeth in me shall never die." You will observe, Christ does not say, He that believeth in ALL history shall never die. Jesus says that "all things written shall be fulfilled," not those things that are not written. The Old Testament was written then. (Time expired.)

For the World's Crisis.

IS IT TRUE?

Is it true, that we are living in the last days, when perilous times shall come?

Is it true, that the end of all things is at hand?

Is it true, that in all ages of this world, when the inhabitants of earth got to be as wicked as they now are, that God destroyed them off the earth?

Is it true, that the great mass of professors of religion believe God and his holy word, that will judge them in the last day?

Is it true, that the greater portion of our Advent brethren believe the King of glory is near, even at the doors, and all engaged in political affairs?

Is it true that they profess to have living faith in God, and his word, and by their works deny him?

Is it true, that the greater part of our Advent brethren are as much engaged in the things of the world as any class of people whatever, adding farms, and being overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life?

Is it true, that some of our Advent ministers, who profess to be giving meat in due season, and are worth their thousands of dollars, will take the poor widow's mite to cast into their own treasury?

A LOVER OF TRUTH.

For the World's Crisis.

PARENTAL RESPONSIBILITY.

A solemn responsibility rests upon us as parents, to feed the inquiring minds of our little ones with proper food. In childhood their minds are tender, and easily impressed, and equally susceptible to good or evil. Then is the time to feed them with that which will quicken their understanding and develop their moral nature. This is the time to sow the seeds of wisdom and truth. Let us, therefore, who have neglected so great a duty and privilege, commence to-day to teach them aright, both by precept and example, and at last reap the good fruits we have sown, and receive the approving smile of heaven.

LETTER TO BRO. C. F. SWEET.

DEAR BROTHER:—The first christians all held the coming of the Lord at the end of six thousand years from the creation. Then, at the advent, they believed the earth would be restored, renovated, made new. Dr. Burnett says that Barnabas, Irenæus, Hippolytus, Lactantius, Cyprian, Jerome, Augustine, Johannes of Damascus, Justin Martyr, Hillary, Anastasius, Gaudentius, Hilarion, Julinius, Isidorus, Cassidorus, and Gregory the Great, all held and taught the six thousand years' duration of the world as it now is. The list includes all who wrote on the subject, though other writers include Clement, Tertullian, Origen, etc.; indeed, according to Burnett, Eliot, Homes, and other students of the Fathers.

The sex-millennial duration of the present earth was an unanimously received opinion of the early church. Then some of them, perhaps I may say the most of them, taught our Lord would come, renovate the world, reign a thousand years, and perhaps forever on earth. Irenæus and Lactantius believed the thousand years would be a mixed state of mortals and immortals, the immortals or resurrected saints reigning as judges, while the mortals still married and generated offspring. How far these views prevailed among the others I have named I am not able to say. After much searching I am unable to find that any others held this view. Still they may. But the view was what brought the doctrine of the thousand years' reign into disrepute, for out of it grew the story that the Chiliasts believed that the resurrected saints would beget children in the kingdom; hence Eusebius, Jerome, Augustine and others revolted at and rejected any millennium at all. In my opinion, if the millenarians had kept their doctrine pure, it would not afterwards have been generally rejected.

Post-millennialists were unknown in the early church. All were Chiliasts, Millenarians, or, as at a later date called, Thoresandarians; or were Anti-millenarians. The millenarians held the world would be made new at the beginning of this thousand years, or during it, and that the thousand years was a reigning and judgment day, bounded by the two resurrections of the good and bad. The precise character of Christ's reign, as held by them, it is difficult to determine, so meagre are their writings concerning it. But I think we can determine their views concerning the condition of the earth at that time. The Anti-millenarians supposed that Christ would come at the end of the six thousand years, and restore the earth; and, as near as I can discover, believed this restored or new earth would be the eternal home of the good. They rejected the millennium, and went so far as to reject the Apocalypse that taught it, but they did not reject the earth made new as the true inheritance.

My statement, that the opponents of the millenarians held the new earth would appear at the end of the thousand years, was a slip of the pen. The term millenarian may, with perfect propriety, be applied to any one who believes that Christ and the church will reign personally on earth during the thousand years of Rev. 20th, no matter what the condition of the earth during that period. Those who, like George Bush, Joseph Turner and others, do not believe the thousand years are future at all, but put them in the past, are anti-millenarians. Those who believe the thousand years are future, but that our Lord and his people will only reign spiritually, and not come in person till the end of this period, are millennalists, or post-millennialists, not post-millenarians.

But did the millenarians hold that the "renovation" would occur during the thousand years, or at the end? is the question that seems to concern you. My answer is, I think the primitive christians generally put the renovation during the millennium. Barnabas held that at the end of the six thousand years the Lord would come, "change the sun, moon and stars" even, "gloriously rest," "all things being renewed." He also appears to call this "the day of restitution." Papias and Irenæus said "all animals living on the fruits of the earth shall become peaceable" and "subject to men," and the earth produce marvelously its fruits, as in Joel 3:18. Justin Martyr said, "Isaiah saith of this thousand years, chap. 65:17, 'Behold, I create new heavens and new earth,'" etc. He also said that the Jerusalem in which the saints would reign during this thousand years was "Jerusalem that shall be re-edified, adorned, and enlarged, as Ezekiel, Isaiah and others declare." He also applies Luke 20:35, 36 to that age. I should say, in a general sense Irenæus calls it "the renewed state," "the inheritance." This he calls "the (ktisis) creation restored to its original beauty" and "subject to the righteous." Abraham and his seed, he says, then receive the promised land. Matt. 5:5;—"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth," he says, is fulfilled in the millennium, also Dan. 7:27, etc.

Tertullian seemed to think the Lord would reign with his saints first a thousand years on earth, and then forever in heaven. The reign on earth, he says, will be "in a city of divine workmanship, viz., Jerusalem brought down from heaven." He calls this reign "the heavenly kingdom." Lactantius' views of the condition of the earth, I cannot state. Methodius held the creation would "be renovated, and not perish," but when, I cannot say. He was a millenarian. The Council of Nice expressly declares that the new earth will appear in the world to come, and the majority were evidently millenarians. Hippolytus held that, when this millennial kingdom came, "the judgment of the conflagration would then be executed on the wicked." Dr. Burnet says that Clement held to the "renovation," in the seventh millennium or thousand years. J. W. Brooks says that Origen held to the "renovation of all things" at the end of six thousand years, and for this reason Jeremy Taylor and others call him a millenarian. The inference from this would seem to be that to be a millenarian we must believe in the world's renovation at the millennial epoch. Victorinus held, says Eliot, that "the greater part of the earth will be cleansed introductorily to the millennium."

And finally Burnet, Grabe, Homes, Eliot, and others who have examined the early writers on this subject, concur in testifying that all primitive orthodox christians believed that when the Lord comes the earth will be renovated, the restitution of all things occur, the creation be restored; and a new heaven and new earth appear. I refer you to Dr. Homes's "Resurrection Revealed," Book 1, chap. 2; Dr. Burnet's "Theory of the Earth," Book 4, [illegible] Books' "Elements of Prophetical Interpretation," chap. 3; Dr. Duffield on the Prophecies, chap. 8; Eliot's "Horae [illegible]" and my "Voice of the Church." The question is a proper one for inquiry and investigation, and I trust we may be able, by so doing and by the blessing of God on our efforts, to arrive at a knowledge of the truth.

Your brother, D. T. TAYLOR.

P. S.—I am convinced that many of us fully understand the nature and character of the coming millennial age, hence it becomes us to be moderate and cautious in the expression of our opinions concerning it. D. T. T.

HOW TO DIRECT.

Some of our friends seem to be at a loss to know how to address orders for books and tracts, etc. We have just received the following:—

"Will you please inform me how and to whom I shall direct, in case I wish to send for books and tracts. I am about to send an order, and do not know to whom it should be addressed."

VISIT TO MAINE.

Our visit to Maine was both pleasant and profitable. We enjoy the whole-heartedness and frankness of the people in this State. We see less selfishness than in many other localities where we have been. They remind us of those we met in Wisconsin. One feels at home in their society, because they make you welcome from the heart. Theirs is a genuine hospitality, while much that passes for such in the world is only a polite counterfeit. There is no politeness so pleasing as that which flows from a real christian heart. It may not be known by any conventional signs, employed by the "fashionable" and proud, who look down with contempt upon a poor saint of the Lord, as they place him under their footstool; but it is that which manifests itself by noble and christian deeds of love and kindness. One such home, among the poor, even, is of more value than the richest palace crowded with luxuries, but lacking the christian courtesy.

On our way from Boston to Portland, we had a very interesting conversation with the Superintendent of the Conway R. R., N. H. We found in him what we rarely find, a real love for conversation on the subject of the religion of Jesus. He appeared to be a christian who takes his religion with him in all his business operations. We had a feast together, while talking of the dealings of the Lord. He is a man who is not like many, satisfied with the mere form of religion, but knows from blest experience the life and power of godliness. We found him no bigoted sectarian, but one who loves all that love Jesus, and all mankind besides. We soon felt like old friends, and parted expecting to meet in the everlasting kingdom.

We left the cars at Newport, and arrived in Dover, Me., about forty-five minutes past one A. M., after a cold stage-sleigh ride of some twenty-six miles. We were glad when we came in sight of our good home at Bro. Lougee's. Here we found a hearty welcome, and were soon enjoying the luxury of a warm blazing fire. The good cheer we felt in this happy situation paid us well for many miles of our cold ride. At five minutes of two o'clock, we retired and rested sweetly, rising again before five, as is our custom, feeling as nicely as a new man.

We found the people in Dover and vicinity anxious to hear the word of life; and though the traveling was bad, and there were two quarterly meetings in the place, a Baptist and a Methodist, yet we had large audiences, and very profitable meetings. A goodly number were quickened, and began a new life in the cause of Christ. Several experienced tobacco chewers and smokers resolved to quit the bad habit for ever, and cleanse themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. May the Lord give them strength to endure to the end.

Since we left Dover, we have heard glad tidings from there. The Spirit of the Lord is with them. Their prayer meetings are excellent, and well attended. A new interest is felt in holy things.

Monday, March 14th, we left Dover for Bangor, by stage, thirty-five miles, arriving at about 7 P. M. We were met by Bro. Lemuel Smith, who took us to his hospitable home, where we had a pleasant visit, and a good night's rest.

Tuesday morning, at 6 P. M., we took the stage from Bangor for Searsport, a distance of twenty-eight miles, and arrived at about one and a half o'clock P. M. We found a good home with Bro. Tripp, who during the last year lost a most valuable wife.

Searsport is very pleasantly situated on the Penobscot Bay. Our meetings in this place were deeply interesting. Large audiences came to hear, and gave most excellent attention. The truth found a hearty welcome in many hearts. This is a new field, excepting some meetings held by Bro. Hemenway, some few years since. It now seems white for the harvest. We trust an abiding interest has been awakened in many minds.

Brn. Baker and Reed were present to help in holding up the light of truth. They are true men, and are faithful in the vineyard of the Lord. We left them to continue the meetings. The prospect is very encouraging for a good work. We closed our meetings at Dover and Searsport with very pleasant communion seasons, when some twenty-five or thirty gathered around the table of the Lord.

Since we left Searsport we learn by letter from Bro. W. Nichols that the people are very anxious to have more meetings; the truth has taken deep root in the minds of many. They are astonished at the evidences which show that Jesus is soon coming.

During our meetings some requested prayers and were blessed. Many appeared to be under conviction, and we trust some more will yet yield to the kind invitations of the Spirit. If the people could only realize how near they are to the great day of the Lord, and the value of eternal life in the coming kingdom, we think they would no longer hesitate to start in the service of the Savior.

Monday, March 21st, we left S. for Belfast, seven miles in company with Bro. Tripp. At B. we took the stage for Augusta, a distance of forty miles. This ride we think, taken as a whole, was one of the most tedious we ever had. We were thirteen hours going the forty miles, and arrived in Augusta about 3 o'clock A. M. The stages were very heavily loaded, the traveling poor, and the night cold. We got over the first fifteen miles rather comfortably, excepting being much crowded. It was then evening, when we stopped to change horses, and get warm. There were thirty-five passengers, and most of them were sailors and soldiers, who paid but little respect to those outside of their company. When we went out to take our seat again in the stage, we found it occupied by one of the hardy sons of the briny deep, and every other inside seat taken up. We found the occupant of our seat unwilling to give it up, as he remarked, "You are the toughest man in the whole lot, and it won't hurt you to ride outside." This sounded rather "cool," but we remarked, "we will have no unkind words about the matter;" so gathering up our shawl from under his feet, we took our seat with the driver, and looked the cold northwest in the face for about nine hours. The driver spent much time in slapping his hands to keep them warm, and we made the best of our position, feeling assured the night and our journey would come to an end, and that the Lord would protect us from all harm. Some portions of our ride were rather terrific; especially when going down steep hills. We were loaded so heavily that the team could not hold the load; hence the driver was obliged to run his horses down all the worst hills.

But we arrived in safety at last, at the Mansion House, in Augusta, exceeding glad to get sight of a fire. But the sight of it was about all we could obtain, for the sturdy ones soon surrounded it, like an impassable barrier. They immediately had their old filthy pipes filled and lighted, and it was not long before we were completely baptized in all the horrors of tobacco smoke from a score of pipes. There was no other room with a fire, and no bed to be obtained, where we could get any rest. The scene brought to our mind the account of the Black Hole at Calcutta. In addition to the tobacco smoke, was the bad air, occasioned by the many in the room, and bad ventilation. We endured it till we thought endurance ceased to be a virtue, and then went into a cold room and staid awhile. We returned, and found most of the company had smoked and drank, cursed and swore, till they had become sleepy, and lain down on the floor, with their bundles for pillows. We then got a chance to the fire, became warm, but almost suffocated with the smoke and bad air. We endured these things the best we could till 5 o'clock, when we started off to find a pilgrim home. This last move was eminently successful. From instruction given by Bro. F. Baker, while at Searsport, we had no difficulty in finding a family of saints named from the first two fruits of the Spirit—"Lovejoy." Our meeting was truly one of "love" and "joy," and will be long remembered by the writer. It was a resting place indeed. We thanked and praised the Lord together, rejoicing in the blessed hope of soon getting into the everlasting kingdom.

After our refreshing bath, and nice breakfast of unleavened bread, mush and apple, we enjoyed pleasant interviews with Bro. I. Wright, and others, who are firm in the faith. There is an encouraging prospect for the church in Augusta.

At 11 o'clock, A. M., we left for our discussion at Lynn, Mass., where we arrived at twenty-five minutes past seven P. M., and found a large audience waiting for our arrival. When engaged in the discussion, we felt fresh as a new man. The Lord stood by in power to strengthen us in the defense of his truth.

At forty minutes past nine, we left L. for home, where we arrived at forty-five minutes past ten and retired at fifteen minutes past eleven. Next morning we were up at our usual hour,—half-past four o'clock, feeling well physically, mentally and spiritually. Thus ends our trip to Maine. Thank the Lord for his great goodness, and protecting care that has been our constant fortune.

NOAH'S ARK.

The infidel sometimes disputes the Mosaic account of the flood on the ground that there was not room enough in the ark for all the animals and their food. This objection vanishes before the facts in the case. According to the shortest measurement of the ark, it was four hundred and fifty feet long, seventy-five wide, and forty-five high. It must have been of some forty-two thousand, four hundred and thirteen tons burthen. A first rate man of war is between twenty-two hundred and twenty-three hundred tons; hence the storage of the ark was equal to eighteen such large ships, and might carry twenty thousand men with provisions for six months, besides the weight of eighteen hundred cannon, and all the military stores.

It has been estimated that all the carnivorous animals taken into the ark were equal in bulk and food required to twenty-seven and all the other animals to two hundred and eighty oxen. It is considered that eighteen hundred and twenty-five sheep would be sufficient to sustain the [illegible]; one hundred and ninety-nine thousand and [illegible] hundred cubits of hay the latter; all of which might be contained in two of the stories, and have much room to spare. The third story would be fully sufficient for Noah and his family, the fowls and reptiles, besides all the instruments of husbandry, and seeds for the ground after the flood. These facts show that the ark was abundantly large for the purposes for which it was built.

THE WAR.

The war news for some time has been quite common-place, so far as real progress is concerned. But there is much talk of great movements soon to be developed. From the best information we can gather, we are satisfied that those on both sides are determined to do something decisive this year, if possible. They are making great preparations for very bloody work. The "tug of war" is at hand. The feeling of hatred and revenge is no doubt stronger between the two armies now than at any time in the past. The motto—"We will conquer or die," is becoming more deeply seated in the bosoms of the combatants. This makes the prospective of the war look more dreadful. O that Jesus would come and set up his peaceful kingdom.

THE MEXICAN QUESTION.

The Mexican question continues to increase in importance as the time approaches for the Archduke Maximilian to take possession of the new throne in Mexico. We are well convinced that this is an important item in the programme of Napoleon. The feelings of the Mexicans are far from being in sympathy with the United States, after the treatment she has received from them in time past; hence she will stand ready to sustain Napoleon in obtaining the balance of power in our nation.

A Paris correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser says:—

"But here is a singular detail of the affair, in view of what are supposed to be the sympathies of France in the Danish question. On account of the pressing demands on the Austrian navy in its conflict with that of Denmark, the Emperor Napoleon is going to place one of his vessels of war at the disposition of the Archduke to transport him to Vera Cruz, so as not to deprive the Austrian navy of any of its force.

From this ensemble of facts the conclusion is drawn that the Archduke Maximilian and the King of Belgium are at this moment controlling the destinies of Europe. Thus in order not to break up the Mexican programme Maximilian begs of his brother Francis Joseph not to do anything which shall compel Napoleon to become an open enemy to Austria, and the surest way to do this is to give a guaranty to France neither to remain in Jutland nor to seek to provoke a war in Italy. Francis Joseph makes the promise, and thus the eternal Mexican question comes back as the big thing which dominates and controls all Napoleon's acts, and which secures peace to Europe! The fact is singular enough in itself, and one is lost in conjecture in trying to fathom the mystery which enshrouds the Mexican scheme."

The mysteries of the mysterious man keep multiplying and unfolding to the astonished gaze of the rulers of this world; and we may expect more wonderful things soon.

MESMERISM AND SPIRITUALISM.

It is well known that men may mesmerize each other, and that the operator may control his subject physically and intellectually. This is accomplished by means of magnetic currents passing from the mesmerizer to his subject. In Spiritualism the demons mesmerize instead of men; hence the same laws govern both.

In a lecture given at Lyceum Hall, Boston, Oct. 11th, 1863, by Hon. J. B. Hall, a Spiritualist, he says:—

"I am aware that with many it is a favorite objection to Spiritualism, that it is nothing but Mesmerism. I for one accept the objection as true. Spiritualism is but a new development of the laws that govern and control man's spiritual nature, represented by the term Mesmerism, and those who think they have annihilated Spiritualism by denouncing it as only Mesmerism, show lamentable ignorance of either. Mesmerism is now generally recognized by the world as a science, and Spiritualism in due time will be so recognized, for it is simply a broader development or unfoldment of the same laws. . . . The doors of heaven are opened, and the tabernacle of God is with men. Old things are passing away, and all things are becoming new. The two worlds are mingling into one, and verily there will be a new heaven and a new earth, when all the sons of earth shall realize that there is no death, and shall recognize the truth that they live in both worlds.

SABBATH IN NEW YORK.

No fact is more apparent in society than that "the form of godliness" is about all that appears to be left of the popular church worship in our great cities. No effort is spared to make the houses for worship as attractive as possible, so as to please the rich and fashionable who assemble there for entertainment. The humble saint would find little, or nothing, there to cheer his heart, or encourage him to live a holy life; unless it be a sight of the terrible degeneracy of these last days.

The Sabbath is fast becoming a holiday, instead of being devoted to the worship of our Creator. A New York correspondent of the Boston Journal writes:—

"The churches are generally well attended in the morning. Even the down-town churches have a good congregation. Trinity Church is always crowded at the morning service. Seats in the aisles are all filled. The aristocratic church-men can well afford the ride from their up-town homes to this Cathedral. Their dashing teams and splendid outfits appear to great advantage on a beautiful Sabbath morning. The full choral service is also attractive. No church in New York holds so large, fashionable and wealthy a congregation as old Trinity in the morning; the rest of the day it might as well be shut. Indeed the same may be said of nearly all the fashionable churches in the city. Dr. Spring's, Dr. Adams', the Collegiate, all present a striking contrast in the crowd of the morning and the leanness of the afternoon. We have here about a dozen sensation preachers who can grasp the crowd and get an evening audience. But for "gospel preaching," as it is called, one sermon a day is as much as our people care to digest.

The sermons and litany of the morning being over, the lovers of pleasure appear in their strength. The quiet of the morning gives place to revelry. Funerals that require a military procession and bands of music are kept for Sunday afternoons. Central Park is crowded, and fashionable people, who do not care to ride in the country, drive here in style. It is the harvest of livery men. Everything that can go on four legs is engaged in advance. From ten dollars to fifty dollars is the price of a team for an afternoon's drive. Those who do not own teams and cannot afford to hire them, take the public conveyances. The same cars and boats that bear the worshipers to their churches in the morning, carry the sons of pleasure to their scenes of recreation. Theatres are open of the lower order, concert saloons, gardens, lager beer enclosures, all are crowded. As the day wanes the police force is doubled, and some parts of New York are more dangerous to visit on Sunday nights than on any other night in the week. At twelve at night all is again still. With the early hours of Monday, Mammon awakes as a giant refreshed with wine, seizes the reins, and drives with unslackened speed till the dawn of the next Sabbath compels him to a temporary repose."

"THE NEW GOSPEL."

At the present time there is much talk about the "new gospel." The "new gospel," as it is called, is taught by the spirits and Spiritualists. After a lecture by Mrs. Laura McAlpine Cuppy, at Dodworth's Hall, New York, Sunday evening, Nov. 22d, 1863, the question was asked, "In what does the new gospel consist"?

ANSWER:—"The new gospel as we understand it, . . . is the philosophy of Spiritualism, so-called, and the philosophy of Spiritualism embraces all the virtues, and strikes at the root of all evils, social, political, and religious." "There is one thing we know, viz., that we are by nature divine." "We have always asserted that there is not a single argument that can be brought against Spiritualism that is not competent as an argument against the christianity of the past; not one."

"Q. I understand the word 'gospel' to mean 'good news.'

A. It does; and Spiritualism is good news—the best that ever came to earth."

One thing is certain, this so-called "new gospel" is spreading far more rapidly than any other system ever offered to the world, and we see no evidence that its progress will be stayed till Jesus appears to destroy it "with the brightness of his coming." Every enemy of the cross appears to be moving towards the "new gospel;" and yet it is not "new," for it is the same that Satan preached to our first parents in Eden, about six thousand years ago. He has managed so skillfully as to connect his theology with that which is preached by many popular men at the present time, and thus has laid a snare into which thousands and millons are falling.

Dear reader, if you see the danger, do not fail to help sound the alarm. Be faithful to these around you. Thank the Lord for the light you see, and let it shine.

BRO. DANIEL WEBSTER writes from Montreal:—Our meetings are interesting, and our number is increasing, Bro. Porter is with us at this time, and also Bro. McKinstry. Pray for us."

NEW SUBSCRIBERS IN MARCH.

RETROSPECT AND PROSPECT.

The number of new subscribers in March is 340,—which is but little short of the number in February, and more than the number required each month to make up the 4,000 at the end of the year.

Our standard-bearers are doing nobly in the work of rallying recruits. The friends of the Crisis will be pleased to know that, as the result of appeals and efforts made, over 3,000 new subscribers have been added to our books in the past fifteen months.

The retrospect is cheering, and the prospect full of hope and promise. In the beginning of 1863, we asked God and the brethren to send us 1,000 new subscribers in the year; and He sent us 2,000. Encouraged, and full of faith that it could be done, and that He had more good and greater usefulness in store for us, we called, this year, for 4,000; and now we have, at the close of the first three months, almost a quarter of them already, (970,)—a larger number than in the previous six months. Brethren have doubled their efforts, and hence we see a doubled result. If the work goes on at this rate through the months to come, we shall, with a little more effort, have the proposed 4,000, when the year closes.

What say you, brethren? Shall it be done? It rests with you. It is YOUR WORK,—and the Lord's. What you have done, shows what you can do, and what OTHERS MAY do, if they will TRY.

The Crisis is accomplishing great good in all directions. Letters coming in from week to week show it. It is doing the Lord's work,—his last work, before the winding up of all things temporal. Through its means, the ignorant are enlightened, sceptics convinced, sinners converted, backsliders reclaimed, and God's waiting ones cheered and comforted. What you do, then, to extend its circulation and increase its usefulness, is for the Lord, and the Lord will reward you for it.

Come, brethren, one and all, from Maine to California,—another grand rally to the work. Let the next three months gladden another thousand hearts and homes with the good tidings of this myriad-tongued messenger of the coming King. W. B. H.

FOR THE FUND.

BRO. GRANT:—I am glad to see the column of the Tract Fund swelling out into very fair proportions. It looks as if the pilgrims meant to keep it alive. I think the publishing of tracts a noble work, and the tracts issued from the C. P. S. just the ones for circulation. We keep a pile of them on our Hall table in Dansville for free distribution, and not a Sunday passes but more or less are taken by brethren or strangers, and they do a silent but effective work. They come very handy also for brethren to carry in the pocket and hand out to friends and acquaintances to read and think upon. I have given away hundreds so. But occasionally we find a person who will not accept them.

Well, as we receive the tracts, so we must keep the fountain supplied with means, so I send you on a small sum for the present, hoping to increase it by another donation shortly. F. BURR.

BRO. GRANT:—I enclose a trifle (25c) for the Tract Fund. It is the greatest desire of my heart to see sinners coming to Christ; and if denying myself will be the means of saving one sinner in the kingdom of God, I shall be well repaid. I drink no tea nor coffee, nor wear any unecessary fixings on my apparel; and am trying to live so that my ways will please God, if they do not man. I feel that I am the least of all God's children, and yet, if faithful, there's a crown for me at his appearing. ABBIE H. SMITH.

Hinsdale, N. H.

BRO. GRANT:—Reading a stirring appeal in the Crisis from Bro. Taylor on the Tract Fund, I wish to comply readily with his proposition, for each of the poor to send twenty-five cents. I am one among the poor in this unfriendly world, but I feel that I can spare that amount in such a noble and glorious cause. I have received much light in reading Advent tracts, and my desire is that others may get light.

May we all stand firm at our post. Soon the victory will be ours. Yours in the blessed hope.

BRO. GRANT:—I enclose twenty-five cents for the Tract Fund. I think there are but few who cannot give so small a sum, if so disposed. I hope all that can will respond to the call immediately. "The day of God hasteth greatly," and souls are perishing for the bread of life. MRS. S. A. MACOMBER.

BRO. GRANT:—I was glad when I saw the new impetus given the tract enterprise by the stirring appeals of Bro. Taylor, and wishing to be one of the cloud who shall send a dove to somebody's windows, I enclose my mite for that purpose. Yours fraternally in hope of eternal life, M. L. DURAND.

BRO. BREWER'S TRACTS.

Having had the privilege recently of examining Bro. Brewer's tracts denominated "Last Day Tokens," I feel it my duty to say to brethren and sisters, in general I consider it the best work of the kind ever published. It is worthy of a place in every minister's library for reference. The work should have a wide circulation.

Friends will confer a great favor on Bro. Brewer by purchasing his works, and a greater one on themselves by reading and circulating them. A. ROSS.

For the World's Crisis.

TO MY FRIENDS.

As many are inquiring in relation to my health, I would say through the Crisis, the difficulty is in the cardiac region and lower lobe of the left lung. What the trouble is I am not able to decide definitely. That the left lung is affected there is no doubt, perhaps not seriously. The great and serious affection is about the heart. There has been almost a constant pain in that region for a year past. It is increased by over exertion, and at times apparently beyond endurance. If I can keep within certain limits I suffer comparatively little, but if I try to sing or talk above my natural conversation, or walk fast, or any over action, I suffer for days in consequence; hence I am under the necessity of heeding the injunction of the apostle in more than one sense, "Let your moderation be known to all men." I have to add, and in all things; therefore I cannot preach or work in any department without suffering. Sometimes I think I am almost useless, perhaps thirty per cent, of health will express it.

The improvement which is evident for a time past is this; I do not suffer constantly when I keep quiet; I only suffer pain now when I am overdone. Whether I shall ever be able to do any thing again, the Lord only knows. I have listened to some four hundred lectures on the healing art, given by the best professional medical men in New England, and by the blessing of God with the practical use of the knowledge I have obtained, I hope to improve my health. Perhaps I may be able to suggest some remedies to the afflicted that will prove beneficial, if I cannot heal myself.

And here I will say to my friends, as I find the Iodine water is being used extensively—and as to its medicinal properties I have no question in certain diseases, scrofula affection in particular—that if they wish to use it, I will furnish them with pure Iodine water for $3.50 per half dozen bottles. I put it up myself, and know it contains nothing aside from Iodine that will harm an infant.

I must express my gratitude to my numerous friends for their remembrance the past nine months. Their aid has saved me and mine from great suffering. May our Lord abundantly reward them.

For the World's Crisis.

NOTICE.

Many of the believers of the speedy coming of Christ, who have worshiped at 68 East Broadway, have become dissatisfied with the proceedings of those who wish to promulgate the doctrine of the non-resurrection, or re-living again of the wicked to be judged in the last day; they having formed themselves into an association, called the "New York and Brooklyn Life and Advent Union," for the express purpose of promulgating a future life for the righteous only, thereby denying any life in the future for the wicked. They admit that all those who do not believe in that doctrine cannot be honest if they join that association, or give their support to the same.

In consequence of their having assumed the authority in the church to appoint a committee for the purpose of supplying the church with preaching, without consulting the church, and paying over to the Treasurer of this church association all collections weekly, and denying the right of any one to vote in church matters who do not belong to that association, although they may have been foremost in keeping up the Advent cause in New York for twenty years, and their christian character unimpeachable, thereby leaving us no way to use our influence and means for the spread of the truth of the soon coming of Christ to give life by a resurrection from the dead, but to obtain another place to worship in; we have therefore joined with other brethren, who formerly worshiped up town, and have taken the room No. 18, in the Cooper Institute, for our place of worship, and, through the blessing of God, we hope to advance the cause of our Master. We solicit the preaching brethren, when convenient, to visit us. We have no test of fellowship but this: All those that love our Lord in sincerity and in truth, and His appearing.

QUERY.

BRO. GRANT:—Through the kindness of a friend I have been reading your paper. Its principles are highly pleasing in many respects. On some points I feel more fully satisfied than ever before.

Will some one of your contributers please give an exposition of Cor. 13: 50–52, and greatly oblige one who, if there is justice in the Bible, desires to see it?

Respectfully, P. E. W.

BIBLE SOCIETIES.

BRO. GRANT:—I send you a paper containing a report of the Sullivan Co. Bible Society lately organized here. I suppose this society is a fair sample of others. While I am glad to see the word of God placed in the hands of every one who has the least desire to read it, I am sorry to see the Babylonish influence brought to bear on its readers. Satan himself I see is quite willing to have the Bible spread while he can have it read through a perverted medium. A positive proof of this is seen in the members composing these societies. They are a motley group, combining by profession the sublime with the ridiculous. The highly Reverend is fellow member with the obscene groggery politician, and every vice is concealed or winked at in this fashionable union of purses for Bible spreading in this nineteenth century.

The Bible they advocate commands to separate the precious from the vile, Christ from Belial, etc.; and the builders of the typical Temple could not allow a stone touched by any but those consecrated to the work. But in this great tower, which is to reach above the flood and fire of Jehovah's wrath, the vilest wretch on the face of the earth can have a life interest without approaching the cross, for the paltry sum of ten dollars! He can indulge in all excesses of revelling and wickedness, and yet be a fellow life-member with the pious Reverend for only ten dollars! O! but say they, it is to spread the Bible. Yes, adds Satan, it is only doing a trifling evil that good may come; it is enriching the church off the wicked world, and putting great power in their hands for doing good (says to himself, for office-holders and agents).

How do the buyers understand it? A good investment, says the lover of carnal pleasure, who also purchases a precious Bible with inlaid gold cover and gilt leaves, to decorate his parlor table, but too precious to use by him that desires not the knowledge of God. A good investment—only ten dollars, for the worldly, grasping millionaire, who can afford to take several shares; he can not only afford to have a life-interest, but accomplish other objects, viz: salve over a guilty conscience for past extortions, and get at the same time a good share of holy glory and admiration from Divines of broadcloth piety. A good investment for the poor victim to occasional sprees, who makes an idol of his cups, to think he owns a stone in the great life-preserving tower, that seems to his delirious vision must stand amid the wreck of nature and crash of worlds. A good investment to the guilty conscience of the gambling politician,—a perfect life-insurance for time and eternity, to shake holy hands as a co-operating life member with the great nabobs of Bible Societies, whose pharisaical exterior establishes their holiness.

Now need we ask why Satan should wish to sit as moderator in this professed holy design? He is determined if the letter must be spread the spirit shall be lost. Every one has a Bible, but where is the spirit and power? Every one has a Bible, but who dares proclaim a Bible faith? Every one may have a Bible, but the letter must conform to fashionable religion; and if the reader talks differently he is a doomed man, a fanatical perverter of the text, and only fit for a lunatic asylum. And how few there are that can bear the reproach of popular condemnation.

The Devil cares not if every house in the land is filled with Bibles, and if every soldier in the army carries as many as he can march under, so long as fashionable religion interprets its meaning, and the cross is kept out of sight. The truth is, the Devil has become a great advocate of Bibles, strange as it may seem; a great angel of light, a great expositor to get men around the cross. But, blessed be God, his time is short; it is his last desperate card which he casts with malicious defiance in his endeavors to checkmate Omnipotence. But a mighty unseen hand is about to save his elect, and end the game, to the eternal infamy and destruction of Satan and his willing worshipers.

For the World's Crisis.

MISSION TO ITALY.

After much reflection and prayer, I am resolved to follow the counsel of dear brethren and friends, and to give public notice that I am decided to remove to Italy, to preach there the glad tidings of Christ's coming and kingdom. To those who know me only through reading my work, "Thrilling Narrative," I will say a few words respecting my life of twelve years in this country. In Sept., 1851, I landed with my wife in New York, having four dollars in my pocket and faith in God in my heart. Letters from Jesuits in Europe respecting me had come to this country before me, so that I was doomed on my arrival to suffer from the same diabolical influence as in London. I looked three days in vain for employment in New York, and was then under the necessity of going to Haverstraw, N. J., to work at brickmaking. The first day I worked faithfully from sunrise to sunset, but a night of suffering followed. The next morning I tried to labor, but after two hours of effort I could do no more; the workmen helped me to the house, and for several days I was very sick. After my health improved, I received a visit from my fellow workmen, who, seeing how unsuited I was to the business of brickmaking, advised me to go to Canada, and generously gave me means with which to do so. I reached Montreal the first of Oct., a stranger, in a strange city; but the next morning found without difficulty a good situation as bookbinder; and God in his kind providence so smiled upon me, that in three months I was able to rent a shop and employ workmen on my own account. But the great fire in that city, in June 1852, reduced me again to extreme poverty, and thrust me out of employment. I then accepted an offer of work at my business at the Grand Ligne Mission, and the following December commenced laboring as a missionary among the French Canadians in Clinton Co., N. Y. There I labored with all the energy of my nature for the spiritual good of that people, and was supported three years by the Am. B. H. M. S.

The 24th of April, 1854, I laid the corner stone of a French Evangelical Baptist church, in Sciota, in town of Chazy, and was assisted in the solemn ceremony by two Wesleyan M. clergymen, Elds. Foster and Nutting. This church was completed and dedicated, and speaks for itself.

In 1856, I heard for the first time the glorious doctrine of Christ's speedy coming preached at a Tent meeting in Perry's Mills, by Eld. James White, and others of Battle Creek, Mich. Being a regular Baptist minister, and having in my pocket the "Declaration of Faith" of that denomination, published by Lewis Colby, 122 Nassau St., New York, in 1851, I turned to the 14th page, which reads thus:—"Art. 16. Of the world to come. That the end of this world is approaching; that at the Last Day Christ will descend from heaven, and raise the dead from the grave to final retribution; that a solemn separation will then take place;" and compared what I read with the doctrine I heard preached. I was rejoiced at the evidence I heard that the time I had looked upon as so distant was near at hand; and after carefully examining the subject, comparing scripture with scripture, I became established in this glorious truth, and resolved not to follow the example of Nicodemus of old, who "came to Jesus by night," but to confess publicly, at whatever sacrifice, the new light I had received. I soon afterward removed to Ohio, where the light I had received on the coming of Christ, and kindred subjects, became clearer and brighter. The Bible was full of new interest to me, and I labored with fresh zeal to interest others in its glorious truths; and with the help of God I am resolved to continue to work and do all in my power to spread abroad the light I have received from his word. I have since spent several years preaching to the French Canadians, receiving but little sympathy and much ingratitude.

The past year I have labored as I was able among my own countrymen in New York city and vicinity, but, with little pecuniary assistance, I have been unable to accomplish what I might otherwise have done. I have had the privilege of preaching the gospel of the kingdom to the highest Italian dignitaries in this vicinity, who have listened to me with much interest, and encouraged me to go to Italy. Still, I feel that there is great responsibility resting upon me in regard to my dear unfortunate Polish nation, and that I must also do all in my power to enlighten them in regard to Scripture truth; and also other European nations to whom I could have access. It is my purpose to establish myself in the valley of Lucerne, near Turin, among the French Waldenses, known so well in the christian world as martyrs, who, for the truth's sake, have enriched that soil with their own blood. Truly such people, who for ages have suffered the most bitter persecution from the "scarlet beast" for their love of the Bible, and who since 1848 only, under the wise reign of his majesty Victor Emanuel, have had the privilege of building churches and worshiping God in peace, are worthy of all the light that now shines from the word of God. Among that people I wish to settle my family (consisting of a wife and four children), and afterward extend my mission, by publications and preaching as the way may be opened, among the Slavonian nations, and use my time for the good of people who would, I believe, accept my labors with gratitude; if not, the church, and myself as an individual, will be free from their blood in the day of judgment.

Now is the time, my dear American brethren, to do something for the enlightenment of the nations that are in comparative darkness as regards gospel light. Dear brethren, please help me to go there, and give me your prayers that God will give me success in bringing many to the knowledge of the truth. According to my arrangements, I shall leave this country, providence permitting, about the middle of April; therefore be so kind as to send your donations before that time to me at Williamsburg, Long Island, N. Y. Every cent I receive shall be acknowledged at once in the papers. I put my case in your hands, and my trust in God, and remain your brother and servant waiting for the kingdom,

Michael Belina Czechowski.

Correspondence.

From Dr. J. Naramore.

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

To the Brethren and Sisters in Christ:—On the night of the 17th of November my life was very miraculously preserved by the interposition of kind providence, from the deadly assault of a midnight assassin, for which I thank the blessed Lord with all my heart, and fervently pray that he may have mercy on the ungodly offender, whoever he is, and bring him to repentance and a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. The ball discharged from the revolver in the hands of that unwelcome and untimely visitor, struck me just above the right temple, going under the surface between the skin and skull about two inches, and passing out directly in front of the left temple. Not knowing the extent of my injury, the anxiety of mind I suffered for a short time may be better felt than told.

On that eventful night, I resolved, if God spared my life, to consecrate myself anew to God and to the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ. And I thank God to-day, that I feel an increasing anxiety to carry out those solemn resolutions. I immediately opened my house for prayer and conference meetings, and preaching, when the good Lord permits some of the heralds of the cross to pass this way.

A very few of us meet at my house on every Lord's day in the afternoon, for prayer and exhortation. And the Lord has blessed us by the renewal of our spiritual strength, increasing the interest in our little meetings, and adding to our numbers such as shall be saved in the great day of the Lord.

Dear brethren, pray for us; dear sisters in Christ, pray for us; that we may walk by faith and not by sight; that this little band in Rochester may be true and humble followers of our Lord Jesus Christ; that "brotherly love may continue;" "that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified, even as it is with you;" and that we may be "delivered from unreasonable and wicked men; for all men have not faith." And in view of the glorious hope we have within us of eternal life, we may "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and Spirit," that we may thereby present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service; and finally, that "the very God of peace, (may) sanctify us wholly, and pray God that our whole spirit, soul, and body be preserved blameless, unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The dear old Crisis increases in interest continually, we look for it every week with as much anxiety as some churches do for their ministers, as it comes laden with so much spiritual food from our heavenly Father's dear children scattered all through this wilderness. It gives us new impetus and helps to cheer us on our pilgrimage journey. I love it, and am trying to circulate. I send you a few names for it, and hope to send more soon. "God speed the right."

Your brother in Christ,

Rochester, N. Y. J. Naramore.

From Bro. Benj. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—I have received so many favors from the Publication Society and others, that I am almost afraid to ask for more, yet I want some tracts, and children's papers, and children's tracts, if any are published. If not, I wish there could be some. I think great good might be done by little children's tracts, such as would cost about one cent each. I have long felt the want of something of the kind, in my visits to families, and have had to go to the American Tract Society for them, and frequently find objectionable ideas in them. I could circulate many thousands every year, as well as children's papers, for my mode of laboring is different from most brethren. I go from house to house, visiting all the time, giving tracts to every family, thus getting access to the minds of the children, as well as others, suiting my exhortations and conversation to the different circumstances of the individuals, singing and praying as I have opportunity. I labor a week in the particular neighborhood where I am to be on the Sabbath, thus awakening a desire to hear.

I do not request or encourage a collection on my behalf, I do not offer to sell tracts. But I need tracts and papers to introduce me into strange families, and among those who are not Advent people. I could circulate a great amount of the back numbers or second hand World's Crisis, or the "Little Pilgrim," and will try to encourage people to take them.

I have thought my work was about done, but still feel able and willing, yea, more than willing, to labor on the cause. My age and infirmity are against me, yet I can yet do a little, if I can be supplied with the desired ammunition to batter down the strongholds of error and sectarianism. Can I be supplied, yea, or nay? It is for you to say. [Yea.—Ed.]

Many thanks, and a heart full of gratitude for past favors. The Lord bless and reward my benefactors an hundred fold in this life, and with eternal life in the world to come. I hear there is a bundle at the Crisis office for me. I will receive them at the office, with any others that may be given.

Chelmsford, Mass. Benj. Spaulding.

From Bro. W. H. Mitchell.

Bro. Grant:—I have recently been among some of the hills of the "Old Granite State," and find even there, in that mountain region, some who have ears to hear and hearts to receive the blessed truth of speedy redemption. Sunday, June 21st, I spoke on the summit of a mountain in the kitchen of an old farmhouse, to a goodly number who listened with attention to the word. A part of Wednesday afternoon I spent with the sick and aged in a retired dwelling on the side of a mountain's slope, conversing upon Jesus' coming, the restitution, resurrection, etc. The words were listened to with deep interest, and the old gentleman who has passed his four-score years, with his companion seemed filled with joy at the prospect presented to their view. Said he, with tears in his eyes, "I do desire to see Jesus come." I asked them if they would like the "Crisis." They said they should. Knowing their circumstances, I told them it should be forthcoming on my own expense.

I do rejoice that we have a paper which goes forth weekly to the homes of the indigent and infirm, and those shut out from the privilege of hearing the gospel preached, as well as to others, bearing the glorious message of the kingdom of God at hand.

Kennebunk, Me. W. H. Mitchell.

From Bro. J. T. Ongley.

Bro. Grant:—Have just returned from the conference at Norwalk, Ohio. Had a good time. Hope the action of the brethren will prove for the glory of God and the salvation of mankind. As a people we have been too scattered in our work.

On my return home, found the friends of the Second Advent cause more determined to work for the Lord than they have been of late, also an interest to hear from outsiders. While the enemy is at work in the form of Spiritualism, etc., we who profess to be looking for the second advent of our blessed Lord to consummate our hope, certainly should be at work in every way, by preaching, prayer, exhortation, money, scattering of tracts, etc. The good Lord help us all to understand our duty and act. Your unworthy Bro. in Christ,

John T. Ongley.

Blooming Valley, Pa., March 26th.

From Bro. T. M. Preble.

Bro. Grant:—I am in great affliction. My dear beloved wife has been taken from me. O, cruel death! She died last Tuesday morning, (March 29th) at six o'clock. But my daughter being sick at the time in Concord, she was not able to come and see her mother until last evening. But through the mercy of our Heavenly Father, the corpse has been kept in a perfect state of preservation until this morning (April 4th). And now, this day, at 10 o'clock, A. M., we follow my dearest treasure I had on earth to the grave. Obituary hereafter.

Yours a "lonely pilgrim here!"

Bro. S. W. Worthington writes from North Bennington, Vt.:—"I wish you to say through the Crisis that there is a small band of brethren here, who would be glad to have all true preachers of the Lord who are passing this way, to stop and preach to us, and also those who do not pass this way, if they feel it duty. We do not want any hobby-horse riders.

I send you this morning two more new subscribers for the Crisis."

Thus has a family circle been entered four times in so short a period of time by the enemy death, and four loved ones taken from us; a father and three children are laid in the cold grave to await the sound of the last trumpet, that will awake all that sleep in Jesus to a newness of life.

Bro. Goodwin embraced the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, about twenty years ago. Since that time he has been a firm believer in and advocate of the speedy second advent of Christ, and all its kindred doctrines. In his death, not only his family but the entire community will suffer loss, for a good and faithful man has left us. He was respected by every one that knew him. All his business relations were honorable, and such as to leave behind him not only an endearing name for integrity and honest dealing, but an universal regret that he is gone. But he was suddenly snatched away; only five days from his attack, until he was asleep. But we as a church, and his family need not sorrow without a hope, for he has fallen asleep in Christ, and they that "sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

The coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead were his only hope of future life. His heart was frequently made sad by the wickedness and desolations of sin around him; but he now sweetly sleeps where the "wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." Soon we expect his Redeemer to stand on the earth, whom he will see for himself, and not another.

He leaves a wife and three children, and many relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. May the grace of our God be with them, and a knowledge of the gospel of truth be a consolation to them in this sad hour of their sorrow.

Nathaniel White.

Bro. Johnathan C. Forbush.

On Wednesday morning, March 9th, Bro. J. C. Forbush of Salem, Mass., yielded up his breath, and slept in Jesus, aged fifty-one years.

Our brother was sick but eight days, of billious fever, his disease terminating in the sleep of death. He has "served his own generation by the will of God, and fell on sleep." The day previous to his decease, he conversed with me, and testified heartily to the sustaining grace of God in the hour of darkness and death. A wife and daughter are plunged into deep grief at this sudden bereavement, yet they "sorrow not even as others that have no hope."

The church and society have lost a valuable member, and his loss will be felt most deeply by all. He had been looking for the Redeemer many years, and doubtless will "have part in the first resurrection." Funeral services were conducted at our chapel, which was filled with the relatives and friends of our brother. A division of the Sons of Temperance, of which Bro. F. was a member, constituted a portion of the audience. The text for the occasion, was the word of Christ, in the 14th chapter of John 2nd and 3d verses.

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

Helen Burch.

Died in Hebron, N. Y., Feb. 7th, 1864, Sister Helen Burch, wife of Bro. Franklin Burch, and daughter of Bro. Erwin and Aurilla A. Woodward, aged twenty-one years.

The deceased was a subject of religious impressions in early childhood. At seven her parents noticed that she quite regularly absented herself for secret prayer, and at eight she was baptized. Since which she has faithfully maintained her christian integrity to the last. A few days' sickness convinced her that the sleep of death was upon her. But with her mind stayed on God she found the gospel of hope sufficient to sustain her in its dark and trying hour, and requested that the resurrection should be the subject of the funeral discourse.

Also, at the same place, March 7th, 1864, her mother, Sister Aurilla A., wife of Bro. Erwin Woodward, aged forty-three years.

For twenty years she has leaned on that Arm that

"Bears the world and all things up."

And in the trying hour which should separate her from an affectionate companion and children, her Savior's presence smoothed her dying pillow, and gave her the hope of a resurrection to eternal life. The funeral services were attended at the Baptist meeting-house, Sermon preached to attentive congregations by the writer.

David McFadden.

Bro. David McFadden of Richmond, Me., died at Port Hudson, July 12th, 1863, aged thirty-six years.

Feeling it to be duty, Bro. M. left all the endearments of his beloved home to serve for nine months in the service of the Union. When his term of service had expired, and his dear friends expected his return, the sad news of his death reached them. None but those who have passed through similar troubles can imagine how great such a bereavement is.

Bro. M. left a widow and one little girl, together with an aged father and other relatives to shed the bitter tears of grief over their loss. May the consolations of the gospel cheer their broken hearts, and may they all be prepared to gain that land of rest with Bro. David, when the blessed of the Lord shall receive the crown of life.

Died in Hollis, Dec. 8th, 1863, Laura Luella Bradbury, only daughter of Price and Hannah Bradbury, aged fourteen years, eight months, and twenty-two days.

Laura possessed many noble traits of character, which endeared her to a large circle of friends, relatives, and schoolmates. She was confined about three months, and in all her suffering murmured not. In conversation with her mother before she died, she said, "Mother, I have never asked God that I might get well, but that his will might be done." She was truly a pattern of patience and meekness. Her parents and only brother are truly bereaved, but they enjoy the hope that she sleeps in Jesus.

But soon the morning's happier light
Its glories shall restore,
Eyelids that now are sealed in death
Shall open to close no more.

A Schoolmate.

Margaret Wheatland.

On Feb. 26th, Margaret, widow of the late Mr. John Wheatland of Salem, Mass., fell asleep in Jesus, aged seventy-five years.

Our sister has gone to the grave; but had hope in her death of eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord at his appearing and kingdom. She was buried from the African church, where the words of Paul in his epistle to the church at Corinth, were taken as a text. "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory."

"Asleep in Jesus! peaceful rest, Whose waking is supremely blest."

F. H. Burbank.

Elijah Tenney.

Died in Chili, N. Y., March 17th, of congestion of the lungs, Deacon Elijah Tenney, formerly of Rochester, N. Y., aged seventy-six years.

Deacon Tenney was a good man, meek, patient, gentle, yet steadfast in the faith, and valiant for the truth. His memory is blessed. During my acquaintance with him I ever found him a faithful friend. May God give comfort to those who lament his loss in sorrow and in loneliness, and bring us at last to meet with him beyond the sorrows of time in that kingdom of God for which he so long and so patiently waited.

H. L. H.

Died, at Canaan, N. H., of diphtheria and malignant scarlet fever, John W., the only son of George W. and Sarah A. Randlett, aged two years and ten days.

Died, in Belfast, Jan. 27th, 1864, Elmer Otis, infant son of Luther M. and Sarah N. Smith, aged one year, three months and thirteen days.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

France. The Memorial Diplomatique says a treaty between Maximilian and Napoleon has been agreed upon, to take effect immediately on the former becoming Emperor of Mexico. The treaty is intended to settle the period of French occupation, and makes arrangements for the liquidation of French claims. The French troops are to be withdrawn gradually when the regimental lists are filled. Six thousand volunteers of the Foreign Legion will remain in Mexico. The debt due to France is to be paid by fourteen annual installments of 26,000,000 francs each.

Berlin, March 16th. It is said that the three Prussian men-of-war which have been at anchor in the harbor of Brest since the commencement of hostilities, have been placed under the command of the Austrian Admiral, in order to operate in concert with the Prussian squadron. The Prussians completed the erection and armament of the batteries at Gammebark oft he Kemmegburd, on Saturday night. The Danes immediately opened fire from their intrenchments at Dappel. The Prussians replied in the course of the following day (Monday).

Vienna, March 16th. The Destenisclesclu Zietung of to-day publishes a telegram from Berlin, said to be derived from an authentic source, saying Denmark is disposed to accept an amnesty and conference proposed in the essential points, but she is only disposed to accept part of the conditions attached to the amnesty.

A telegram from Stamenwurd says that there was no Danish blockading squadron in sight, and it was the general opinion that the Danes are unable to effect a continuous blockade of the Prussian ports.

The Post's Paris correspondent says it is evidently the intention of the sovereigns of Austria and Prussia to occupy eventually Copenhagen, and there they will probably dictate peace.

Berne, March 16th. The Swiss embassy at Yakohama has officially informed the Federal council that the Japanese government will send fresh embassadors to Europe for the purpose of inducing the powers to modify the treaties.

Copenhagen, March 17th. The Prussian batteries opened fire yesterday morning on the Duppel intrenchments. The enemy fired altogether five hundred shots. We replied occasionally, in all thirty-five times. Our firing seemed successful, as two of the enemy's batteries were silenced for some time. We had two officers killed and one wounded. Sixteen privates were killed and forty-nine wounded.

Hamburg, March 19th. Advices from Stockholm to the 15th state that fresh disturbances had taken place. The police office was attacked, and the windows in the residence of the Chief of Police were smashed. The military were called out to quell the riot and eleven persons were arrested.

The capture of the Island of Femeren by the Prussians is confirmed.

Matters in Europe. We take the following items from the last letter of the Paris correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser:

"As regards the mission of the Duke of Saxe Coburg Gotha to Paris, we are assured that it failed, and that Napoleon is disposed now more than ever to fold his arms and let the Germans manage their own affairs. This is certainly the desire of the leading men of the French Cabinet, and certain members of the Cabinet, as for example Messrs. Fould and Drouyn de L'Huys are so committed to this doctrine as not to be willing to remain in the Cabinet if a contrary doctrine prevails.

The Mexican Bank, which is to furnish to Maximilian a great part of the funds necessary in the inauguration and maintainance of his government, is to be a grand affair, incorporated under the names of the largest houses of London and Paris, and under conditions similar to those which regulate the Ottoman Bank.

The Germans have not failed to remark that the camp of Chalons is on the road from Paris to the Rhine, very far on the road, even, and that this year the camp is to be commanded by the ablest officer in the French army, Marshal McMahon, with a staff composed of such splendid Generals as Bourbaki, D'Autemarre and Dumont. The official journal has protested that this combination of officers at Chalons is a mere hazard, and that it contains no menace for anybody. But the fact none the less exists, and the Germans do well not to overlook it.

The Prussians had taken Oster, near West Duppel. Their loss was about 100. They captured 300 prisoners.

The Prussians had arrested all the principal officials in that portion of Jutland which they occupied.

Heavy firing had been exchanged at Sonderborg. A sharp naval engagement off Rugan Island between five Danish steamers and two Prussian men-of-war and several gunboats resulted in the withdrawal of the Prussian ships, closely pursued by the Danes. The Prussians, however, reached port safely.

It is asserted that Sweden is hastening her armaments.

FOUR DAYS LATER.

Liverpool March 23d, Queenstown 24th.

Garibaldi is expected to land at Southampton in about a week.

A grand reception will be given him when he arrives here.

The London Herald says unless Napoleon and Maximilian recognize the South, the establishment of the Mexican Empire will be a fruitless expenditure of strength by France, and end in humiliation to all concerned.

There has been no additional fighting in Jutland.

Semi official Copenhagen papers say Denmark has not acceded to the armstice, as it cannot entertain the surrender of Duppel, nor consent to the present position of affairs being a basis for suspension of hostilities.

The Pope's health is said to have improved.

The London Globe says the policy of the New Emperor will be strictly neutral and will not recognize the independence of the Southern Confederacy, or maintain diplomatic intercourse until France has done so.

The Pope.—The Rome correspondent of the London Times, under date of March 12th, writes:

"Some apprehension, exaggerated of course, has been felt this week for the health of the Pope. On entering St. Peter's on Friday, the 4th, as is the weekly custom of the Pope during Lent, he suffered a little from giddiness, and on returning to the Vatican, say some, he fainted. Certain is it that for three days he had a good deal of fever, and that on Monday night Dr. Viale remained all night with him. At present, however, if answers at the Apostolical Palace can be relied on, he is much better, though erysipelas in one of the legs continues. 'Seventy-three years' are in themselves a malady, and this connected with the menacing symptoms to which His Holiness is more or less subject, gives rise on every slight occasion to apprehension or hope, as the case may be, and always to much speculation on the future. That such an event as the one we are now contemplating would lead to any other results than the choice of a successor I do not imagine, unless the Emperor is bound by any tie of personal affection or honor to the present occupant of St. Peter's chair. A conclave would probably be summoned in nine days after the demise, and the Cardinals, 'full of the Holy Spirit,' would appoint another Pope."

The correspondent adds that it is understood in Rome that Pius IX. has drawn up a letter, in which he directs that a conclave shall be summoned in three days after his death, in order to steal a march on the magnates of the church outside of Italy. He has suggested the names of three cardinals, from whom his successor is to be chosen. The writer says there are not more than fourteen cardinals who would be considered eligible, and that the feeling in Rome is in favor of an old man and a monk—an Italian he must be according to a very old law, to continue the long series of men of that nation who have filled the papal chair for three hundred years; an old man he is desired to be, so as to give a chance to ambition in scarlet; a monk, so as to prevent too progressive a policy. The Jesuits are busy with the determination of naming the next Pope.—Journal.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—

Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive one third the value of the money sent, in any of our books and tracts they may select. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollars' worth; for twelve dollars, four dollars' worth, etc.

Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

Miles Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

For the World's Crisis.

COME, DEAR SAVIOR!

The ready ones stand waiting,
And for thy coming pray;
How long must thou now tarry,
Thy chariot wheels delay?

Cho. O soon, my blessed Savior,
Let thy glorious kingdom come!
Come forth in regal splendor,
And reign upon thy throne.

Nations are growing angry,
Preparing for that day;
All things foretell thy coming
In the portents of the sky.

Cho. O, then come, my blessed Savior,
Bid wars and tumults cease;
Let us hail the bright forever
In a land where all is peace.

Lone mourners here are sighing
O'er the victims of the tomb;
O come, and end these sorrows,
Disperse the gathering gloom.

Cho. O, then come, my blessed Savior,
Let the glorious morning dawn;
Come, and break the loved one's fetters,
Bring the resurrection morn.

L. Otis.

For the World's Crisis.

PRAYER.—No. 3.

"The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost," had been promised. Jesus in his parting address to his disciples bids them tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high, or, as it is elsewhere expressed, "wait for the promise of the Father, which ye have heard of me." How were they to wait? Were they to remain inactive? Did they reason thus: "We are promised the Holy Ghost, Our Master said he would send the Comforter, who should remain with us alway. He has bidden us wait at Jerusalem for its reception. We need not do anything. The promise cannot fail. We will therefore simply wait for the mighty baptism of the Spirit"? Nay, verily! Such were not their reasonings. They must wait, but it must be in God's order, and that was one of prayer, united, believing, and effectual prayer. Jesus had told them before his crucifixion that he would pray the Father for the Comforter; and if the Son of God must needs ask, in order to obtain it for them, how much more necessary that his disciples should also pray.

It was while they were all with one accord in one place offering up their petitions to the Father, that the promise was fulfilled, the glorious baptism of the Spirit was given, and the endowment of power bestowed. On another occasion, "when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost."

Cornelius was a man of prayer. He united with his prayers benevolent deeds. It is said of him, he "gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always," and these are said to have "come up for a memorial before God." Because of these, Peter is sent to instruct him in the doctrine of Christ; and his heart, prepared by acts of devotion, is open at once to receive the new light that dawns upon his mind; and upon him, a converted Gentile, the mighty baptism descends, as upon the believing Jews upon the day of Pentecost.

After this Peter was shut up in prison, and sixteen soldiers placed for a guard over him. The wicked king into whose hands he had fallen hated the christians, and had some of them persecuted and slain. James had a short time before been slain by the sword, and the church trembled for the safety of their beloved teacher. In their trouble they fled for refuge to the throne of grace. "Prayer was made without ceasing by the church of God for him."

Easter was the day appointed by Herod for him to be brought forth to the people, probably for trial and punishment. The night previous many were gathered together praying at the house of Mary the mother of John. Their prayers were about to be answered. Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, each hand chained to theirs, and a guard watched at the door of the prison. Beyond the prison were two wards, probably strongly guarded, and an iron gate which led to the city. How could Peter thus strongly guarded be delivered? The Roman soldiers were strong, they were men of iron nerve, but there was One stronger than they. While the church was praying and Peter sleeping, an angel entered the prison, and smiting Peter on the side, he bids him arise up quickly. His chains immediately fall off from his hands.

Then the angel commanded him to gird himself and bind on his sandals. After doing this he was told to cast his garment, a sort of cloak, about him, and follow him. Peter obeyed, knowing not that it was an actual occurrence, but supposing he saw a vision. They passed the guards and came to the iron gate, which opened of its own accord; so they passed out and went on through one street, then the angel left him.

Peter now realized where he was, and the great deliverance God had wrought out for him by the hand of the angel. After a few moments' reflection, he proceeded to the place where the praying company were assembled, and knocked at the gate. A damsel came to inquire who was there, and when she heard Peter's voice she was so overjoyed she stopped not to open the gate, but ran in and told how Peter was there. They did not believe her at first, but accused her of being mad; but she affirmed that it was so. Then they said it must be his angel, or spirit; they could not think the real bodily Peter was at the gate.

But Peter continued to knock, and when they opened for him, they were astonished. The real Peter was there, and he soon explained the whole matter to them, and dispatched messengers to the rest of the church, then departed for another place.

Paul and Silas, when thrust into the inner prison, and their feet made fast in the stocks, sang praises and prayed; when, lo! suddenly a great earthquake shook the foundations of the prison, opened the doors, and loosed the bands of every prisoner. The jailor, aroused from sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, thought the prisoners had fled, and was about to kill himself, when Paul cried out that they were all there. Then he was convicted, and inquired what he must do to be saved. Great was the result which followed that little prayer-meeting,—a household converted that night, and the way opened for the release of the apostles. O what a power in prayer!

☞ A writer beautifully remarks that a man's mother is the representative of his Maker. Misfortune and crime set no barriers between her and her son. While his mother lives, a man has one friend on earth who will not desert him when he is needy. Her affection flows from a pure fountain, and ceases only at the ocean of eternity.

☞ It is sin that renders affliction insupportable. Get the burden of your sins removed, and the affliction will be easy.

NUMBER NINE.

GOD'S COVENANT WITH ABRAHAM.

There dwelt of old, in Ur of the Chaldees, one man who turned away from the idols which his countrymen worshiped, and in the integrity of his heart sought alone to adore the only and the true God. While others bowed down to silent images, the work of their own hands, this man sought aid from on high, directing his thoughts to that pure source which had inspired his heart with love and confidence. It was thus he found favor in the sight of heaven, and was soon made the recipient of its blessings. God saw his faithfulness, and determined to make him the founder of a chosen people.

He is directed to leave the place of his nativity, to sojourn in a far distant land. He obeys, and at length the long journey is accomplished; he has reached the land of promise. For the first time he gazes out upon the varied and beautiful scenes of Canaan. Green pastures, watered by living springs, are spread around him in all their oriental richness. The olive and the vine crown with beauty the circling hills, and the graceful date tree waves in vales between. While feasting his eyes upon this vision of beauty, the Lord appeared and said, "Unto thy seed will I give this land." And Abraham consecrated the spot with an altar, and with the sacrifice offered up his heart's devotion as a sweet oblation to Him who had become his chosen director.

Time passed on, but Abram was still a stranger and sojourner in the land; yet amid all his wanderings and the varied incidents of his life he remained ever faithful to his trust, ever consistent in his life. The glitter of princely courts could not dazzle his eye, nor the love of gain allure him from the path of duty.

Again the Lord appeared to him to renew the solemn covenant that was to descend through the ages as a blessing to the world. To him and his posterity was promised all the land of Canaan as an everlasting possession. He was promised a son in his old age, through whom all the nations of the earth should be blessed.

It was then, methinks, that a vision of the future passed before Abraham, as he was now called. He saw his descendants multiply, beheld them go down into Egypt, where they became a great people; saw their oppression, and at last their wonderful exodus from a cruel bondage, their triumphant passage through the Red Sea, their murmurings and wanderings in the desert and wilderness; the reception of the divine law amid the terrors of Sinai; their final entrance into the promised inheritance, their long and bloody wars and final triumph and prosperity. He beheld the greatness of David's reign and the glory of Solomon's court.

But did the vision stop here? was a veil drawn over the declining days of Israel's fading glory, when the heathen triumphed and they who knew not God dwelt in the palaces of Judah's departed princes? If not, methinks beyond this night of clouds he saw a more glorious day appear, when the sun of a purer dynasty shone out upon the world, the harbinger of a brighter era to earth's benighted children. But, ah! did he behold his seed according to the flesh reject this Prince who had come to deliver them? if so, he beheld the Savior of his true seed and heirs according to faith. If he saw this possession pass away at last into the hands of a strange people, this possession that had been promised to him as an everlasting estate, a land in which he had been a sojourner, he looked by faith beyond the tide of time, when he should be called to share with all the true and good, this same land of promise, renovated, and made beautiful by Him who had sworn it should be an inheritance to him and his heirs forever.

Yea, beyond the dark decay of time he looked and saw this heritage bloom anew with more than its pristine beauty; beheld it glow with transcendent loveliness; amid its scenes he beheld the faithful congregated from every clime, dwelling in harmony under the shadow of the Redeemer's love. 'Twas thus he saw fulfilled the divine promise in all its glory and fullness. And he bowed his heart in thankfulness and blessed the Lord in whom he had trusted. His faith had sealed the covenant, and though he possessed not even the pastures his flocks grazed upon, he looked beyond the storms of the ages for the promise to be made sure when He whose right it is shall reign forever more.

TRUST IN GOD.

I have felt for a long time as if there ought to be something said upon this point, and yet how few know what it is to trust in the Lord. We hear people say very often, if we tell how much we need this or that, why do not you trust in the Lord? Now I want to know if any one trusts in the Lord for food and raiment when their house is full of all kinds of provision, a closet full of nice clothes, a purse of money or a good supply of money in the house? Now if that is the way to trust in the Lord I have not learned how.

The Lord wants us to practice what we preach. If we tell a brother or sister to trust in the Lord, why do not we try it first? I do know that the Lord will provide for all his children, and now if we want others to trust in the Lord, let us try and help them. If we see a brother or sister in need, and have the means to help them, let us kindly do so. We know not how much good we can do until we try. The Lord is soon coming, and much good will the things of this world do us if they are not spent in the service of the Lord? Brethren and sisters, the Lord wants us to act as if we believed what we profess. Let us do all we can to help others have confidence in God. I have imagined sometimes that people thought there was no need of anybody's trusting in the Lord but preachers, and it certainly seems as if they really did think so, for if you say any thing to them of your needs, how quick they will tell you that you must trust in the Lord. Well, now, brother, did you trust in the Lord when you bought such a lot of provision and filled your house with enough to last a year? What a wonderful trust you had in God. "I had money to buy with," is the reply. Suppose you had given some of it to that poor preacher, who preached to you a few Sundays ago, and helped bear the burden. He is poor, has to trust in the Lord for all he has, and yet you really think his life is a desirable one. You know nothing about it. He toils hard, goes from place to place and meets with cold-hearted and covetous professors, who really wish they had something to give the preacher, but they have nothing but a God bless you and, We would like to have you come again.

Now I do not believe that the Lord will bless such people as these. God wants whole-hearted christians, those that are not afraid they shall come to want if they should give the poor preacher's family a bushel of potatoes or corn, or a peck of apples, or a little butter, and a few dollars or so to help sister, the preacher's wife, to some of her necessities, so that she would not have to sit up so late at night to work after all the rest of the parishioners had retired to rest. Often does the preacher's wife feel so weary, that life seems of but little worth. Sisters, cannot you just leave off that fancy work, that needless trimming, and give the time that you spend upon it to go over and help her a little, and help her to trust in the Lord? Her family is sick, has been so for a long time. Affliction's wave has rolled o'er them time after time. She has had to struggle hard for life and to keep above water, and yet she trusts in the Lord amidst all, and often tells her companion not to tarry to help her, but to go out on his mission of love for his Master, to warn sinners to flee from the wrath to come.

Now is it not our duty to do all we can to help bear the burden and so fulfill the law of Christ? They that give to the poor lend to the Lord. Just step in and see if there is any thing that you can do for them. Of what avail will all your property be when the Judge of all the earth appears to gather his chosen ones? Many will not secure an entrance into the haven of rest. If the Master says "depart," money cannot buy a seat therein. Now is the time for us all to do good. Money cannot bribe the Almighty. Covetousness can never enter there. Be wise now, do not get worldly. Do not be overcharged with the cares of this life, and that day overtake you as a thief.

There are those that need our help. The poor are here with us. Let us help them to trust in the Lord, and by-and-by we shall repose beneath the shadows of life's fair tree, and be made like Christ.

FRIENDSHIP.

How sweet to have a friend below, in whom we can confide;
To bless us if we act aright, and if we err to chide;
To whom we can reveal each thought and feeling of our heart,
Who shares with us each earthly joy, and in our grief bears part.

But it is better far than this to have a Friend above,
Whose power is equal to and lasting as his love;
Who gives us every earthly friend, and all we here possess,
And if we do his holy will is always sure to bless.

Then may we speak and act aright, and live so holy here,
That when he calls his children home, we may with them appear.

Never forsake a friend. When enemies gather around, when sickness falls on the heart, when the world is dark and cheerless, is the time to try true friendship. They who turn from the scene of distress betray their hypocrisy, and prove that interest only moves them. If you have a friend who loves you, and studies your interest and happiness, be sure to sustain him in adversity. Let him feel that his former kindness is appreciated, and that his love was not thrown away. Real fidelity may be rare, but it exists in the heart. Who has not seen and felt its power? They only deny its worth and power who have never loved a friend, or labored to make a friend happy.

AN APPEAL.

To the Dear Brethren in Christ Scattered Abroad, Greeting:—As the time is short in which we may labor in the vineyard of our Lord for the salvation of perishing men and women, we deem it of the utmost importance to put forth an extra effort for this object; hence we feel it our duty to sustain the publication of the World's Crisis which has been so instrumental in the spread of the truth of the soon coming of Christ, and the establishment of his glorious kingdom. And while we feel to contribute according as God gives us means to the support of the Tract Fund for the spread of the truth of God's word, we nevertheless feel that new obligations seem to devolve upon us who are looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ.

And for this object, dear brethren, I am constrained to appeal to you to come to our help in the support of our western paper—the Voice of the West, published by Bro. Himes in Michigan. I appeal not only to our western brethren, whom we expect will help by their subscriptions and contributions, but we hope our brethren in the east will feel that we are engaged in one common cause in the proclamation of the blessed truths of the Bible which are so dear to us. And, moreover, realizing that every subscriber east as well as west, will help make permanent another means by which some poor soul may be brought to rejoice in the truth, we urgently request our friends who wish the prosperity of the cause in the west to help us in the support of this paper by their subscriptions.

We do not ask, nor wish one of our brethren or sisters east, or even west, to discontinue the Crisis, which is and has been the means in the hands of God of so much good. We have taken the Crisis ever since its first publication and intend to do so till the blessed Savior comes, if we live till that time; and we have also procured many subscribers for it (the best paper ever published, in our opinion); and intend to do so still, if time permit. And now I rejoice that another paper is started, which we trust will be bold in the defense of the truth and be scattered over these vast prairies.

Dear brethren west, let us do our duty; and while we continue to support the paper which comes from the east from week to week, laden with truth to the dear saints, let us make a little more sacrifice for God and truth, and soon we shall reap if we faint not.

I would say, we wish to continue the World's Crisis, because of its many contributors with whom we are familiarly acquainted. We wish to read their stirring epistles. Many of them are our especial friends with whom we had the trial of our faith in times past, and they are endeared to us by such trial. So we cherish their memory; and we trust that the brethren and friends east may have the same regard for the infant cause in the west as we have for the cause east, and assist us in our effort to sustain both these weekly messengers, not only with our means but with our prayers, that God may bless and prosper us as a people, and his name be glorified.

Dear brethren of the Illinois Advent Christian Conference, many of you are aware that at our last conference in Ionia, Warren Co., Ill., there was a subscription paper started to assist Bro. Himes in removing his office and the publication of his paper to the west, which subscription paper was left in my hands until the matter was settled with regard to his coming. It is no longer a matter of uncertainty. He is in our midst with his office, and two numbers of his paper already published. It is reasonable to expect that every one that has subscribed for this object will feel glad to pay their subscription as early as an opportunity presents; and I would further suggest that every one come to our next conference, to be holden at Wyanet, Bureau Co., prepared to honor their subscription with the money; or, if they cannot come themselves, to send it to me at an early date. The amount upon the subscription paper is $100. Shall it not be met by the 25th of May? We trust it will. We hope to see the conference in Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, acting in this matter, to make permanent a paper through which we can give our appointments and have them in season. Your brother in Christ,

Wm. McCulloch.

FROM ONE WHO HAS KNOWN AFFLICTION.

Bro. Grant:—How often in the language of the poet can we exclaim,—

"Afflictions, though they seem severe,
In mercy oft are sent."

And it is not until the chastening hand of our Heavenly Father is laid upon us, that we are enabled to appreciate the blessings and privileges we may have heretofore enjoyed. For the past two years and a half I have drank deeply of the cup of sorrow. But my Heavenly Father prepared the draught, and should I refuse to drink, even to the dregs, the bitter cup?

My first and greatest affliction was the loss of the companion of my youth. He arose in the morning and went about his daily avocations, looking forward to a long life of health and happiness; but in an unguarded moment he received his death wound from the kick of a favorite horse, and after ten days of intense suffering he closed his eyes in death. Words are inadequate to express the sorrow and anguish of this my first and great bereavement, and my heart was prone to rebel against the dispensation of an all-wise providence; but oft in the silent watches of the night, or when engaged in my domestic duties, the dying words of my husband, "We shall meet again," would come like soothing balm, bidding me look forward with the eye of faith to the resurrection morn, when I trust, if faithful, I shall be permitted to greet him, clothed with immortality to die no more.

But this was only the commencement of my afflictions, and ere I had learned to bow in humble submission, and say, "thy will be done," an only and much loved sister was stricken down with a lingering disease, and for weeks and months she hovered on the brink of the grave; but thanks to my heavenly Father, who has said if we ask of him in faith believing we shall receive, he spared her life; but ere she was able to leave her bed news came of the death of my eldest brother, who fell a victim to consumption. Grief at the loss of her son, and over exertion in the care and anxiety for her daughter, prostrated my dear mother on a bed of sickness, and after eight long weary months of racking pains and cough, her weary spirit found rest and peace in the grave. Peace be to her blessed memory! We would not bring her back to suffer again what she has passed through; but we cannot help sorrowing that in this life we shall no more look on that loved form, no more listen to her words of counsel and instruction, or be cheered by her smiles of love and approbation. Her work is done, and we trust "well done," and we believe in the resurrection morn she will be crowned with life and immortality.

Kindred ties have been broken, and loved forms have been laid in the dust, but my faith and hope in the promises of the gospel cheer me on in my lonely pilgrimage, and in the language of a well known poet I can truly say—

"I thank thee, God, for all of smart
That thou hast sent, for not in vain
Has been the heavy, aching heart,
The sigh of grief, the throb of pain.
The chast'ning hand of One above
Falls heavy, but I'll kiss the rod;
He gives the wound, and I must trust
Its healing to the self same God."

SINGING.

"I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also."—1 Cor. 16: 15.

To sing with the spirit and the understanding is not the fashion of the present day. A preference seems to be given to tunes. That church is most popular whose musical entertainment preponderates; while the words are but secondary, often almost as meaningless as if uttered in an "unknown tongue."

It is a question whether the introduction of sacred music into our concerts and worldly assemblies is beneficial or otherwise. "Solemn words upon a thoughtless tongue" too often pain the christian ear, and lead us to lament the deterioration of that reverence once inculcated in the youthful mind towards sacred subjects. Dear young friends, will you not cultivate the habit of making your heart accompany the words of the "sweet songs of Zion," that you may "make melody in your hearts unto the Lord"? Read over understandingly the following familiar and comprehensive hymn. Its petitions have been the heartfelt utterance of many a christian. In these last perilous times we need to offer them daily. Here is comfort for the tempted and desponding; encouragement amid all the storms of earth. We all have our favorite hymns, made sacred by association with departed friends, or by seasons of private or social enjoyment. Next to God's word they are food for our souls.

"Beset with snares on every hand,
In life's uncertain path I stand;
Savior divine, diffuse thy light,
To guide my doubtful footsteps right.

Engage this roving, treacherous heart,
Great God, to choose the better part,
To scorn the trifles of a day,
For joys that none can take away.

Then let the wildest storms arise,
Let tempests mingle earth and skies;
No fatal shipwreck shall I fear,
But all my treasures with me bear.

If thou, my Jesus, still art nigh,
Cheerful I live and cheerful die;
Secure when mortal comforts flee,
To find ten thousand worlds in thee."

THE WATCHMEN.

Dear Bro:—Are not some of the prophecies now being fulfilled in the slaveholder's rebellion? Is not God now sending down his just judgments upon this guilty nation, as he has declared by the mouth of his prophets he would do?

Ezekiel 33: 2–6,—"Son of man, speak to the children of thy people and say unto them, When I bring a sword upon a land, if the people of the land take a man of their coasts and set him for their watchman. If, when he seeth the sword come upon the land, he blow the trumpet, and warn the people; then whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the sword come and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head. He heard the sound of the trumpet, and took not warning, his blood shall be upon him. But he that taketh warning shall deliver his soul. But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand."

Our watchmen—those set apart to preach the everlasting truths of the gospel—have failed to give warning when they saw the sword approaching; but cried peace, peace. They saw the heel of the slaveholder upon his victim; and they said, All is well. The watchman heard the clanking chain and said, What a glorious institution is this! The watchman heard the poor bleeding slave crying mightily night and day for help, but sounded not the trumpet.

The sword has come and taken many from among us, but their blood will be required at the watchman's hand. And why have they thus feared to sound the trumpet? They love the praise of men more than the praise of God; they have more confidence in man than in God. They dare not sound the trumpet for fear they will displease some wealthy member of the church, and their bread and butter will fail.

But, thank the Lord, there are a few faithful watchmen who, when they, "see the sword come upon the land, blow the trumpet," "who cry aloud and spare not;" who shun not to declare the whole truth and trust to Providence for their corn. And those who hear the warning and heed it not, their blood shall be upon their own heads.

"Ye stand upon your sword, ye work abomination, and ye defile every one his neighbor's wife; and shall ye possess the land?" The slaveholder stands to-day as he always has stood—upon his sword, ready to strike down any one who shall lift a finger in opposition to slavery, as a lion is ready to tear in pieces any who should attempt to rob him of his prey.

"Ye work abomination." Who in God's world works abominations if the slaveholder does not? And yet we have many watchmen, north and south, who refuse to sound the trumpet and give the alarm. Verily they shall have their reward. Lewis Cawkins.

SHOULD CHILDREN ATTEND MEETING?

A strange question this; but it will come up. The mind cannot cease to reason and to ponder on the opposite directions which religious people take, and the opposite examples also. It is generally admitted, and by some practically believed, that the mind in childhood and youth is most susceptible of impressions, and, by proper attention, the most easily led into the way of the Lord.

But when we see religious parents, who have a deep interest themselves in meetings and in attending them, while their children seldom attend, sometimes never, the question must come up. Why? In some communities we see parents and children, all who are able to go out, at the Sunday meetings listening to the word of life, respectful, attentive, and interested. What can be more encouraging to the minister? What more pleasant sight in his congregation? In other places but few and sometimes no children (if we may except grown ones,) are to be seen in the congregation. The children are left at home to spend their time in idleness, or reading novels, or such other reading as they may choose, perhaps good reading. In many cases they are not at home, but have wandered into the streets or the haunts of play, or of vice. In others, they are left at home, and as soon as their parents are at meeting they leave for such places and amusements as suit them.

At the weekly prayer-meetings some of these parents are found constant and active; their prayers ascend for the salvation of their children; they ask others to pray for them, and feel deeply for the youth. But these children are not in the prayer-meeting, seldom found there, often they are spending the same hours in gaming, in pleasure parties, or in riotous conduct in streets or shops. If they are ever made to go, or persuaded to attend the prayer-meeting, it is too frequently that they only do so to disturb others by improper conduct; because they have not been properly trained at home, nor have felt the solemnity of christian worship by early and constant attendance in company with and care of christian persons.

I should decide that it is of much importance that our children attend preaching and prayer-meetings generally.

JOURNAL.—No. 4.

Thursday, 18th inst., I commenced a series of meetings at Castle Rock, Dacotah county, Minn.; in all five sermons. Saturday, 20th, we gave notice for all who wished to come together to organize a free church, to be governed alone by the written word of God, to meet at the house of B. R. Fellows (as they had lost their records, and the church visibility). We organized with twelve old members and three young converts. Bro. Cook was chosen Clerk, and Bro. B. R. Fellows Deacon, on trial. On Sunday we had a good communion season. They wished me to tarry longer, but as I had been preaching nearly every evening, and two sermons on Sundays, since the 13th of last December, left for home, which I reached after four days' tedious toil through mud, snow drifts, etc. While at Ottawa Village, that little German boy, some sixteen years old,—who fled from the Indians when his father was killed and his mother wounded, took his little brother, some three years old, on his back and carried him sixty miles,—came forward for prayers, and was greatly excited with the fear of going instantly to a burning hell. He finally became calm, and I think was converted. I baptized him, and he joined the church. Total number of sermons since Dec. 13th, eighty. Donations in all, $33.

I was glad to learn from Eld. M. Grant's account of the meeting at Cabot, Vt., that Eld. S. Wheelock is yet alive and trying to preach the word of God. He was once ranked with the scoffing infidels. May he declare the whole counsel of God. May Bro. Nathan Wheeler preach the pure word of God with power and success. I pray we may all be ready for his glorious coming and kingdom. The general evidences show his coming to be near. My prayer is, Lord, send more honest and faithful laborers into the gospel harvest. May the saints wake up to a sense of their duty to God, the true church and the world; and sustain the ministry and church by their prayers and exhortations.

Yours in hope, Wm. Sweet.

WEARY OF SIN.

"I am weary of my sin,
Savior, come and take me in,
Take me with thyself to be."

I have been growing more and more weary of sin and sinning for a few years past; ever since I saw myself lost and ruined, and as such cast myself in all my guilt into the outstretched arms of that blessed Redeemer who died to save such, and who would that all men should come unto him and have life. His great salvation has appeared unto me, and to all those that are called according to his purpose, and even the "ends of the earth." I would live free from sin, a pure and spotless life, ever striving to do what I can, by example as well as precept, to keep the standard raised up, through the assistance of divine grace.

None but holy ones shall enter
Through the pure, celestial gate.

Oh! for a deeper work of grace in my own heart; and I greatly desire to see it deepened in the hearts of God's dear children, and much more abounding, for it is much needed. I am young, yet desiring to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus; and trust I never shall be one of the class, of whom we read, "who are ever learning but never able to come to a knowledge of the truth."

May God grant us grace to live to his glory here, and save us in his coming kingdom, there to serve him more acceptably for ever.

LINES.

On the death of Flora Isabell, who died Feb. 11th, 1863, aged nineteen months and seventeen days.

She's gone! our little Flora,
Away from our fond gaze;
Grim death doth now embrace her,
In the cold and silent grave.
Our hearts are filled with sadness,
And grief is on our brow;
Our eyes made red with weeping,
Our home is lonely now.

Sweet child! so mild and lovely,
'Tis hard to give thee up;
Like flesh from bone to sever,
To drink the bitter cup:
But oh! our Heavenly Father
In grief will us sustain,
For Thou didst give and take away,
And blessed be thy Name.

O come, thou blessed Savior,
And wake the sleeping ones,
That they may live forever
On Eden's sunny plains.
Death there shall never enter
To part those friends so dear,
Fond ties no more shall sever,
No more shall fall the tear.

Like pilgrims here we wander,
By earth unloved, unblest,
We taste not of its pleasures,
For this is not our rest.
We're striving for a mansion
In the city that's to come,
Where God shall wipe away all tears,
And bid us rest at home.

There we shall live forever
On Eden's sunny plain,
Beside Life's crystal river
Shall be our blest domain.
We'll tune our harps with angels,
And with the unnumbered throng,
Beneath the shade of Life's fair tree,
We'll sing redemption's song.

IDA, AND HER BLIND GRANDMA.

"Come, Grandma, let me lead you out to a walk this morning. The sun shines so brightly, and a good many of the flowers are in bloom, and the birds are singing so sweetly, I think you would enjoy a walk in the garden. Come, I will lead you," said Ida, placing her little white dimpled hand within her grandma's, who was totally blind. She had never seen Ida's face, but she would often pass her trembling hand over her little grand-daughter's face, and say,

"Ah! I think she must have a sweet face,—it feels so pretty to me!" And sure enough, she had a sweet face and disposition, too.

Ida led her blind grandma out into the garden to look at the flowers, and smell their rich perfume, and enjoy the balmy air of Spring. The birds were pouring forth sweet strains of music from the branches of the trees. All was truly delightful. As they passed around the garden, Ida, in her ecstasy of joy, would forget that her grandma could not see those beauties that every where met her own gaze. Although she could smell their fragrant odors, and hear the birds sing, and feel the soft air, she could feel no charms in them. She felt that this earth, lovely as it might be to childhood and youth, had lost all its charms to her. Ida would lead her blind companion from flower to flower saying,

"Oh, Grandma! see, this is a tulip; how pretty it is. And those are daffodils. See, see, Grandma, how very pretty they look, and how sweet they smell."

A sigh escaped from the lips of the aged lady. "Does Ida forget that her grandma cannot see those beautiful flowers which you can see? God has seen fit in his wisdom to take away my sight, so that I cannot see those beautiful things that my little Ida can. But I hope one day to see with eyes that will never grow blind, when the Savior comes to take me home."

"Oh," said the little girl quickly, "when the Savior comes for you, I will take hold of your hand and lead you up to him; you are so blind that you will not see him."

Perhaps some little girl will take some one by the hand and lead them to the Savior.

ONE STEP MORE.

Had I better get in and row across? I wonder.

Nobody would ever know anything about it; and there the new boat lies, rocking on the river; and there are the two oars in the bottom. It's only a mile down to the bridge, and I could row down there and back in a little while; and it would be such a splendid sail!

Of course nothing could happen to me, for grandpa said, to mamma the other evening, when we went down to the mill,

"Why, Helen, Harry's a natural-born sailor. He can manage the boat as well as I."

"O dear! I wish he'd never seen that boat!" said mamma. "I expect it will be the death of him yet."

"Well, he didn't inherit his natural taste from you, that's certain," laughed grandpa; "but women are always nervous about the water."

And that's all. It's just mamma's nervousness; and I know nothing would happen to me, getting in there and having a little sail; and it would be so nice, this beautiful afternoon, and the river looks, away up by the bridge, like a ribbon among the oaks and poplars.

Nobody would ever know anything about it, either; for, of course, I should get back safe, and I don't believe there'd be any harm in it.

But, then, there's my promise to mother; there's no getting around that, and it was the last thing she said to me before she left home on Thursday.

She called me to the carriage, and bent over on one side and smoothed my hair, as she always does when she talks to me.

"Now, Harry, boy," she said, "I want you to promise that you won't get inside that boat until your father and I get home again.

"No, mamma, I won't certainly," I answered, though I hated to bad enough—that's a fact.

And I think it's quite too bad that such a big boy as I am can't have his own way in such things.

O dear! dear! the longer I look, the more I want to go. It seems as if I must.

One more step, and I shall be in the boat; but, there—my promise to mamma!

And how shall I feel when she comes and looks in my face, and calls me her darling boy, and puts her arms around my neck, and kisses me over and over again?

She won't ask me whether I've been in the boat, because I have promised her I wouldn't; and I never told my mother a lie in my life.

And won't now.

Mamma came home last night. Such a hugging as I had!

"Has my Harry been a good boy?" she said, "and not done a single thing his mother would have disapproved of?"

"No, I guess not, mamma," I said; but I was thinking about the boat, and didn't speak very positively.

Mamma held me away, and looked in my eyes.

"You guess not? Are you not quite certain, Harry?" she asked.

"Well, mamma, I haven't done anything, but I've thought about it."

She drew her arms around me, and held me close to her.

"Tell me all about it, Harry," she said.

And then I did. I told her about my going to the river Saturday afternoon, and how near I came to getting into the boat and rowing down to the bridge, and what a terrible temptation it was, and how in one step more I should have been; but the memory of my promise to her, and the thought that God saw me, held me back when there was only one step betwixt me and the boat.

And when I had done, I found mamma's tears falling, just like rain-drops, on my hair.

"Oh, my child! I thank God! I thank God!" she said.

And I, too, thanked him then from my heart that I didn't take that one step.—Church Monthly.

THE PRECIOUS LITTLE PLANT.

Two little girls, Bridget and Walburga, went to the neighboring town, each carrying on her head a heavy basket of fruit to sell for money enough to buy the family dinner. Bridget murmured and fretted all the way, but Walburga only joked and laughed. At last Bridget got out of all patience, and said vexedly: "How can you go on laughing so? Your basket is as heavy as mine, and you are not one bit stronger. I don't understand it!"

"Oh!" said Walburga, "it is easy enough to understand. I have a certain little plant that I put on the top of my load, and it makes it so light I hardly feel it. Why don't you do so too?"

"Indeed!" said Bridget, "it must be a very precious little plant! I wish I could lighten my load with it. Where does it grow? Tell me. What do you call it?"

"It grows," replied Walburga, "wherever you plant it, and give it a chance to take root, and there's no knowing the relief it gives! It's name is Patience."—Herder.

THE COMING ONE.

O! not as once, dear Savior,
Will now thy coming be;
No more the cross and manger
Are destined, Lord, for thee;
No more the poor despised one,
Whom impious Jews deride,
And by a mock tribunal,
Doomed to be crucified.

But on the clouds descending,
A King and Conqueror crowned,
With shining hosts of angels
Attending thee around;—
Behold! thou'lt make thy advent
Upon the earth once more,
Whilst up with joy to meet thee
Thy people gladly soar.

Oh! hasten, dear Redeemer,
Thy people waiting stand,
And watch with eager longing
To hear thy blest command,
That speedily will greet them
And bid them swiftly rise,
To meet their Lord approaching
In triumph from the skies.

REPORT OF THE DISCUSSION

Held at Stanbridge, C. E., Feb. 10th to Feb. 13th, 1863, between ELDER MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, and REV. DENNIS CHAPIN, Universalist Missionary of the District of Bedford, C. E.

WRITTEN BY C. P. DOW.

FRIDAY MORNING.—ELDER GRANT'S THIRD SPEECH.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—I confess I am surprised at the positions of my friend. He asks, "Is Jesus right? or is my friend right?" We reply, Jesus is always right. My friend intimates that I contradict Jesus. I have not meant to do so. Who is it that contradicts Jesus? He says, "The STARS SHALL FALL from heaven," and tells us when they shall fall. Now they have fallen, or they will fall. We say they have fallen, and are able to prove it. My friend says, if we understand him, they have not and will not fall. He ridicules the idea. Now who is right? my friend, or Jesus? Who contradicts Jesus? WHO? Again he says, "All of Daniel's prophecy was fulfilled in the country where it was proclaimed," or "where the visionist lived," and it was seen, or revealed. Then all of Daniel's prophecy was fulfilled in Babylon! But was it? Can it be proved? We think not. Let our friend try, and so substantiate his novel assumption. But he says we want history to make the Bible inspired. Oh no, the Bible is inspired; we believe it to be the product of inspiration; "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." Hence we read its prophecies, and look for the events to fulfill it, and when we find them in history, or observe them ourselves, we say, "THIS IS THAT spoken by the prophet." Thus Christ applied prophecy, and so may we, and in this way prophecy becomes a "light shining in a dark place," and Peter says we "do well to take heed" unto it. This we intend to do, for we do not admit that it was "ALL fulfilled in the first century."

He says, "Then the things that were written (the Old Testament) were fulfilled, not the things that were not written;"—as much as to say those not written (the New Testament) were not to be fulfilled. This is in keeping with the declaration that "all prophecy ended or was fulfilled in the first century."

We will now resume our argument on the signs that were to precede the second coming of Christ, and show that event near. We will read from the 24th of Matt., 29th verse; "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken"; or, as Luke has it (Luke 21: 25, 26). "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Matt. 24: 30, 31;—"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end to the other." These signs have been fulfilled. We now have unparalleled "distress of nations, with perplexity," and every feature of our Lord's prophecy fulfilled, in the connected chain of events here predicted to precede the coming of the Son of man to gather his elect.

With our view of this subject, all is clear; there is no obscurity. Luke 21: 28–31, we read;—"And WHEN these things BEGIN to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. And he spake to them a parable; Behold the fig tree, and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of yourselves that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." When these foretold events take place or transpire, we are to know thereby that "the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." But these signs were not seen in the first century. I challenge him to show that one of these signs was seen in the first century. Will he undertake it? We shall see. Let him do it if he can.

We remark that what has come to pass was expected by wise and good men before the prophecy was fulfilled. Thus Thomas Burnet, in his Theory of the Earth, published in London in 1697, says after quoting Matt. 24: 29, and speaking of the darkening of the sun and moon: "The last sign we shall take notice of is that of the falling stars—'And the stars shall fall from heaven,' says our Savior." Burnet then shows that the fixed stars and planets cannot fall, and that the only ones that ever will fall will be the meteoric or shooting stars, and adds, "No doubt there will be all sorts of fiery meteors at that time; and amongst others those called falling stars, which, though they are not considerable, singly, yet, if they were multiplied in great numbers, falling as the prophet says 'as leaves from the vine, or figs from the fig tree,' they would make an astonishing sight. We need not look upon these things as hyperbolical and poetic strains, but as barefaced prophecies, and things that will LITERALLY come to pass. We are not to recede from the literal sense without necessity, or where the nature of the subject will admit of a literal interpretation."

We feel confident that this predicted sign has come to pass; that we belong to the generation who have seen the signs of Matt. 24: 29, and therefore this generation will see the Son of man come, and he will come soon, probably during the nineteenth century. (Time expired.)

FRIDAY MORNING.
Mr. Chapin's Third Speech.

Mr. Moderator, Ladies and Gentlemen:—You perceive my friend SAYS it will come. Now I say it can't come now, or in the future, for the very good reason that I have proved that it did come in the first century. What do his assertions prove, then? Is his loud talk proof? Does he suppose there is any argument in loud talk? He quotes history; I quote no history; I quote the Scriptures. I am not obliged to go to history to prove my position. You well know that I have referred to the Bible, and not to history. You see the difference, my friends. All this talk about shooting stars will not prove his position. He may pile up his history about meteoric showers, but this will prove nothing. Who has not seen the stars fall? This is nothing new or strange. Meteoric stones have fallen. What of it? I suppose they have fallen. But what has this to do with the coming of Christ in the nineteenth century? You see he plays with the evidence I brought to show that prophecy was fulfilled where the prophet lived. I did not say so, but in the country. We did not say that prophecy was confined to the place where the prophet lived, not to the house, but to the country. Why did he play upon that remark? Was it not to use time?

Again he says, "If I will prove that all nations were gathered around Jerusalem to battle"—[Eld. Grant: Mr. Chairman, I have said no such thing to-day; my friend is wrong.] I will refer to the prophet. Zech. 14: 1–3; "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle." Were not all nations there? They must be there. All nations must stand around about Jerusalem. Is the prophet right? or is my friend right?

He has told us about falling stars, as he calls them. We do not call them so. Who believes the fixed stars will fall to the earth? It is impossible. It is absurd!! We know that stones have fallen; did they not gather the stones at the shower of stars? It is idle to talk about the stars falling to the earth. But my friend has told you that he saw the stars fall down into the woods.

[Eld. Grant—Mr. Chairman, I did not say so. My friend misrepresents me. I said I had conversed with a man that said he saw them fall among the trees in a wood.]

(A voice. Mr. Chairman, command order. Mr. Chapin has not corrected Mr. Grant once.

Chair. He has not needed it. Mr. Chapin did. The correction was in order.)

I did not intend to misrepresent my brother. I thought he said so. I claim that all of the 24th of Matthew referred to the first century. It was all fulfilled during that century. I think I have proved it, not by history, but by the Scriptures. My friend may not think so, but I do. Christ's words were addressed to those living then, not to those living in the nineteenth century.

My friend told you that I said the New Testament was not written. I did not say so. Will my friend prove where any scripture has been written since the first century? Scripture was completed then. Christ came then. He came to those he commanded to watch, not to those that did not live until ages after.

We will call attention to the Scriptures again. Mark 9: 1–7;—"And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that there be some of them that stand here which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power. And after six days Jesus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into an high mountain apart by themselves; and he was transfigured before them; and his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow, so as no fuller on earth can white them. And there appeared unto them Elias with Moses; and they were talking with Jesus. And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here; and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias. For he wist not what to say; for they were sore afraid. And there was a cloud that overshadowed them; and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son; hear him." Did not the kingdom come then, in their lifetime? "When YE see all these things come to pass, then know YE that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Who are the YE? The disciples. He says my interpretations clash. I think his clashing..... shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." What did Christ mean by THIS generation? Did he not mean the generation then living? He meant those who should "not taste of death till they see the kingdom of God come with power." We do not need history to explain the Scriptures. Suppose somebody should write a letter to me; would I say I cannot understand it unless I read history? No; I could understand a letter without reading history. We find that the prophecy in Matt. 24 referred to the destruction of Jerusalem. It must be that generation. We read of twenty-eight generations. Which one is meant? the one living at the time, or some other? How could the Jews be led captive into all nations unless all nations were there? We want to ask, Where was the scene laid in the book of Revelation? The seven churches in Asia were addressed. Why, if they were all scattered and gone? Prophecy must refer to that time. But my friend thinks it refers to the nineteenth century. So far we differ. It seems we cannot think alike.

My friend has referred to Napoleon, and thinks prophecy in the book of Revelation refers to him. He has quoted history. We think he misapplies history. I want my friend to notice it. I believe Jesus. I have no confidence in history. My friend says, if and if it is so and so, it is probable he is, or may be right, if and if. There are too many if's in his theory. We say, let the word of God be true, if it proves every man a liar. (Time expired.)

For the World's Crisis.

THE EFFICACY AND BEAUTY OF OUR FAITH.

When we think of the shortness of time how dreary and alarming is the thought; but no sooner do we look upon God's word as truth with an eye of faith, than the cloud of error vanisheth, and light breaks in upon us, more brilliant and more beautiful than the sun at mid-day. How unspeakably glorious is the thought that God is our friend and benefactor, and that he has promised his obedient children a happy immortality beyond the grave, whereunto we are fast hastening. How consoling is the reflection that we are not always to dwell amid the trials and vicissitudes of this benighted world; but are bound to a higher and more glorious existence beyond the confines of the grave, where the flowing tear shall be wiped from every eye by the soft hand of Jehovah, and unbounded joy will pervade every soul.

These glorious truths are unfolded in our precious faith; surely it views God as infinite in his attributes and perfection—as designing in the infinitude of his goodness the ultimate good of all his submissive children, and as having wisdom and power sufficient for the accomplishments of all his designs. And his designs are as efficacious, beautiful and cheering as the dew of Hermon, and the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion. Lo, how delightful the contemplation! With what exquisite rapture does the bosom swell when we reflect upon the truth, that sin and misery must have an end.

What but a living faith in the blessed assurance of our holy religion, can give us real enjoyment in the sad changes and disappointments of life, and satisfy the ardent longings of the soul? Genuine faith holds forth to our view heart-cheering prospects, which harmonize with the benevolent and noble sensibilities and feelings of our natures. The faith we profess is not only pleasing to our natures, but it is efficacious, and sure to be realized as the accomplishment of the designs of our Creator. It is calculated to afford that consolation which "the world cannot give or take away." It hath the power to sweeten every joy, and to illuminate the soul with the light of heaven. And at the hour of dissolving nature when the brittle thread which binds us to earth is about to be sundered, and we are called to bid adieu to those we hold near and dear, this faith hath the only power to sustain us by giving the blessed assurance that though we die, we shall live again. Though death may separate us from our friends, it will be but a moment, as it were, and then we shall reunite with them in the society of those beautiful spirits of heaven, to part no more forever. Our faith demands of us a steadfast belief in the speedy coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ to judge the world, for he saith in the word of truth, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his works shall be. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Rev. 22: 12, 13.

It is not enough for us to have a faith unfolding a beautiful theory, but our works should harmonize with it. We should exercise and cherish that faith which works by love and casts a benign and heavenly influence around us wherever we go. We should

"Let our lips and lives express
The holy doctrine we profess."

We should let our "light shine before men, that they seeing our good works, may glorify our Father which is in heaven." It is not enough for us to lead as good lives as those of a different faith, but we should surpass them in doing good, as much as our faith is higher, nobler, and better. By so doing we should show them clearly that our faith is indeed divine. In this wise we might look for such a revival of devotional piety as the world never witnessed. Then of course the car of error and fanaticism would be stayed in its wild career, and thousands be led from the many labyrinths of error and the galling bonds of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

What a field of thought our faith presents to the world. The mountain air is not more reviving. The dewdrops that nourish vegetation are not more free. It reaches alike to rich and poor, bond and free, learned and unlearned. All can pledge it. We have but to open our hearts, and it will gush in like a cleansing flood, leaving every grief and sorrow behind.

Such is our faith, and such is in reach of all. We have but to stretch forth our hand for the treasure, to open our hearts, and it is ours. Dear reader, may it be yours, and may it exert its influence upon your soul, making you a perfect child of God.

ADMONITION.—Be bold for truth, though all the world despise. Be strong for right, though all the world oppose. Be free in love, though all men are thy foes, and God will bless the sacrifice. J. ELKINS.

"ALL LIVE UNTO GOD."—No. 4.

The Result, and The Redemption.

The Just One, Christ, being now put to death in or by the flesh, that he had "taken on," through or by the sin of the unjust one —Adam,—a representative of mankind, and a figure of Him who was to come,—he had perfected and established a valid claim on or against those for whom or on whose account he had paid the price or penalty of transgression stipulated in the law, viz: a forfeiture of the soul life; and all those "dead and living" upon whom the sentence of condemnation rested, and had and should be executed, legitimately belonged to him, and subsequent to execution, if they could only be made to live again, his satisfaction of the penal demand of the law could be made available to his praise and glory, without any infraction of his Father's law; for that only put to death and could not go beyond execution of sentence, for "he that is dead (through, by, or to sin) is freed from sin." Rom. 6: 7. There was wanting only, a legal power to "rise and live again," and here we find the accruing benefits of Christ's obedience; "Who rose again for our justification;" for the same attribute of the Deity (justice) that put the sinful flesh to death, condemned on sin's account, steps now boldly in, and when that flesh is freed from further claim of law, by satisfaction full of life in forfeit paid, it brings that flesh to life again for righteous acts performed, in filling full the holy law, that it might live to God, and living thus the spirit life it dies to sin no more; the vanquished power of death's domain is subject to his word, and all who live a life by faith, while dwelling in the flesh, and following Christ in truth and love, are by his Spirit led, like him shall live the eternal life, by rising from the dead; but those who live a life to sin, will find the grave their home, and earth and worms, and death and hell their everlasting bed. Now then, Christ lives. "And ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's," and because none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself, "for whether we live therefore or die, we are the Lord's," being bought with a price, and he being the Savior of all men—from the effects of the Adamic transgression, by bringing them all to life again—especially of them that believe, (because that to them is given eternal life); consequently, "all live unto God" in, by, or through Christ Jesus our Lord, by whom came the resurrection from the dead; "for since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection from the dead," and "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

But like causes produce like effects, other things being equal. Sin put Adam to death, as the effect of his personal transgression; but if Christ's obedience restore us to the grace of God, as Adam was before he sinned, "let us therefore fear lest a promise being left us, any of us should come short of it" by sinning as he did, and thus bring condemnation upon ourselves; for I apprehend that if God giveth to every seed its own body, if we continue in sin we shall stand at his judgment-seat with carnal natures, not having our personal sins washed away through faith by the blood of Jesus; and because they are found upon us, therefore as Adam's personal acts put him to death so will our sins put us to death; and because "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin," in that "Christ died he died unto sin once, in that he liveth, he liveth unto God, death hath no more dominion over him," there cannot be another resurrection provided for the wilfully impenitent, who would not come to Christ "that they might have everlasting life," and "they die" the second death, as the penalty for rejecting the proffered boon of "the remission of sins" that they might live, and that second death is eternal because "the redemption of the soul is precious, and it ceaseth forever."

God "knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished," to whom is reserved the mist of darkness forever. Oh, "why will ye die?" Turn, sinner, turn, turn unto God, that you may live, and defer not, but "while it is called to-day, if you will hear his voice, harden not your heart." Listen to the voice of mercy. Mercy pleads, love woos, compassion calls, justice is crying, Spare not; the shed blood of a crucified Redeemer who died for thee, is interceding in thy behalf; the angels of God are waiting to be made ministering spirits to you; the Spirit and the bride are saying to you, come; earth, heaven and hades are full of inducements for you to come and take of the water of life freely! Come, oh, sinner, come to Christ. Why will you die? Why this fixed purpose in spite of all that God has done that you might live? Still you will die, die in the midst of plenty, famish where there is an abundance, with fountains, rivers, seas, oceans of living water above, beneath, and about you, starving to death like the poor prodigal son, or even worse, will not eat of the bread of life and drink of the Spirit that you may live forever. THE SEVENTH DAY SABBATH—THE LAW, THE OLD "DEAD SCHOOLMASTER"! THE LIVING JESUS.

NUMBER FOUR.

THE TWO COVENANTS.

"He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second."

In confirmation of what has been already argued in relation to the old "law" being "done away," and with it the seventh-day Sabbath, I will present the following in regard to the "old" and "new" "covenant," which embrace the plan of salvation of a lost world. But in doing so I shall confine myself mostly to the epistle to the Hebrews, where we have presented to us the most perfect analysis of the two systems of the divine argument by which man may escape death and obtain eternal life. While treating upon the subject of the old and new covenants, the apostle says,—"For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." (7: 12.) But as he labored to convince the Hebrews, or Jews, that their system of worship, or their "ordinances of divine service" (9: 1) were only "imposed on them until the time of reformation" (9: 10); and that now there had been "verily a disannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof" (7: 18); and that they were now under "a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God" (4: 14), "of whom—as he said—"we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing" (5: 11.) And it is the same with me now, I "have many things to say" on this glorious subject, but they are "hard to be uttered, seeing" there are so many who "are dull of hearing." Yea, there are many now, as there were then, who love the teachings of the old dead "schoolmaster" far better than that of the LIVING JESUS!

I will now spend a few moments in turning to the Old Testament, in order to prove that the old "covenant" referred to was that which was written on "two tables of stone," and that only. And if this is found to be really true, it will furnish an argument which will overthrow all that can be said in favor of Judaism or the seventh-day Sabbath.

THE TWO TABLES OF STONE.

What did they contain? Let the following answer:—

"And the Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; only ye heard a voice. And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone."—Deut. 4: 12, 13."

Where were these tables of stone kept? "And he wrote on the tables, according to the first writing, the ten commandments, which the Lord spake unto you in the mount out of the midst of the fire, in the day of the assembly: and the Lord gave them unto me. And I turned myself, and came down from the mount, and put the tables in the ark which I had made, and there they be, as the Lord commanded me."—Deut. 10: 4, 5.

This shows that the tables were put into an "ark" made expressly for that purpose. Where was the ark then put?

"And thou shalt hang up the veil under the taches, that thou mayest bring in thither within the veil the ark of the testimony: and the veil shall divide unto you between the holy place and the most holy. And thou shalt put the mercy-seat upon the ark of the testimony in the most holy place."—Ex. 26: 33, 34. "And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto his place, to the oracle of the house, into the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims. For the cherubims spread forth their wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark and the staves thereof above. There was nothing in the ark save the two tables which Moses put therein at Horeb, when the Lord made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of Egypt."—2 Chron. 5: 7, 8, 10.

With this agrees the testimony of the apostle Paul:—

"Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made, the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread; which is called the sanctuary. And after the second veil the tabernacle, which is called the holiest of all; which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; and over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly." —Heb. 9: 1–5.

Now let it ever be remembered, that under the "first covenant," God's dwelling place for his people—or his "mercy-seat"—was "between the cherubims"; as the following passage will more fully show:—

"And the cherubims shall stretch forth their wings on high, covering the mercy-seat with their wings, and their faces shall look one to another; toward the mercy-seat shall the faces of the cherubims be. And thou shalt put the mercy-seat above upon the ark; and in the ark thou shalt put the testimony that I shall give thee. And there I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy-seat, from between the two cherubims which are upon the ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel."—Ex. 25: 20–22.

And strange as it may appear to us, none but the high priest alone was ever permitted to approach the "mercy-seat," and that only once a year:—

"Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people."—Heb. 9: 6, 7. Hence we see that God's ancient people had no privilege of approaching the "mercy-seat" for themselves.

But let us here pause a moment, and inquire, Where are now the "two tables of stone"? And echo must answer, WHERE! For that once holy place, where those tables were kept, is now destroyed; and the veil which kept all but the high priest from the mercy-seat, has been "rent in twain from the top to the bottom"; and the ark and the two tables of stone have also been destroyed. The priesthood, which made atonement for the people at that altar, has been changed; and as the apostle says, there has been a change also of the law, or of the covenant. If therefore the tables of stone which contained the law, or the covenant, for keeping the seventh-day Sabbath,—the most holy place where the tables and covenant were kept, the mercy-seat above them,—and God's ancient dwelling-place "between the cherubims" all destroyed; and a new and living way, which the living Jesus "hath consecrated (or new made—margin) for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh" (10: 20); I say, if all this change has taken place, WHERE IS THERE NOW ANY LAW OR COVENANT TO BE FOUND FOR KEEPING THE SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH? Let the man who is able point it out if he can!

But, says the objector, "I do not believe the new covenant is now in force; neither do I believe it can be until God writes his laws upon the heart, and all shall know him from the least to the greatest; and that, of course, cannot be until Christ comes the second time; and hence the law, or covenant, which contains the law for the Sabbath, will hold good until the end of the world, or until Christ comes. But if it can be shown that the new covenant is now in force, then I will give up that you are right." Very well. Now in regard to this objection and admission, we will test the whole matter by the word of truth.

The particular prophecy in relation to this new covenant is found in Jer. 31: 31–34. But as the apostle quotes this in Heb. 8: 10–13, I trust all will be candid enough to take the same view of it as is given in the New Testament; and hence we proceed:—

"For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more. In that he saith, a new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away."

The objection to my view, as has just been raised, consists in this:—When this new covenant is in force, the Lord is to put his laws into their minds, and write them in their hearts, and "all shall know the Lord, from the least to the greatest." Now the first question to be settled is this,—To whom, or to what class of persons does this "all" refer? Does it refer to all mankind living at that time? Or does it refer to all of that particular class who believe in or observe this covenant? I will now show that it must refer to a particular class, and not to every body, as will be seen by the passage just quoted that the covenant is made "with the house of Israel." Now let it be remembered, that the Lord has nowhere even intimated that he will ever make a covenant with the Gentiles, as such, and then bring in the "house of Jacob" under such a covenant as that. But, as we see by the passage under consideration, he has promised to make a covenant "with the house of Israel"; and all candid minds will see that the Gentiles will be brought in under this. This great truth is clearly presented in the eleventh of Romans. The apostle inquires;—"What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded," (or hardened—margin), and then adds,—"through their fall salvation is come to the Gentiles." (Rom. 11: 7, 11.) Hence we see that Israel is not grafted in among the Gentiles, but the Gentiles are grafted in among them, the natural branches. Therefore Israel proper are the natural branches of "their own olive tree," and the Gentiles are grafted in among them. Hence the blindness—or hardness—is happened to Israel, "until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved." The apostle then immediately adds,—"For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins." (Rom. 11: 25–27.) Now if we can find when God shall take away their sins, then we find when his new covenant shall be with them. We have now reached a point where I will propose to my objector above alluded to the following question:—

WHEN WILL THE LORD TAKE AWAY, OR FORGIVE MEN THEIR SINS?

Will it be in this world, while Christ is the "mediator between God and men"? Or will it not be until after Christ comes the second time, to "judge the quick and the dead"? O, says the objector, in this world certainly. Very well. This shows us that if men's sins are forgiven them in this world, (Matt. 12: 31, 32), then the new covenant is for this world; for we are now considering the passage which says,—"This is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins." But again, the Greek word here rendered "take away," is aphaireo; and it is found elsewhere in the New Testament but once, when it is applied to sins; and this will be found in Heb. 10: 4:—"For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away (aphairo) sins." So of the passage in Romans;—"This is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away (aphaireo) their sins." By this, then, we learn that it was impossible for the blood of bulls and of goats to take away sins under the first covenant, and therefore those who lived under the first covenant must have their sins forgiven by virtue of the "mediator of the New Testament"—or covenant—as we learn by the following passage:—

"And for this cause he is the mediator of the New Testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance."—Heb. 9: 15.

But a few words here in relation to this word which is translated testament in this last quotation. In the Greek, this word is diatheekee; and it is found in the New Testament thirty-three times. It is rendered covenant twenty, and testament thirteen times. Its meaning according to Greenfield's Greek Lexicon, is "any disposition, arrangement, institution, or dispensation," etc. Thus we are to understand this word diatheekee in the sense of covenant; and to mean the Lord's institution, or arrangement, to save men, whether it was under the old or the new dispensation. The first diatheekee, or covenant, written upon "tables of stone," is "disannulled" (Heb. 7: 18); but the diatheekee or covenant written "in fleshly tables of the heart," is now for the benefit and salvation of men.

We have already seen that sins could not be taken away under the first covenant. Let us now examine and see if sins can be taken away, or forgiven, under the "new covenant." The apostle explains this by saying:—

"The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing: which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation. But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building. Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?"—Heb. 9: 8–14.

But the apostle continues and says:—"For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect. For then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshipers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. Wherefore, when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me: in burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God. Above, when he said, Sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein; which are offered by the law; then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all."—Heb. 10: 1–10.

And again he says:—"Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before, this is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord. I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them: and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin. Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he has consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water."—Heb. 10: 15–22.

By these three portions of Scripture we are shown how and when sins are taken away. In the first it is said, "The Holy Ghost this signifying"; that "gifts and sacrifices" under the first covenant "could not make" any one "perfect, pertaining to the conscience." But under the new covenant, Christ being come an high priest of good things to come by his own blood through the eternal Spirit could purge the conscience; so we can serve the living God. Hence we see that our sins can be taken away by the blood of Christ, and not merely carried into the wilderness on the head of a "live goat," as was the case under the first covenant.

In the second it is said, The law, being a shadow of the good things to come, can never with those sacrifices make the comers thereunto perfect. For if this could have been done, the worshipers once purged would "have had no more conscience of sins. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins EVERY YEAR." Because it was not possible for the blood of bulls and of goats to take away sins. But when Jesus Christ came, he said, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." And so Jesus, our high priest, took away the first covenant, that he might establish the second covenant. And by this will, or covenant, we are sanctified. Praise God through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

In the third it is said, The Holy Ghost also is a witness to us, as it had been said before, This is the covenant that the Lord promised unto our fathers; and under it, brethren, we have boldness to enter into the

For the World's Crisis.

THE COMING ONE.

O! not as once, dear Savior,
Will now thy coming be;
No more the cross and manger
Are destined, Lord, for thee;
No more the poor despised one,
Whom impious Jews deride,
And by a mock tribunal,
Doomed to be crucified.

But on the clouds descending,
A King and Conqueror crowned,
With shining hosts of angels
Attending thee around;—
Behold! thou'lt make thy advent
Upon the earth once more,
Whilst up with joy to meet thee
Thy people gladly soar.

Oh! hasten, dear Redeemer,
Thy people waiting stand,
And watch with eager longing
To hear thy blest command,
That speedily will greet them
And bid them swiftly rise,
To meet their Lord approaching
In triumph from the skies.

REPORT OF THE DISCUSSION

Held at Stanbridge, C. E., Feb. 10th to Feb. 13th, 1863, between ELDER MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, and REV. DENNIS CHAPIN, Universalist Missionary of the District of Bedford, C. E.

FRIDAY MORNING.—ELDER GRANT'S THIRD SPEECH.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—I confess I am surprised at the positions of my friend. He asks, "Is Jesus right? or is my friend right?" We reply, Jesus is always right. My friend intimates that I contradict Jesus. I have not meant to do so. Who is it that contradicts Jesus? He says, "The STARS SHALL FALL from heaven," and tells us when they shall fall. Now they have fallen, or they will fall. We say they have fallen, and are able to prove it. My friend says, if we understand him, they have not and will not fall. He ridicules the idea. Now who is right? my friend, or Jesus? Who contradicts Jesus? WHO? Again he says, "All of Daniel's prophecy was fulfilled in the country where it was proclaimed," or "where the visionist lived," and it was seen, or revealed. Then all of Daniel's prophecy was fulfilled in Babylon! But was it? Can it be proved? We think not. Let our friend try, and so substantiate his novel assumption. But he says we want history to make the Bible inspired. Oh no, the Bible is inspired; we believe it to be the product of inspiration; "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." Hence we read its prophecies, and look for the events to fulfill it, and when we find them in history, or observe them ourselves, we say, "THIS IS THAT spoken by the prophet." Thus Christ applied prophecy, and so may we, and in this way prophecy becomes a "light shining in a dark place," and Peter says we "do well to take heed" unto it. This we intend to do, for we do not admit that it was "ALL fulfilled in the first century."

He says, "Then the things that were written (the Old Testament) were fulfilled, not the things that were not written;"—as much as to say those not written (the New Testament) were not to be fulfilled. This is in keeping with the declaration that "all prophecy ended or was fulfilled in the first century."

We will now resume our argument on the signs that were to precede the second coming of Christ, and show that event near. We will read from the 24th of Matt., 29th verse; "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken"; or, as Luke has it (Luke 21: 25, 26), "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Matt. 24: 30, 31;—"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end to the other." These signs have been fulfilled. We now have unparalleled "distress of nations, with perplexity," and every feature of our Lord's prophecy fulfilled, in the connected chain of events here predicted to precede the coming of the Son of man to gather his elect.

With our view of this subject, all is clear; there is no obscurity. Luke 21: 28–31, we read;—"And WHEN these things BEGIN to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. And he spake to them a parable; Behold the fig tree, and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of yourselves that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." When these foretold events take place or transpire, we are to know thereby that "the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." But these signs were not seen in the first century. I challenge him to show that one of these signs was seen in the first century. Will he undertake it? We shall see. Let him do it if he can.

We remark that what has come to pass was expected by wise and good men before the prophecy was fulfilled. Thus Thomas Burnet, in his Theory of the Earth, published in London in 1697, says after quoting Matt. 24: 29, and speaking of the darkening of the sun and moon: "The last sign we shall take notice of is that of the falling stars—'And the stars shall fall from heaven,' says our Savior." Burnet then shows that the fixed stars and planets cannot fall, and that the only ones that ever will fall will be the meteoric or shooting stars, and adds, "No doubt there will be all sorts of fiery meteors at that time; and amongst others those called falling stars, which, though they are not considerable, singly, yet, if they were multiplied in great numbers, falling as the prophet says 'as leaves from the vine, or figs from the fig tree,' they would make an astonishing sight. We need not look upon these things as hyperbolical and poetic strains, but as barefaced propheccies, and things that will LITERALLY come to pass. We are not to recede from the literal sense without necessity, or where the nature of the subject will admit of a literal interpretation."

We feel confident that this predicted sign has come to pass; that we belong to the generation who have seen the signs of Matt. 24: 29, and therefore this generation will see the Son of man come, and he will come soon, probably during the nineteenth century. (Time expired.)

FRIDAY MORNING.

Mr. Chapin's Third Speech.

Mr. Moderator, Ladies and Gentlemen:—You perceive my friend SAYS it will come. Now I say it can't come now, or in the future, for the very good reason that I have proved that it did come in the first century. What do his assertions prove, then? Is his loud talk proof? Does he suppose there is any argument in loud talk? He quotes history; I quote no history; I quote the Scriptures. I am not obliged to go to history to prove my position. You well know that I have referred to the Bible, and not to history. You see the difference, my friends. All this talk about shooting stars will not prove his position. He may pile up his history about meteoric showers, but this will prove nothing. Who has not seen the stars fall? This is nothing new or strange. Meteoric stones have fallen. What of it? I suppose they have fallen. But what has this to do with the coming of Christ in the nineteenth century? You see he plays with the evidence I brought to show that prophecy was fulfilled where the prophet lived. I did not say so, but in the country. We did not say that prophecy was confined to the place where the prophet lived, not to the house, but to the country. Why did he play upon that remark? Was it not to use time?

Again he says, "If I will prove that all nations were gathered around Jerusalem to battle"—[Eld. Grant: Mr. Chairman, I have said no such thing to-day; my friend is wrong.] I will refer to the prophet. Zech. 14: 1–3; "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle." Were not all nations there? They must be there. All nations must stand around about Jerusalem. Is the prophet right? or is my friend right?

He has told us about falling stars, as he calls them. We do not call them so. Who believes the fixed stars will fall to the earth? It is impossible. It is absurd!! We know that stones have fallen; did they not gather the stones at the shower of stars? It is idle to talk about the stars falling to the earth. But my friend has told you that he saw the stars fall down into the woods.

[Eld. Grant—Mr. Chairman, I did not say so. My friend misrepresents me. I said I had conversed with a man that said he saw them fall among the trees in a wood.]

(A voice. Mr. Chairman, command order. Mr. Chapin has not corrected Mr. Grant once.

Chair. He has not needed it. Mr. Chapin did. The correction was in order.)

I did not intend to misrepresent my brother. I thought he said so. I claim that all of the 24th of Matthew referred to the first century. It was all fulfilled during that century. I think I have proved it, not by history, but by the Scriptures. My friend may not think so, but I do. Christ's words were addressed to those living then, not to those living in the nineteenth century.

My friend told you that I said the New Testament was not written. I did not say so. Will my friend prove where any scripture has been written since the first century? Scripture was completed then. Christ came then. He came to those he commanded to watch, not to those that did not live until ages after.

We will call attention to the Scriptures again. Mark 9: 1–7;—"And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that there be some of them that stand here which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power. And after six days Jesus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into an high mountain apart by themselves; and he was transfigured before them; and his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow, so as no fuller on earth can white them. And there appeared unto them Elias with Moses; and they were talking with Jesus. And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias. For he wist not what to say; for they were sore afraid. And there was a cloud that overshadowed them; and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son; hear him." Did not the kingdom come then, in their lifetime? "When YE see all these things come to pass, then know YE that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Who are the YE? The disciples. He says my interpretations clash. I think his clash. "This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." What did Christ mean by THIS generation? Did he not mean the generation then living? He meant those who should "not taste of death till they see the kingdom of God come with power." We do not need history to explain the Scriptures. Suppose somebody should write a letter to me; would I say I cannot understand it unless I read history? No; I could understand a letter without reading history. We find that the prophecy in Matt. 24 referred to the destruction of Jerusalem. It must be that generation. We read of twenty-eight generations. Which one is meant? the one living at the time, or some other? How could the Jews be led captive into all nations unless all nations were there? We want to ask, Where was the scene laid in the book of Revelation? The seven churches in Asia were addressed. Why, if they were all scattered and gone? Prophecy must refer to that time. But my friend thinks it refers to the nineteenth century. So far we differ. It seems we cannot think alike.

My friend has referred to Napoleon, and thinks prophecy in the book of Revelation refers to him. He has quoted history. We think he misapplies history. I want my friend to notice it. I believe Jesus. I have no confidence in history. My friend says, if and if it is so and so, it is probable he is, or may be right, if and if. There are too many if's in his theory. We say, let the word of God be true, if it proves every man a liar. (Time expired.)

For the World's Crisis.

THE EFFICACY AND BEAUTY OF OUR FAITH.

When we think of the shortness of time how dreary and alarming is the thought; but no sooner do we look upon God's word as truth with an eye of faith, than the cloud of error vanisheth, and light breaks in upon us, more brilliant and more beautiful than the sun at mid-day. How unspeakably glorious is the thought that God is our friend and benefactor, and that he has promised his obedient children a happy immortality beyond the grave, whereunto we are fast hastening. How consoling is the reflection that we are not always to dwell amid the trials and vicissitudes of this benighted world; but are bound to a higher and more glorious existence beyond the confines of the grave, where the flowing tear shall be wiped from every eye by the soft hand of Jehovah, and unbounded joy will pervade every soul.

These glorious truths are unfolded in our precious faith; surely it views God as infinite in his attributes and perfection—as designing in the infinitude of his goodness the ultimate good of all his submissive children, and as having wisdom and power sufficient for the accomplishments of all his designs. And his designs are as efficacious, beautiful and cheering as the dew of Hermon, and the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion. Lo, how delightful the contemplation! With what exquisite rapture does the bosom swell when we reflect upon the truth, that sin and misery must have an end.

What but a living faith in the blessed assurance of our holy religion, can give us real enjoyment in the sad changes and disappointments of life, and satisfy the ardent longings of the soul? Genuine faith holds forth to our view heart-cheering prospects, which harmonize with the benevolent and noble sensibilities and feelings of our natures. The faith we profess is not only pleasing to our natures, but it is efficacious, and sure to be realized as the accomplishment of the designs of our Creator. It is calculated to afford that consolation which "the world cannot give or take away." It hath the power to sweeten every joy, and to illuminate the soul with the light of heaven. And at the hour of dissolving nature when the brittle thread which binds us to earth is about to be sundered, and we are called to bid adieu to those we hold near and dear, this faith hath the only power to sustain us by giving the blessed assurance that though we die, we shall live again. Though death may separate us from our friends, it will be but a moment, as it were, and then we shall reunite with them in the society of those beautiful spirits of heaven, to part no more forever. Our faith demands of us a steadfast belief in the speedy coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ to judge the world, for he saith in the word of truth, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his works shall be. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Rev. 22: 12, 13.

It is not enough for us to have a faith unfolding a beautiful theory, but our works should harmonize with it. We should exercise and cherish that faith which works by love and casts a benign and heavenly influence around us wherever we go. We should

The holy doctrine we profess."

We should let our "light shine before men, that they seeing our good works, may glorify our Father which is in heaven." It is not enough for us to lead as good lives as those of a different faith, but we should surpass them in doing good, as much as our faith is higher, nobler, and better. By so doing we should show them clearly that our faith is indeed divine. In this wise we might look for such a revival of devotional piety as the world never witnessed. Then of course the car of error and fanaticism would be stayed in its wild career, and thousands be led from the many labyrinths of error, and the galling bonds of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

What a field of thought our faith presents to the world. The mountain air is not more reviving. The dewdrops that nourish vegetation are not more free. It reaches alike to rich and poor, bond and free, learned and unlearned. All can partake it. We have but to open our hearts, and it will gush in like a cleansing flood, leaving every grief and sorrow behind.

Such is our faith, and such is in reach of all. We have but to stretch forth our hand for the treasure, to open our hearts, and it is ours. Dear reader, may it be yours, and may it exert its influence upon your soul, making you a perfect child of God.

ADMONITION.—Be bold for truth, though all the world despise. Be strong for right, though all the world oppose. Be free in love, though all men are thy foes, and God will bless the sacrifice. J. ELKINS.

"ALL LIVE UNTO GOD."—No. 4.

The Result, and The Redemption.

The Just One, Christ, being now put to death in or by the flesh, that he had "taken on," through or by the sin of the unjust one—Adam,—a representative of mankind, and a figure of Him who was to come,—he had perfected and established a valid claim on or against those for whom or on whose account he had paid the price or penalty of transgression stipulated in the law, viz: a forfeiture of the soul life; and all those "dead and living" upon whom the sentence of condemnation rested, and had and should be executed, legitimately belonged to him, and subsequent to execution, if they could only be made to live again, his satisfaction of the penal demand of the law could be made available to his praise and glory, without any infraction of his Father's law; for that only put to death and could not go beyond execution of sentence, for "he that is dead (through, by, or to sin) is freed from sin." Rom. 6: 7. There was wanting only, a legal power to "rise and live again," and here we find the accruing benefits of Christ's obedience; "Who rose again for our justification;" for the same attribute of the Deity (justice) that put the sinful flesh to death, condemned on sin's account, steps now boldly in, and when that flesh is freed from further claim of law, by satisfaction full of life in forfeit paid, it brings that flesh to life again for righteous acts performed, in filling full the holy law, that it might live to God, and living thus the spirit life it dies to sin no more, the vanquished power of death's domain is subject to his word, and all who live a life by faith, while dwelling in the flesh, and following Christ in truth and love, are by his Spirit led, like him shall live the eternal life, by rising from the dead; but those who live a life to sin, will find the grave their home, and earth and worms, and death and hell their everlasting bed. Now then, Christ lives. "And ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's," and because none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself, "for whether we live therefore or die, we are the Lord's," being bought with a price, and he being the Savior of all men—from the effects of the Adamic transgression, by bringing them all to life again—especially of them that believe, (because that to them is given eternal life); consequently, "all live unto God" in, by, or through Christ Jesus our Lord, by whom came the resurrection from the dead, "for since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection from the dead," and "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

But like causes produce like effects, other things being equal. Sin put Adam to death, as the effect of his personal transgression; but if Christ's obedience restore us to the grace of God, as Adam was before he sinned, "let us therefore fear lest a promise being left us, any of us should come short of it" by sinning as he did, and thus bring condemnation upon ourselves; for I apprehend that if God giveth to every seed its own body, if we continue in sin we shall stand at his judgment-seat with carnal natures, not having our personal sins washed away through faith by the blood of Jesus; and because they are found upon us, therefore as Adam's personal acts put him to death so will our sins put us to death; and because "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin," in that "Christ died he died unto sin once, in that he liveth, he liveth unto God, death hath no more dominion over him," there cannot be another resurrection provided for the wilfully impenitent, who would not come to Christ "that they might have everlasting life," and "they die" the second death, as the penalty for rejecting the proffered boon of "the remission of sins" that they might live, and that second death is eternal because "the redemption of the soul is precious, and it ceaseth forever."

God "knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished," to whom is reserved the mist of darkness forever. Oh, "why will ye die?" Turn, sinner, turn, turn unto God, that you may live, and defer not, but "while it is called to-day, if you will hear his voice, harden not your heart." Listen to the voice of mercy. Mercy pleads, love woos, compassion calls, Justice is crying, Spare not; the shed blood of a crucified Redeemer who died for thee, is interceding in thy behalf; the angels of God are waiting to be made ministering spirits to you; the Spirit and the bride are saying to you, come; earth, heavens and lands are full of inducements for you to come and take of the water of life freely! Come, oh, sinner, come to Christ. Why will you die? Why this fixed purpose in spite of all that God has done that you might live? Still you will die, die in the midst of plenty, famish where there is an abundance, with fountains, rivers, seas, oceans of living water above, beneath, and about you, starving to death like the poor prodigal son, or even worse, will not eat of the bread of life and drink of the Spirit that you may live forever. THE SEVENTH DAY SABBATH—THE LAW, THE OLD "DEAD SCHOOLMASTER"! THE LIVING JESUS.

NUMBER FOUR.

THE TWO COVENANTS.

"He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second."

In confirmation of what has been already argued in relation to the old "law" being "done away," and with it the seventh-day Sabbath, I will present the following in regard to the "old" and "new" "covenant," which embrace the plan of salvation of a lost world. But in doing so I shall confine myself mostly to the epistle to the Hebrews, where we have presented to us the most perfect analysis of the two systems of the divine argument by which man may escape death and obtain eternal life. While treating upon the subject of the old and new covenants, the apostle says,—"For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." (7: 12.) But as he labored to convince the Hebrews, or Jews, that their system of worship, or their "ordinances of divine service" (9: 1) were only "imposed on them until the time of reformation" (9: 10); and that now there had been "verily a disannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof" (7: 18); and that they were now under "a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God" (4: 14), "of whom—as he said—"we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing" (5: 11.) And it is the same with me now, I "have many things to say" on this glorious subject, but they are "hard to be uttered, seeing" there are so many who "are dull of hearing." Yea, there are many now, as there were then, who love the teachings of the old dead "schoolmaster" far better than that of the LIVING JESUS!

I will now spend a few moments in turning to the Old Testament, in order to prove that the old "covenant" referred to was that which was written on "two tables of stone," and that only. And if this is found to be really true, it will furnish an argument which will overthrow all that can be said in favor of Judaism or the seventh-day Sabbath.

THE TWO TABLES OF STONE.

What did they contain? Let the following answer:—

"And the Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; only ye heard a voice. And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone."—Deut. 4: 12, 13.

Where were these tables of stone kept? "And he wrote on the tables, according to the first writing, the ten commandments, which the Lord spake unto you in the mount out of the midst of the fire, in the day of the assembly: and the Lord gave them unto me. And I turned myself, and came down from the mount, and put the tables in the ark which I had made, and there they be, as the Lord commanded me."—Deut. 10: 4, 5.

This shows that the tables were put into an "ark" made expressly for that purpose. Where was the ark then put?

"And thou shalt hang up the veil under the taches, that thou mayest bring in thither within the veil the ark of the testimony: and the veil shall divide unto you between the holy place and the most holy. And thou shalt put the mercy-seat upon the ark of the testimony in the most holy place."—Ex. 26: 33, 34. "And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto his place, to the oracle of the house, into the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims. For the cherubims spread forth their wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark and the staves thereof above. There was nothing in the ark save the two tables which Moses put therein at Horeb, when the Lord made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of Egypt."—2 Chron. 5: 7, 8, 10.

With this agrees the testimony of the apostle Paul:—

"Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made, the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread; which is called the sanctuary. And after the second veil the tabernacle, which is called the holiest of all; which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; and over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly."—Heb. 9: 1–5.

Now let it ever be remembered, that under the "first covenant," God's dwelling place for his people—or his "mercy-seat"—was "between the cherubims"; as the following passage will more fully show:—

"And the cherubims shall stretch forth their wings on high, covering the mercy-seat with their wings, and their faces shall look one to another; toward the mercy-seat shall the faces of the cherubims be. And thou shalt put the mercy-seat above upon the ark; and in the ark thou shalt put the testimony that I shall give thee. And there I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy-seat, from between the two cherubims which are upon the ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel."—Ex. 25: 20–22.

And strange as it may appear to us, none but the high priest alone was ever permitted to approach the "mercy-seat," and that only once a year:—

"Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. But into the second went the high priest once alone every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people."—Heb. 9: 6, 7. Hence we see that God's ancient people had no privilege of approaching the "mercy-seat" for themselves.

But let us here pause a moment, and inquire, Where are now the "two tables of stone"? And echo must answer, WHERE! For that once holy place, where those tables were kept, is now destroyed; and the veil which kept all but the high priest from the mercy-seat, has been "rent in twain from the top to the bottom"; and the ark and the two tables of stone have also been destroyed. The priesthood, which made atonement for the people at that altar, has been changed; and as the apostle says, there has been a change also of the law, or of the covenant. If therefore the tables of stone which contained the law, or the covenant, for keeping the seventh-day Sabbath,—the most holy place where the tables and covenant were kept, the mercy-seat above them,—and God's ancient dwelling-place "between the cherubims" all destroyed; and a new and living way, which the living Jesus "hath consecrated (or new made—margin) for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh" (10: 20). I say, if all this change has taken place, WHERE IS THERE NOW ANY LAW OR COVENANT TO BE FOUND FOR KEEPING THE SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH? Let the man who is able point it out if he can!

But, says the objector, "I do not believe the new covenant is now in force; neither do I believe it can be until God writes his laws upon the heart, and all shall know him from the least to the greatest; and that, of course, cannot be until Christ comes the second time; and hence the law, or covenant, which contains the law for the Sabbath, will hold good until the end of the world, or until Christ comes. But if it can be shown that the new covenant is now in force, then I will give up that you are right." Very well. Now in regard to this objection and admission, we will test the whole matter by the word of truth.

The particular prophecy in relation to this new covenant is found in Jer. 31: 31–34. But as the apostle quotes this in Heb. 8: 10–13, I trust all will be candid enough to take the same view of it as is given in the New Testament, and hence we proceed:—

"For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more. In that he saith, a new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away."

The objection to my view, as has just been raised, consists in this:—When this new covenant is in force, the Lord is to put his laws into their minds, and write them in their hearts, and "all shall know the Lord, from the least to the greatest." Now the first question to be settled is this,—To whom, or to what class of persons does this "all" refer? Does it refer to all mankind living at that time? Or does it refer to all of that particular class who believe in or observe this covenant? I will now show that it must refer to a particular class, and not to every body, as will be seen by the passage just quoted that the covenant is made "with the house of Israel." Now let it be remembered, that the Lord has nowhere even intimated that he will ever make a covenant with the Gentiles, as such, and then bring in the "house of Jacob" under such a covenant as that. But, as we see by the passage under consideration, he has promised to make a covenant "with the house of Israel"; and all candid minds will see that the Gentiles will be brought in under this. This great truth is clearly presented in the eleventh of Romans. The apostle inquires;—"What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded," (or hardened—margin), and then adds,—"through their fall salvation is come to the Gentiles." (Rom. 11: 7, 11.) Hence we see that Israel is not grafted in among the Gentiles, but the Gentiles are grafted in among them, the natural branches. Therefore Israel proper are the natural branches of "their own olive tree," and the Gentiles are grafted in among them. Hence the blindness—or hardness—is happened to Israel, "until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved." The apostle then immediately adds,—"For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins." (Rom. 11: 25–27.) Now if we can find when God shall take away their sins, then we find when his new covenant shall be with them. We have now reached a point where I will propose to my objector above alluded to the following question:—

WHEN WILL THE LORD TAKE AWAY, OR FORGIVE MEN THEIR SINS?

Will it be in this world, while Christ is the "mediator between God and men"? Or will it not be until after Christ comes the second time, to "judge the quick and the dead"? O, says the objector, in this world certainly. Very well. This shows us that if men's sins are forgiven them in this world, (Matt. 12: 31, 32), then the new covenant is for this world; for we are now considering the passage which says,—"This is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins." But again, the Greek word here rendered "take away," is aphaireo; and it is found elsewhere in the New Testament but once, when it is applied to sins; and this will be found in Heb. 10: 4;—"For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away (aphairo) sins." So of the passage in Romans;—"This is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away (aphaireo) their sins." By this, then, we learn that it was impossible for the blood of bulls and of goats to take away sins under the first covenant, and therefore those who lived under the first covenant must have their sins forgiven by virtue of the "mediator of the New Testament"—or covenant—as we learn by the following passage:—

"And for this cause he is the mediator of the New Testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance."—Heb. 9: 15.

But a few words here in relation to this word which is translated testament in this last quotation. In the Greek, this word is diatheekee; and it is found in the New Testament thirty-three times. It is rendered covenant twenty, and testament thirteen times. Its meaning according to Greenfield's Greek Lexicon, is "any disposition, arrangement, institution, or dispensation," etc. Thus we are to understand this word diatheekee in the sense of covenant; and to mean the Lord's institution, or arrangement, to save men, whether it was under the old or the new dispensation. The first diatheekee, or covenant, written upon "tables of stone," is "disannulled" (Heb. 7: 18); but the diatheekee or covenant written "in fleshly tables of the heart," is now for the benefit and salvation of men.

We have already seen that sins could not be taken away under the first covenant. Let us now examine and see if sins can be taken away, or forgiven, under the "new covenant." The apostle explains this by saying:—

"The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing: which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation. But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building. Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?"—Heb. 9: 8–14.

But the apostle continues and says:—"For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect. For then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshipers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. Wherefore, when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me: in burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God. Above, when he said, Sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein; which are offered by the law; then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all."—Heb. 10: 1–10.

And again he says:—"Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before, this is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord. I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them: and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin. Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he has consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water."—Heb. 10: 15–22.

By these three portions of Scripture we are shown how and when sins are taken away. In the first it is said, "The Holy Ghost this signifying"; that "gifts and sacrifices" under the first covenant "could not make" any one "perfect, pertaining to the conscience." But under the new covenant, Christ being come an high priest of good things to come by his own blood through the eternal Spirit could purge the conscience; so we can serve the living God. Hence we see that our sins can be taken away by the blood of Christ, and not merely carried into the wilderness on the head of a "live goat," as was the case under the first covenant.

In the second it is said, The law, being a shadow of the good things to come, can never with those sacrifices make the comers thereunto perfect. For if this could have been done, the worshipers once purged would "have had no more conscience of sins. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins EVERY YEAR." Because it was not possible for the blood of bulls and of goats to take away sins. But when Jesus Christ came, he said, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." And so Jesus, our high priest, took away the first covenant, that he might establish the second covenant. And by this will, or covenant, we are sanctified. Praise God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

In the third it is said, The Holy Ghost also is a witness to us, as it had been said before, This is the covenant that the Lord promised unto our fathers; and under it, brethren, we have boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a NEW and living way; which has been "consecrated for us." Then "let us draw near with a true heart," "having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience."

But again we inquire, who are the "all" referred to, who are to know the Lord? Let Isaiah the prophet answer:—

"Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child: for more are the children of the desolate, than the children of the married wife, saith the Lord." "For thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited." "For this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee. For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." "And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children." "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper: and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord; and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord."—Isa. 54: 1, 3, 9, 10, 13, 17.

This says "thy seed" (Israel's seed) shall inherit the Gentiles, and all thy children shall be taught of the Lord. Now what says Mr. Objector? Does the "all" mean all mankind? or does it mean "all thy children"? It must mean all thy children, I think. But I have still more to present to prove that the "new covenant" is now in force. And in doing so I will continue to contrast the condition of the church, or people of God, under the

TWO DIFFERENT COVENANTS.

1. We inquire, Where were the two covenants written? The first was written on "two tables of stone." The second is written "in fleshly tables of the heart." (2 Cor. 3: 3)

2. We inquire, How were these two covenants written? The first "with the finger of God." (Ex. 31: 18.) The second "with the Spirit of the living God." (2 Cor. 3: 3.) A few passages will now be presented to prove that

THE WORK OF THE SPIRIT IS NOW IN THE HEART.

"For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves: which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing, or else excusing, one another." "Now he which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God, who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts." "For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father."—Rom. 2: 14, 15; 2 Cor. 1: 21, 22; 4: 6; Gal. 4: 6.

3. Under the first covenant, did "all" have the privilege of knowing the Lord for themselves? That is, did all have the privilege of approaching God for themselves?

COULD EACH FOR HIMSELF COME TO THE "MERCY-SEAT"? Let the following answer:—

"Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people."—Heb. 9: 6, 7.

The only person who was permitted to approach the "mercy-seat," was the high priest alone once a year. And hence no one knew whether he was accepted of God, only as the high priest performed the service for him. And this was done in the following very odd way, viz:—

"And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he shall bring the live goat: and Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness: and the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited: and he shall let go the goat in the wilderness."—Lev. 16: 20–22.

And thus it appears that all those who lived under the old covenant, never knew whether they were accepted of God only as they learned it from the high priest. And so it was, as the thing strikes one at this late day, that a live goat was their Savior. And so it rather strikes me that those who are determined to hold on to the old law, or the old covenant, have for their teacher—instead of the LIVING JESUS—an "old dead SCHOOLMASTER," and for a Savior, a live goat. O that the Spirit of the living God might write upon the hearts of every seventh-day Sabbath keeper this important truth, that the same system of religious ordinances, or ceremonies, which required a live goat to take away man's sins into the wilderness on his head, was also the same system of service which required the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath. And the entire system was established upon that old covenant which was written upon tables of stone, as will appear to any student of the Bible who will carefully examine the books of Exodus and Leviticus, as compared with the epistle to the Hebrews.

It may be seen at a glance, by noticing the few portions of Scripture which follow, that the whole system was to cease with their generations,—seventh-day Sabbath and all; as they were only given to the children of Israel, "throughout their generations." I will now give a few instances, and my readers can satisfy themselves by examining them.

THE PASSOVER. "And this day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the Lord throughout your generations: ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance forever."—Ex. 12: 14.

BURNT OFFERING. "This shall be a continual burnt offering throughout your generations at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord, where I will meet you, to speak there unto thee. And there I will meet with the children of Israel, and the tabernacle shall be sanctified by my glory. And I will sanctify the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar: I will sanctify also both Aaron and his sons, to minister to me in the priest's office. And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God."—Ex. 29: 42–45.

SEVENTH WEEK SABBATH. "And he shall proclaim on the selfsame day, that it may be a holy convocation unto you: ye shall do no servile work therein: it shall be a statute forever in all your dwellings throughout your generations."—Lev. 23: 21.

DAY OF ATONEMENT. "Ye shall do no manner of work: it shall be a statute forever throughout your generations in all your dwellings. It shall be unto you a Sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls: in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye celebrate your Sabbath."—Lev. 23: 31, 32.

SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore, for it is holy unto you: every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people. Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the Sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work on the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed. And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God."—Ex. 31: 12–18.

ALL ORDERS AND MONIES FOR THE WORLD'S CRISIS, OR FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE, AND ALL MATTERS PERTAINING TO THE BUSINESS OF THE OFFICE, MUST BE ADDRESSED TO THE BUSINESS AGENT,

MILES GRANT, Crisis Box, Boston.

THE BOSTON CONFERENCE.

We have only time to say this week, that it has been a success. The meeting was large and heavenly, and much good has been accomplished in the name of the Lord. Particulars next week.

MEETINGS AT CASTLETON.

Our meetings at Castleton, Vt., were very interesting. Our dear Bro. Mathewson, ever faithful in the Lord, had been preparing the way several evenings, and had persuaded some to reform before we arrived. We found several under conviction, and the people waking up to the importance of being prepared to meet the Lord. We enjoyed many happy greetings from the lovers of Jesus.

During the past two years, Satan succeeded in seducing some away from the path of life, who have again deserted from the arch deceiver, and are once more rejoicing in the service of the King of kings. Several were converted, and a dozen or more requested prayers that they might be true christians. The work is onward, and we shall expect to hear of much additional good resulting from the earnest efforts of Bro. Burnham. The truth is making some noble advances in C. and vicinity, through the faithful labors of Bro. D. T. Taylor. He is about removing from Castleton to Rouse's Point, N. Y., to take care of his aged mother, and to labor as an evangelist. His health is better than when he went to C. We are sorry that he cannot remain longer with them. He has a large place in the hearts of the friends of Jesus.

We met a hearty welcome at the happy home of Bro. C. S. Sherman. While there, death made a most earnest effort to take Bro. Sherman's oldest son; but in answer to much prayer he began to recover before we left. We never saw death deprived of a victim so fully in his grasp as in this case; but the affliction has produced happy results. It was evident to all that the Lord was glorified in many ways; thus Satan is often foiled in his purposes to destroy. Instead of being called to bury his son in the silent tomb, Bro. S. had the pleasure of seeing a lovely daughter buried by baptism in the likeness of death. The scene was an affecting one, and caused many to weep. To the Lord be all the glory.

Our meeting closed with a heavenly communion season. We left many weeping, but longing for the day when Jesus shall come and wipe away all tears.

WRITE PLAINLY.

We would again urge our contributors to write very plainly. Use no pale ink. Let it be as black, blue, or red, as possible. Write very coarsely. If some of our correspondents knew what a disagreeable time our compositors have had in straining their eyes to make out their fine writing, we think they would never attempt again to crowd the greatest amount of matter into the smallest possible space.

Another word: be sure and write all proper names very plainly.

OUR PHOTOGRAPHS.

In compliance with many urgent requests, we are now prepared to furnish our friends with an excellent photograph likeness, suitable for Albums, taken by Mr. J. A. Whipple, 96 Washington St., Boston. Mr. Whipple stands at the head of the photograph business in this city. We will send the likeness, with our autograph, for twenty-five cents, postage three cents.

Direct to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

QUESTION BOOK.—The Christian Publication Society has decided to publish a Question Book for Sunday Schools. It will soon be in the hands of the printer. We think it will be what is needed. The work has been prepared by Bro. H. F. Carpenter, and approved by the Editorial Committee appointed to decide in such matters.

"THE MILLENNIUM; OR AGE TO COME."—The above is the title of a new pamphlet of 24 pp., by Eld. P. B. Morgan, pastor of the Episcopalian Church in Chelsea, Mass. Price 10 cents single, postage paid. Per dozen $5 cts., postpaid. For sale at this office, or by Eld. Morgan, Chelsea, Mass.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE NICOLAITANS.

"BRO. GRANT:—Will you please inform me through the Crisis what was the doctrine of the Nicolaitans?" S. TUCKER.

There is some uncertainty as to what were the peculiar doctrines of the Nicolaitans. They are referred to in Revelation as follows: "But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate. So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate."—Rev. 2: 6, 15. They were a heretical sect, of the second century, supposed to have received their name from Nicolas of Antioch, one of the seven deacons mentioned in Acts 6: 5. Irenæus was the first christian writer who mentions them, and says they held that fornication, and the eating of meats offered to idols was not sinful.

St. Epiphanius says that Nicolas had a beautiful wife, whom he left for the purpose of living in a state of celibacy; but afterwards returned to her, and justified his conduct by certain licentious principles, which became the basis on which was founded the sect of the Nicolaitans.

It is said they allowed a community of wives, and endeavored to mingle christianity and idolatry together, in order to escape the persecution which came from the enemies of the cross.

They held that pleasure and the gratification of the appetites constituted the true end and happiness of man, and that he should not be restricted in his choice of the means to satisfy his desires. Eusebius says they continued but a short time; while others think their doctrines were adopted by the Cainites.

DAVID'S THRONE.

"Will Bro. Grant give an exposition of Luke 1: 32, 33?

1. Is the throne spoken of the literal throne of David, that was overturned, which is to be restored?

2. Is the house of Jacob, referred to, the Jews? Please inform your readers in the Crisis, and oblige,

Yours for the truth, M. L. PRATT.

The passage reads as follows:—"He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

He who has the throne of a kingdom has the regal power of that kingdom; but we do not understand that the succeeding king must necessarily sit upon the same identical seat as his predecessor, in order to be the king of the country. The same is true of Christ, in relation to David's throne and kingdom. Whenever Christ becomes the ruler over the territory of which David was king, then he may be said to sit on "the throne of his father David."

2. We think "the house of Jacob" refers to the Jews. We do not find the term Jacob ever applied to the Gentiles.

MEANING OF LEAVEN.

"Does the word leaven, used in the Bible, always mean the same thing?"

F. BATES, JUN.

The word leaven is never taken to represent any thing good, when used in a symbolical sense. Its literal sense all understand, i. e., for raising bread. But it should be remembered that the process of raising is one of souring by fermentation, or corruption. When the Savior would represent a corrupting, infectious doctrine, introduced into a church, he illustrated the fact by comparing it to leaven. Hence he says, "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees." The disciples did not understand him at first, which caused him to explain himself. After which it is said, "Then understood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees."—Matt. 16: 6.

Just as leaven corrupts and sours the meal in which it is placed, so do false doctrines corrupt and sour those who embrace them. For this reason, leaven is never used figuratively in the Bible to represent any thing good. Its property to spread, or extend its influence, is taken in one case, Matt. 13: 33, to represent the extent of the kingdom, but not its character, as we understand the passage.

DELIVERED TO SATAN.

BRO. GRANT:—You will oblige a searcher after truth very much by answering the following questions, drawn from 1 Cor. 5: 3–5.

1. If man has no immortal spirit that exists independent of the body, (flesh), what does the spirit mean in 1 Cor. 5: 5?

2d. What does the apostle mean by his spirit, in 1 Cor. 5: 4?

3d. How could they (when they are gathered together) deliver such a one unto Satan, since he had already delivered himself up to Satan? Yours in search of truth,

A. C. DOE.

The text reads as follows:—"For I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged already, as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, to deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."

I. The meaning of this passage appears to be rather obscure as rendered in our version. It should be observed that the salvation is not till the "day of the Lord Jesus;" consequently it is not at death; therefore, we see no proof in this passage, when taken as it now stands, that man has an immortal spirit. "In the day of the Lord Jesus," when he comes to raise the dead, then the "flesh" is to come forth from the grave, and enter the kingdom of God. At that time the whole man is saved. If it read, "that the spirit may be saved" at death, the passage might be made to favor the popular view; but as it is, we find no difficulty in harmonizing this passage with all the plain ones in the Bible.

According to the Scriptures, it is very evident that the man is not saved when his physical organism is destroyed, because that is what constitutes him a man. We find no promise of salvation till the second coming of Christ. This passage should not be so changed from its true meaning as to make it contradict all the plain Scriptures on the subject. Other translations throw light on this text, and exhibit its harmony with what is clear and positive.

Wakefield renders it as follows:—"Deliver such an one unto Satan for the punishment of the flesh." This is in keeping with the idea that the Lord chastises his children; or suffers them to be sorely tried by the Tempter, that the dross may be removed; that the person may have a right spirit, or disposition, so as to be ready to be "saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."

Mace' translation reads:—"Deliver such an one unto Satan to suffer corporal punishment." The same idea is in Wakefield.

Paul refers to a similar case in 1 Tim. 1: 20, where he says, when speaking of "Hymeneus and Alexander; whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme." It will be seen that this was for correction.

In the Syriac, the passage in 1 Cor. 5: 5, reads, "That in spirit he may have life." Before his chastisement, or "punishment," his spirit, or disposition, was unsubdued, rendering him unfit for salvation "in the day of the Lord Jesus." But the correction has subdued his carnal mind, and he now manifests the amiable spirit of Jesus, who will accept him when he comes in glory. Like David, he can say:—"It is good for me that I have been afflicted that I might learn thy statutes." "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word."

II. WHAT DOES THE APOSTLE MEAN BY HIS SPIRIT IN VERSE 4?

We understand him to mean that he is present with them in his feelings, or mentally.

The Syriac reads:—

"And I, while distant from you in body, but present with you in spirit, have already, as if present, judged him who perpetrateth this deed; that ye all assemble together, in the name of our Lord Jesus Mesiah, and I with you in spirit, together with the energy of our Lord Jesus Mesiah."

III. The delivery of the man to Satan for correction, chastisement, or punishment, must be in a sense differing from any thing he had done voluntarily. We have no clear light to give on this point as to the manner of doing it.

THE RIGHT SPIRIT.

We admire the spirit of the following. It accompanies one of the sweetest articles in this number of the "Crisis":—

"BRO. GRANT:—I send you a few lines which I have written for the Crisis. If I understand myself, it is my sentiment. If you can, and think best, you may remodel and punctuate it, after which you may print it, if you have no better pieces to put in its place; if you have, reject it. Please do what you think will be for the best, and I will cheerfully submit to your better judgment."

Now, dear reader, do you not admire the spirit and sentiment of the foregoing? How pleasant it is to serve such noble souls. It sounds just like the language of a real christian. Labor for such is only pleasure. Come, let us all arm ourselves with the mind that was in Christ, and bear one another's burdens.

PROGRESS OF SPIRITUALISM.

As often as it is remarked by those who know not the facts, that "Spiritualism is dying out," additional evidence comes in to show that its progress is more rapid than ever. Its great work now is in spreading its "principles," preparatory for the coming political, moral, social, financial, and religious revolution, which the spirits and their followers assure us is just at hand. Their "eternal principles," as they term them, are gaining popularity very rapidly. When the most noted men in the world embrace an opinion or system, then, of course, we may expect that it will become popular to receive the same and be associated with them. When the Empress of France, or other distinguished ladies, adopt a mode of dress, all the fashionable world are expected to follow, if they can. The same is true, to a certain extent, of opinions. Already the Emperor and Empress of France have become Spiritualists, as well as many other distinguished personages in Europe. On this side the Atlantic, the Spiritualists now number in their ranks many of the most noted statesmen, lawyers, doctors, and professional men, besides a large number of clergymen. It is said that about half of our Congressmen are Spiritualists. A lecturer in Iowa, John Mayhew, in his "Notes by the way," March 4th, '64, says:—

"I have been invited by two members of the Legislature to speak twice next Sunday in the Hall of Representatives, and have consented to do so. When the request was made for the use of the hall, there were eighty members present. A few spoke in opposition, but when the vote was taken—to the honor of Iowa be it recorded, sixty votes were cast in favor, and twenty only against. Iowa by the voice of its representatives is a FREE STATE—Free not only from the physical thraldom, but of mental bondage as well. All honor to the State of Iowa."

IT SETS THEM TO THINKING.

There is a power in truth to awaken serious thought, which seldom accompanies fables. Truth covets the most searching criticism. Like pure gold in the crucible, it comes out unharmed after the trial, while error forms but a shapeless mass of dross.

A Sister writes:—"My husband is a professed infidel, but he is deeply interested in your paper, and often leaves his own papers unopened till he has mastered the contents of the Crisis. Sometimes he falls into a brown study over its arguments. He is evidently thinking deeply on "the life and death question," and some kindred subjects."

THE NEW HYMN BOOK.—In answer to the inquiry of Bro. C. Goodrich and others, relative to the time when the new hymn book will be ready, we would say, it is thought it will not be issued before campmeeting.

FOR THE FUND.

BRO. GRANT:—Enclosed I send you one dollar for the Tract Fund, as I conceive it a very laudable undertaking. I trust by the prayer of faith and the labor of love they may be made to reach many that will not come out to hear our elders expound the word of life, thus saving many souls from death.

Satan does not trouble any of the churches in Philadelphia, as I am aware of, for I believe he is perfectly satisfied with them; but our little flock he will not let alone; and why? Are we a more deadly enemy to him? or are we disseminating more of God's holy truth than they, that he wishes us scattered and divided again? The church in Philadelphia need the prayer of faith in their behalf. Any elder is welcome among us if he comes to us holding up Jesus and the resurrection, and who will labor among us for souls to be prepared for the coming and kingdom of Jesus, but not hobbies, for we have been rode almost to death by them already; such an one could be fairly remunerated in his traveling expenses, and perhaps a little more. I trust some of the brethren will give us a call, as many of them I see are about going to take the field this coming season. May the Lord give them seals to their ministry and souls for their hire until Jesus comes.

Philadelphia. JACOB G. BAKER.

SR. N. B. NORTHRUP, Otter Creek, Iowa, writes:—"I have read Bro. Taylor's appeal for the Tract Fund, and in response thereto send you one dollar. I feel the better able to do this, because husband has left the use of tobacco, and we have both agreed to do without tea and coffee. I have besides put on the American costume, and so expect to be able to work more, and save more, and so have more means to do with."

BRO. GRANT:—Please find enclosed twenty-five cents (a mite, truly), for the distribution of tracts, those silent messengers of truth. May they be scattered broadcast through the land. What is done must be done quickly. The Lord is surely coming, and I would say with the beloved disciple, Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus! Your Sister in Christ,

M. L. GREENLEAF.

RATHER HAVE THE WHOLE LOAF.

BRO. GRANT:—We have been taking the Crisis in company with Bro. M—; but, though half a loaf is much better than no bread, we have made up our minds that a whole loaf will be still better. We think so much of the Crisis here that we ALL want to read it as soon as it reaches town.

God bless the Editor, Editorial Committee, Publishing Committee, Printers, Uncle Pilgrim, and all hands connected with it. Be of good cheer; the time for rewards is near at hand. Yours in hope, B. F. F.

A CONVERT TO THE TRUTH.

A brother here, who was once a prominent preacher among the United Brethren, has lately become convinced of the truth, and has commenced preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and the glorious and soon coming of the Lord, as revealed in God's holy word. He says he feels now like a babe in Christ, and wants instruction, that he may be able in the future to rightly divide the word, and give to each a portion in due season. He wishes the Crisis. His address is J. R. Preston, Floyd, Iowa. C. P. BURROUGHS.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE "CRISIS."

DEAR CRISIS:—Having been acquainted with thee for some years, and believing that thy daily walk has been good and acceptable, thy conversation interesting and godly, I have become very much attached to thee, for verily thou appearest to be a peculiar friend to all those that search the Scriptures diligently. I love thee for the truth that thou carriest with thee. Yes, I love thee for the truth's sake. I do not wish to flatter, knowing that when we have done all we can we are unprofitable servants, because we have done only our reasonable duty. Yet it is right to speak often to one another, to speak words of encouragement that the feeble be not disheartened, nor the weary turned from the narrow way.

We are in perilous times. Many are departing from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrine of devils. Numerous are the snares through which we must pass, numerous the enticements to allure. Great are the bounties presented, flattering the prospect held up to our view; so that if it were possible even the very elect would be deceived.

Beloved Crisis, may the Lord bless thee, and thy directors with wisdom from on high, to give timely warning to all the "meek," the "merciful," the "pure in heart," the "peace makers," and those which hunger and thirst after "righteousness," also those that are reviled and persecuted for righteousness' sake, that they be not discouraged, but continue faithful unto the end; showing that when Christ, who is our life shall appear, all those that have the Spirit of Christ shall appear with him in glory. Point out the path for the holy; stir up the pure mind by way of remembrance; warn the wicked of their danger, the impenitent of the certain destruction that awaits them; keep the punishment of the disobedient and the reward of the faithful always before our eyes, that we may not be forgetful of the destiny that awaits us. O! point out to us most plainly in the word of God the glorious crisis to which the pure in heart are approaching, and the heart-rending and death-dooming crisis that shall soon burst upon the astonished eyes of the contentious and those that obey not the truth.

Welcome Crisis, we esteem those our best friends who point out our errors and assist us in reforming. We will show our love for thee by our works in assisting thee to obtain an honest living in the sight of all men. Come, thou reprover and comforter, we hail thee with joy, praying that thy weekly visits may continue until the new heaven and the new earth doth appear.

Yours in the faith, H. A. ARNOLD.

REPORT OF THE IOWA CHRISTIAN QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.

Called to order by the President Mar. 12th, 1864. Ministers present—P. W. Hough, L. G. Hiscox, C. Churchill, P. S. W. Deyo, W. Berreman, and S. Ensign. But one church reported and sent in their mite for missionary purposes.

Resolved, That preachers who belong to this conference are requested to report (those who have hitherto neglected to) to the Clerk, before next annual conference, or they may be dropped from the minutes.

I tried at this conference to get released from the duties of traveling evangelist. I hope that this will notify the brethren, so they may be prepared at the annual conference to get some other one, either in the State or out of it, to spend their time at that work. It was agreed that the next quarterly meeting should be down this way, and perhaps will be at Manchester, about the first of June. Particulars hereafter. There being no other special business, we adjourned.

A NEW ADVENT PAPER.

Feeling it to be the will of God, there will be published in a few weeks, at Celesta, Sullivan Co., Pa., a new Advent paper, called the Day Star of Zion and Banner of Life, to be sent free to any one who feels enough interested in its issue to pay the postage. This paper is not designed for a further party division in the Advent body, but rather a repairer of the breaches, a restoring medium of unity for the weary, divided pilgrims of faith. Its columns will be free to all humble inquirers after truth, without regard to their preconceived opinion of Scripture teaching. Any one desirous of taking such a paper, may address, "Day Star," Eaglesmere P. O., Pa.

For the World's Crisis.

THE SIGNS OF THESE DAYS.

Matthew 24: 12 reads,—"Iniquity shall abound." 1 Tim. 6: 10,—"The love of money is the root of all evil." 2 Tim. 3: 1–5,—"In the last days perilous times shall come. Men shall be covetous, . . . unholy, . . fierce, traitors, . . . lovers of pleasures," etc., Jeremiah 23: 29–33.

It would appear from the following that the above Scriptures are being fulfilled to the very letter at the present time. Says the Portland Transcript of Jan. 23d, 1864, in a leading article on Bible Dishonesty:—

"One of the dark features of the present war, is the immense amount of dishonesty . . . permeating every department of the public service, thieves in the treasury, thieves shaking hands with rebels (traitors) in the Custom House, every where, men defrauding the government, a general grab game, and he who gets the most the best fellow. If by mistake a fraudulent contractor is clapped into jail, a three thousand dollar bribe brings a Senator to his aid, and he is soon at large again. This is a dark picture, and in contemplating it one is forced to ask, is public virtue dead? Is there no honesty."

Dr. Wayland on the times, said, "Where iniquity abounds, the love of many is apt to wax cold, and the Spirit to depart. Such evils threaten us. Prodigious sins are at work in our nation. No one can tell what course it is best things should take." "Human wisdom is vanity. It is powerless at the problem of this crisis." Says the Boston Traveller of Oct. 6th, 1863.

Lord Clarence Paget, (of England,) says "An agonized world waits to hear what this crisis portends." Says the New York Herald of Jan. 16th, 1864, "M. Thiers (of France) thinks that the present policy of France may entail upon Europe a general war; which shall last beyond the time of the present generation." And the Portland Advertiser of Jan. 25th, 1864, on news from Europe, from London Times, says of the German war, "It must before long sweep in its ever widening vortex every power of the European continent." Says the Herald of Jan. 30th, 1864: "The Mexican question has assumed a new phase in France, . . . and given Napoleon the opportunity to enter into the coming contest, in Europe, with the forces at his command untrammelled, as expressed through their representatives, that he may be ready for the great struggle which it is now almost impossible for Europe to escape. All the powers of Europe are assuming a most formidable aspect, when all Europe shall be convulsed with a general war."

Says the New York Herald of Feb. 6th, 1864, on news from Europe, "The new French loan of twelve millions met with an extraordinary success. The applications within a few days amounted to one hundred and sixty millions, or eight times the amount required." So it appears the treasures of gold and silver are at his command.

Now what do we find in our country? Said Rev. J. E. Ranbin, before the united Congregational churches at Lowell, on twelfth page of his discourse, "This war is a judgment of God for our atheism and infidelity. We have legalized it, and set to it the seal of state." Fourteenth page. "This system of oppression which has caused our war, atheism has culminated." Says O. A. Bronson, "We are drifting away from christianity," and he expects that when we shall have parted with its doctrines we shall abandon its morality, especially in what relates to the sanctity of marriage. Hence the following in the Washington Star, D. C., of Nov. 30th, in an article on the morals of Washington,—"A resolution was introduced, stating that houses of prostitution and gambling cannot be successfully prohibited. The joint committee suggest amendments to license and regulate such houses." One member stated that "prostitution was horribly on the increase." Another member arose and said, "The members of Congress are the best customers of such places." Says another paper, "War sadly demoralizes."

And we should think so by the following advice in a piece called, "The War Cry," in Zion's Herald of Dec. 23d,—"Arise! gird on your armor strong! Grasp sword and bayonet. March onward in Jehovah's strength. Your souls on victory set. Fight till your country's soil shall drink the last fell traitor's gore." Now for the effect. See Boston Journal of July 9th. Carleton, on the battle of Gettysburg, says:

"It rained shot and shell, knocking over the marble slabs in the cemetery, disemboweling horses, tearing up the graves. The air was full of wild, hideous noises. The low buzz of round shot, whizzing of the elongated rifle bolts, screaming and screeching, the sharp stunning explosion of shells overhead and all around; the earth shook with the tremendous concussions of two hundred pieces of artillery, the enemy came with cheers and yells, like Indians sounding a war-whoop; they rushed upon our guns, we blew them from the muzzles, and filled the air with legs, heads, and arms. Still they came with demoniac screams. The rebels rushed up to the rifle pits, men nerved themselves for desperate efforts. It was the fury of tigers. Foes became impaled on each other's bayonets, and fell to the ground together."

This was Thursday's fight. He then gives Friday's:—

"The lines mingled there were a confused mass of men. Swords were swinging in the air. There were pistol shots, musket shots, bursting shells, tornadoes of grape and canister; there were cuts, thrusts, explosions, flashes, clouds of smoke, yells, curses, groans, hurrahs, an infernal uproar, men falling, heads blown off, arms and legs blown into the air,—a horrid, indescribable scene of confusion, carnage, death, . . . horrible to behold." Speaking of another part of the battle he says, "It begins, the infernal din and uproar, three hundred guns firing with the utmost rapidity. You see the attacking forces, solid shot flow through them,—shells make great gaps, men toss their arms wildly and fall headlong. Still on, up to the muzzles of the guns,—they are blown away, mangled, torn, piled in heaps,—they melt away, you cannot burn a straw in a candle flame with greater rapidity, the ground is thick with dead, they lie thick as fallen leaves of autumn."

O! hail, happy day! which ends all the gory scenes of earth, when the blood-stained garments will be changed to robes of righteousness. This tottering, reeling earth dies hard, but prophecy declares such shall be its last hours of life. When the Prince of peace comes, the will of God will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Oh! who would not pray, "Thy kingdom come?"

STOP!

Stop what? Several things. Let us enumerate some of them: SPEAKING EVIL OF YOUR NEIGHBORS. "But some of my neighbors are bad." Well, suppose they are, will your venom make them any better? How do you suppose it makes them feel to hear of your hard sayings? Does it not kindle their wrath, causing them to retort in terms fully as harsh as your own? And what good can be accomplished in this way? Just none at all. It is evil, and "only evil continually." The result is wrath; and "the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God."—James 1: 20.

Would you have others say hard things of you? No. Then heed the admonition of the Savior: "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Matt. 7: 12.

JESTING. "And why should I stop that?" For several reasons. 1. It does you no good, and the time thus wasted ought to be spent to the glory of God. 2. Jests sometimes make enemies. 3. It is wrong. See Ephesians 5: 3, 4. The christian is expected to be watchful and prayerful; ever striving to let his light so shine before men that they may see his good works, and glorify his Father who is in heaven. Hence, there is no time for him to spend in jesting. Better stop.

FOOLISH TALKING. "And what is foolish talking?" That which does no one any good, but is "void of understanding or sound judgment," as the word is defined. Do you indulge? Well, I intend to be pointed, if you do wince. It is astonishing that sensible persons, or those that profess to be such, should stoop so low as to become "void of understanding or sound judgment," for the sake of engaging in ridiculous nonsense; yet such is the fact, and "foolish talking" is to be heard on every hand. Self seems to be uppermost in the minds of the merry and gay. All wish to excel in producing mirth; and the sharpest witticism makes the sharpest man. Hence professors and non-professors engage alike, and thus reproach is brought upon the cause of Christ. Stop it, and stop it now, for it is wrong. See Eph. 5: 3, 4.

DOING WRONG. "What is wrong?" That which is contrary to the will of God. This may be violated in many instances thoughtlessly; but still it is sin; "for sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John 3: 4. "See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days are evil." Eph. 5: 15, 16.

Sinner, stop doing wrong. "The wages of sin is death." Rom. 6: 23. "Why will ye die?" Pause and think! O, turn to Christ and live. G. W. GREEN.

PHTHISIC.

To the many who have written for that herb, I would say that I have sent all I have away, and as yet cannot find any more. I may have to wait till I can gather it. In the mean time, I will keep a strict account, and those who have sent me money shall be served first; so they need not fear of losing it.

PETER S. W. DEYO.

☞ When the shadows of death were gathering around Sir Walter Scott, he said to the watcher, "Bring me the book." "What book?" asked Lockhart, his son-in-law.—"There is but one book," said the dying man.

holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a NEW and living way; which has been "consecrated for us." Then "let us draw near with a true heart," "having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience."

But again we inquire, who are the "all" referred to, who are to know the Lord? Let Isaiah the prophet answer:—

"Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child: for more are the children of the desolate, than the children of the married wife, saith the Lord." "For thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited." "For this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee. For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." "And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children." "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord; and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord."—Isa. 54: 1, 3, 9, 10, 13, 17.

This says "thy seed" (Israel's seed) shall inherit the Gentiles, and all thy children shall be taught of the Lord. Now what says Mr. Objector? Does the "all" mean all mankind? or does it mean "all thy children"? It must mean all thy children, I think. But I have still more to present to prove that the "new covenant" is now in force. And in doing so I will continue to contrast the condition of the church, or people of God, under the

TWO DIFFERENT COVENANTS.

1. We inquire, Where were the two covenants written? The first was written on "two tables of stone." The second is written "in fleshly tables of the heart." (2 Cor. 3: 3.) 2. We inquire, How were these two covenants written? The first "with the finger of God." (Ex. 31: 18.) The second "with the Spirit of the living God." (2 Cor. 3: 3.) A few passages will now be presented to prove that

THE WORK OF THE SPIRIT IS NOW IN THE HEART.

"For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves: which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing, or else excusing, one another." "Now he which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God; who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts." "For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father."—Rom. 2: 14, 15; 2 Cor. 1: 21, 22; 4: 6; Gal. 4: 6.

3. Under the first covenant, did "all" have the privilege of knowing the Lord for themselves? That is, did all have the privilege of approaching God for themselves?

COULD EACH FOR HIMSELF COME TO THE "MERCY-SEAT"? Let the following answer:—

"Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people."—Heb. 3: 6, 7.

The only person who was permitted to approach the "mercy-seat," was the high priest alone once a year. And hence no one knew whether he was accepted of God, only as the high priest performed the service for him. And this was done in the following very odd way, viz:—

"And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he shall bring the live goat: and Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness: and the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited: and he shall let go the goat in the wilderness."—Lev. 16: 20–22. And thus it appears that all those who lived under the old covenant, never knew whether they were accepted of God only as they learned it from the high priest. And so it was, as the thing strikes one at this late day, that a live goat was their Savior. And so it rather strikes me that those who are determined to hold on to the old law, or the old covenant, have for their teacher—instead of the LIVING JESUS—an "old dead SCHOOLMASTER," and for a Savior, a live goat. O that the Spirit of the living God might write upon the hearts of every seventh-day Sabbath keeper this important truth, that the same system of religious ordinances, or ceremonies, which required a live goat to take away man's sins into the wilderness on his head, was also the same system of service which required the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath. And the entire system was established upon that old covenant which was written upon tables of stone, as will appear to any student of the Bible who will carefully examine the books of Exodus and Leviticus, as compared with the epistle to the Hebrews.

It may be seen at a glance, by noticing the few portions of Scripture which follow, that the whole system was to cease with their generations,—seventh-day Sabbath and all; as they were only given to the children of Israel, "throughout their generations." I will now give a few instances, and my readers can satisfy themselves by examining them.

THE PASSOVER. "And this day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the Lord throughout your generations: ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance forever."—Ex. 12: 14.

BURNT OFFERING. "This shall be a continual burnt offering throughout your generations at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord; where I will meet you, to speak there unto thee. And there I will meet with the children of Israel, and the tabernacle shall be sanctified by my glory. And I will sanctify the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar: I will sanctify also both Aaron and his sons, to minister to me in the priest's office. And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God."—Ex. 29: 42–45.

SEVENTH WEEK SABBATH. "And ye shall proclaim on the selfsame day, that it may be an holy convocation unto you: ye shall do no servile work therein: it shall be a statute forever in all your dwellings throughout your generations."—Lev. 23: 21.

DAY OF ATONEMENT. "Ye shall do no manner of work: it shall be a statute forever throughout your generations in all your dwellings. It shall be unto you a [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] the month [illegible] from one [illegible] unto another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord.[illegible] Sabbath [illegible]"—Isa. 66: 23.

SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore, for it is holy unto you: every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people. Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the Sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work on the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed. And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God."—Ex. 31: 12–18.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, April 12, 1864.

☞ NOTICE.

ALL ORDERS AND MONIES FOR THE WORLD'S CRISIS, OR FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE, AND ALL MATTERS PERTAINING TO THE BUSINESS OF THE OFFICE, MUST BE ADDRESSED TO THE BUSINESS AGENT,

MILES GRANT, Crisis Box, Boston.

THE BOSTON CONFERENCE.

We have only time to say this week, that it has been a success. The meeting was large and heavenly, and much good has been accomplished in the name of the Lord. Particulars next week.

MEETINGS AT CASTLETON.

Our meetings at Castleton, Vt., were very interesting. Our dear Bro. Mathewson, ever faithful in the Lord, had been preparing the way several evenings, and had persuaded some to reform before we arrived. We found several under conviction, and the people waking up to the importance of being prepared to meet the Lord. We enjoyed many happy greetings from the lovers of Jesus.

During the past two years, Satan succeeded in seducing some away from the path of life, who have again deserted from the arch deceiver, and are once more rejoicing in the service of the King of kings. Several were converted, and a dozen or more requested prayers that they might be true christians. The work is onward, and we shall expect to hear of much additional good resulting from the earnest efforts of Bro. Burnham. The truth is making some noble advances in C. and vicinity, through the faithful labors of Bro. D. T. Taylor. He is about removing from Castleton to Rouse's Point, N. Y., to take care of his aged mother, and to labor as an evangelist. His health is better than when he went to C. We are sorry that he cannot remain longer with them. He has a large place in the hearts of the friends of Jesus.

We met a hearty welcome at the happy home of Bro. C. S. Sherman. While there, death made a most earnest effort to take Bro. Sherman's oldest son; but in answer to much prayer he began to recover before we left. We never saw death deprived of a victim so fully in his grasp as in this case; but the affliction has produced happy results. It was evident to all that the Lord was glorified in many ways; thus Satan is often foiled in his purposes to destroy. Instead of being called to bury his son in the silent tomb, Brb. S. had the pleasure of seeing a lovely daughter buried by baptism in the likeness of death. The scene was an affecting one, and caused many to weep. To the Lord be all the glory.

Our meeting closed with a heavenly communion season. We left many weeping, but longing for the day when Jesus shall come and wipe away all tears.

WRITE PLAINLY.

We would again urge our contributors to write very plainly. Use no pale ink. Let it be as black, blue, or red, as possible. Write very coarsely. If some of our correspondents knew what a disagreeable time our compositors have had in straining their eyes to make out their fine writing, we think they would never attempt again to crowd the greatest amount of matter into the smallest possible space.

Another word: be sure and write all proper names very plainly.

OUR PHOTOGRAPHS.

In compliance with many urgent requests, we are now prepared to furnish our friends with an excellent photograph likeness, suitable for Albums, taken by Mr. J. A. Whipple, 96 Washington St., Boston. Mr. Whipple stands at the head of the photograph business in this city. We will send the likeness, with our autograph, for twenty-five cents, postage three cents.

Direct to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

QUESTION BOOK.—The Christian Publication Society has decided to publish a Question Book for Sunday Schools. It will soon be in the hands of the printer. We think it will be what is needed. The work has been prepared by Bro. H. F. Carpenter, and approved by the Editorial Committee appointed to decide in such matters.

"THE MILLENNIUM; or Aids to Goats." [illegible] This is the title of a new pamphlet of [illegible] pp., by Mr. F. H. [illegible], pastor of the Episcopalian Church in Chelsea, Mass. Price 10 cents [illegible] postage paid. For sale at this office [illegible]

THE DOCTRINE OF THE NICOLAITANS.

"BRO. GRANT:—Will you please [illegible] through the Crisis what was the doctrine of the Nicolaitans?" S. TUCKER.

There is some uncertainty as to what were the peculiar doctrines of the Nicolaitans. They are referred to in Revelation as follows: "But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate. So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate."—Rev. 2: 6, 15. They were a heretical sect, of the second century, supposed to have received their name from Nicolas of Antioch, one of the seven deacons mentioned in Acts 6: 5. Irenæus was the first christian writer who mentions them, and says they held that fornication, and the eating of meats offered to idols was not sinful.

St. Epiphanius says that Nicolas had a beautiful wife, whom he left for the purpose of living in a state of celibacy; but afterwards returned to her, and justified his conduct by certain licentious principles, which became the basis on which was founded the sect of the Nicolaitans.

It is said they allowed a community of wives, and endeavored to mingle christianity and idolatry together, in order to escape the persecution which came from the enemies of the cross.

They held that pleasure and the gratification of the appetites constituted the true end and happiness of man, and that he should not be restricted in his choice of the means to satisfy his desires. Eusebius says they continued but a short time; while others think their doctrines were adopted by the Cainites.

DAVID'S THRONE.

"Will Bro. Grant give an exposition of Luke 1: 32, 33?

1. Is the throne spoken of the literal throne of David, that was overturned, which is to be restored?

2. Is the house of Jacob, referred to, the Jews? Please inform your readers in the Crisis, and oblige,

Yours for the truth, M. L. PRATT.

The passage reads as follows:—"He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

He who has the throne of a kingdom has the regal power of that kingdom; but we do not understand that the succeeding king must necessarily sit upon the same identical seat as his predecessor, in order to be the king of the country. The same is true of Christ, in relation to David's throne and kingdom. Whenever Christ becomes the ruler over the territory of which David was king, then he may be said to sit on "the throne of his father David."

2. We think "the house of Jacob" refers to the Jews. We do not find the term Jacob ever applied to the Gentiles.

MEANING OF LEAVEN.

"Does the word leaven, used in the Bible, always mean the same thing?"

F. BATES, JUN.

The word leaven is never taken to represent any thing good, when used in a symbolical sense. Its literal sense all understand, i. e., for raising bread. But it should be remembered that the process of raising is one of souring by fermentation, or corruption. When the Savior would represent a corrupting, infectious doctrine, introduced into a church, he illustrated the fact by comparing it to leaven. Hence he says, "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees." The disciples did not understand him at first, which caused him to explain himself. After which it is said, "Then understood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Saducees."—Matt. 16: 6.

Just as leaven corrupts and sours the meal in which it is placed, so do false doctrines corrupt and sour those who embrace them. For this reason, leaven is never used figuratively in the Bible to represent any thing good. Its property to spread, or extend its influence, is taken in one case, Matt. 13: 33, to represent the extent of the kingdom, but not its character, as we understand the passage.

DELIVERED TO SATAN.

BRO. GRANT:—You will oblige a searcher after truth very much by answering the following questions, drawn from 1 Cor. 5: 3–5.

1. If man has no immortal spirit that exists independent of the body, (flesh), what does the spirit mean in 1 Cor. 5: 5?

2d. What does the apostle mean by his spirit, in 1 Cor. 5: 4?

3d. How could they (when they are gathered together) deliver such a one unto Satan, since he had already delivered himself up to Satan? Yours in search of truth,

A. C. DOE.

The text reads as follows;—"For I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged already, as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, to deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."

I. The meaning of this passage appears to be rather obscure as rendered in our version. It should be observed that the salvation is not till the "day of the Lord Jesus;" consequently it is not at death; therefore, we see no proof in this passage, when taken as it now stands, that man has an immortal spirit. "In the day of the Lord Jesus," when he comes to raise the dead, then the "flesh" is to come forth from the grave, and enter the kingdom of God. At that time the whole man is saved. If it is said, that the spirit may be [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] with all the plain texts in the Bible.

According to the Scriptures, [illegible] evident that [illegible] is saved [illegible] physical organism [illegible] destroyed, [illegible] what constitutes him a man. We find no promise of salvation till the second coming of Christ. This passage should not be so changed from its true meaning as to make it contradict all the plain Scriptures on the subject. Other translations throw light on this text, and exhibit its harmony with what is clear and positive.

Wakefield renders it as follows:—"Deliver such an one unto Satan for the punishment of the flesh." This is in keeping with the idea that the Lord chastises his children; or suffers them to be sorely tried by the Tempter, that the dross may be removed; that the person may have a right spirit, or disposition, so as to be ready to be "saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."

Mace' translation reads:—"Deliver such an one unto Satan to suffer corporal punishment." The same idea is in Wakefield.

Paul refers to a similar case in 1 Tim. 1: 20, where he says, when speaking of "Hymeneus and Alexander; whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme." It will be seen that this was for correction.

In the Syriac, the passage in 1 Cor. 5: 5, reads, "That in spirit he may have life." Before his chastisement, or "punishment," his spirit, or disposition, was unsubdued, rendering him unfit for salvation "in the day of the Lord Jesus." But the correction has subdued his carnal mind, and he now manifests the amiable spirit of Jesus, who will accept him when he comes in glory. Like David, he can say:—"It is good for me that I have been afflicted that I might learn thy statutes." "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word."

II. WHAT DOES THE APOSTLE MEAN BY HIS SPIRIT IN VERSE 4?

We understand him to mean that he is present with them in his feelings, or mentally.

The Syriac reads:—

"And I, while distant from you in body, but present with you in spirit, have already, as if present, judged him who perpetrateth this deed; that ye all assemble together, in the name of our Lord Jesus Mesiah, and I with you in spirit, together with the energy of our Lord Jesus Mesiah."

III. The delivery of the man to Satan for correction, chastisement, or punishment, must be in a sense differing from any thing he had done voluntarily. We have no clear light to give on this point as to the manner of doing it.

THE RIGHT SPIRIT.

We admire the spirit of the following. It accompanies one of the sweetest articles in this number of the "Crisis":—

"BRO. GRANT:—I send you a few lines which I have written for the Crisis. If I understand myself, it is my sentiment. If you can, and think best, you may remodel and punctuate it, after which you may print it, if you have no better pieces to put in its place; if you have, reject it. Please do what you think will be for the best, and I will cheerfully submit to your better judgment."

Now, dear reader, do you not admire the spirit and sentiment of the foregoing? How pleasant it is to serve such noble souls. It sounds just like the language of a real christian. Labor for such is only pleasure. Come, let us all arm ourselves with the mind that was in Christ, and bear one another's burdens.

PROGRESS OF SPIRITUALISM.

As often as it is remarked by those who know not the facts, that "Spiritualism is dying out," additional evidence comes in to show that its progress is more rapid than ever. Its great work now is in spreading its "principles," preparatory for the coming political, moral, social, financial, and religious revolution, which the spirits and their followers assure us is just at hand. Their "eternal principles," as they term them, are gaining popularity very rapidly. When the most noted men in the world embrace an opinion or system, then, of course, we may expect that it will become popular to receive the same and be associated with them. When the Empress of France, or other distinguished ladies, adopt a mode of dress, all the fashionable world are expected to follow, if they can. The same is true, to a certain extent, of opinions. Already the Emperor and Empress of France have become Spiritualists, as well as many other distinguished personages in Europe. On this side the Atlantic, the Spiritualists now number in their ranks many of the most noted statesmen, lawyers, doctors, and professional men, besides a large number of clergymen. It is said that about half of our Congressmen are Spiritualists. A lecturer in Iowa, John Mayhew, in his "Notes by the way," March 4th, '64, says:—

"I have been invited by two members of the Legislature to speak twice next Sunday in the Hall of Representatives, and have consented to do so. When the request was made for the use of the hall, there were eighty members present. A few spoke in opposition, but when the vote was taken—to the honor of Iowa be it recorded, sixty votes were cast in favor, and twenty only against. Iowa by the voice of its representatives is a FREE STATE—Free not only from the physical thraldom, but of mental bondage as well. All honor to the State of Iowa."

IT SETS THEM TO THINKING.

There is a power in truth to awaken serious thought, which seldom accompanies fables. Truth covets the most searching criticism. Like pure gold in the crucible, it comes out unharmed after the trial, while error forms but a shapeless mass of dross.

A Sister writes:—"My husband is a professed infidel, but he is deeply interested in your paper, and often leaves his own papers unopened till he has mastered the contents of the Crisis. Sometimes he falls into a brown study over its arguments. He is evidently thinking deeply on 'the life and death question,' and some kindred subjects."

FOR THE FUND.

BRO. GRANT:—Enclosed I send you one dollar for the Tract Fund, as I conceive it a very laudable undertaking. I trust by the prayer of faith and the labor of love they may be made to reach many that will not come out to hear our elders expound the word of life, thus saving many souls from death.

Satan does not trouble any of the churches in Philadelphia, as I am aware of, for I believe he is perfectly satisfied with them; but our little flock he will not let alone; and why? Are we a more deadly enemy to him? or are we disseminating more of God's holy truth than they, that he wishes us scattered and divided again? The church in Philadelphia need the prayer of faith in their behalf. Any elder is welcome among us if he comes to us holding up Jesus and the resurrection, and who will labor among us for souls to be prepared for the coming and kingdom of Jesus, but not hobbies, for we have been rode almost to death by them already; such an one could be fairly remunerated in his traveling expenses, and perhaps a little more. I trust some of the brethren will give us a call, as many of them I see are about going to take the field this coming season. May the Lord give them seals to their ministry and souls for their hire until Jesus comes.

SR. N. B. NORTHRUP, Otter Creek, Iowa, writes:—"I have read Bro. Taylor's appeal for the Tract Fund, and in response thereto send you one dollar. I feel the better able to do this, because husband has left the use of tobacco, and we have both agreed to do without tea and coffee. I have besides put on the American costume, and so expect to be able to work more, and save more, and so have more means to do with."

BRO. GRANT:—Please find enclosed twenty-five cents (a mite, truly), for the distribution of tracts, those silent messengers of truth. May they be scattered broadcast through the land. What is done must be done quickly. The Lord is surely coming, and I would say with the beloved disciple, Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus! Your Sister in Christ,

RATHER HAVE THE WHOLE LOAF.

BRO. GRANT:—We have been taking the Crisis in company with Bro. M—; but, though half a loaf is much better than no bread, we have made up our minds that a whole loaf will be still better. We think so much of the Crisis here that we ALL want to read it as soon as it reaches town.

God bless the Editor, Editorial Committee, Publishing Committee, Printers, Uncle Pilgrim, and all hands connected with it. Be of good cheer; the time for rewards is near at hand. Yours in hope, B. F. F.

A CONVERT TO THE TRUTH.

A brother here, who was once a prominent preacher among the United Brethren, has lately become convinced of the truth, and has commenced preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and the glorious and soon coming of the Lord, as revealed in God's holy word. He says he feels now like a babe in Christ, and wants instruction, that he may be able in the future to rightly divide the word, and give to each a portion in due season. He wishes the Crisis. His address is J. R. Preston, Floyd, Iowa. C. P. BURROUGHS.

TO THE "CRISIS."

DEAR CRISIS:—Having been acquainted with thee for some years, and believing that thy daily walk has been good and acceptable, thy conversation interesting and godly, I have become very much attached to thee, for verily thou appearest to be a peculiar friend to all those that search the Scriptures diligently. I love thee for the truth that thou carriest with thee. Yes, I love thee for the truth's sake. I do not wish to flatter, knowing that when we have done all we can we are unprofitable servants, because we have done only our reasonable duty. Yet it is right to speak often to one another, to speak words of encouragement that the feeble be not disheartened, nor the weary turned from the narrow way.

We are in perilous times. Many are departing from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. Numerous are the snares through which we must pass, numerous the enticements to allure. Great are the bounties presented, flattering the prospect held up to our view; so that if it were possible even the very elect would be deceived.

Beloved Crisis, may the Lord bless thee, and thy directors with wisdom from on high, to give timely warning to all the "meek," the "merciful," the "pure in heart," the "peace makers," and those which hunger and thirst after "righteousness," also those that are reviled and [illegible] that they [illegible] faithful [illegible] Christ, who is our life shall appear, all those that have the Spirit of Christ shall appear with him in glory. Point out the path for the holy; stir up the pure mind by way of remembrance; warn the wicked of their danger, the impenitent of the certain destruction that awaits them; keep the punishment of the disobedient and the reward of the faithful always before our eyes, that we may not be forgetful of the destiny that awaits us. O! point out to us most plainly in the word of God the glorious crisis to which the pure in heart are approaching, and the heart-rending and death-dooming crisis that shall soon burst upon the astonished eyes of the contentious and those that obey not the truth.

Welcome Crisis, we esteem those our best friends who point out our errors and assist us in reforming. We will show our love for thee by our works in assisting thee to obtain an honest living in the sight of all men. Come, thou reprover and comforter, we hail thee with joy, praying that thy weekly visits may continue until the new heaven and the new earth doth appear.

Yours in the faith, H. A. ARNOLD.

REPORT OF THE IOWA CHRISTIAN QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.

Called to order by the President Mar. 12th, 1864. Ministers present—P. W. Hough, L. G. Hiscox, C. Churchill, P. S. W. Deyo, W. Berreman, and S. Ensign. But one church reported and sent in their mite for missionary purposes.

Resolved, That preachers who belong to this conference are requested to report (those who have hitherto neglected to) to the Clerk, before next annual conference, or they may be dropped from the minutes.

I tried at this conference to get released from the duties of traveling evangelist. I hope that this will notify the brethren, so they may be prepared at the annual conference to get some other one, either in the State or out of it, to spend their time at that work. It was agreed that the next quarterly meeting should be down this way, and perhaps will be at Manchester, about the first of June. Particulars hereafter. There being no other special business, we adjourned.

A NEW ADVENT PAPER.

Feeling it to be the will of God, there will be published in a few weeks, at Celesta, Sullivan Co., Pa., a new Advent paper, called the Day Star of Zion and Banner of Life, to be sent free to any one who feels enough interested in its issue to pay the postage. This paper is not designed for a further party division in the Advent body, but rather a repairer of the breaches, a restoring medium of unity for the weary, divided pilgrims of faith. Its columns will be free to all humble inquirers after truth, without regard to their preconceived opinion of Scripture teaching. Any one desirous of taking such a paper, may address, "Day Star," Eaglesmere P. O., Pa.

THE SIGNS OF THESE DAYS.

Matthew 24: 12 reads,—"Iniquity shall abound." 1 Tim. 6: 10,—"The love of money is the root of all evil." 2 Tim. 3: 1–5,—"In the last days perilous times shall come. Men shall be covetous, . . . unholy, . . . fierce, traitors, . . . lovers of pleasures," etc., Jeremiah 23: 29–33.

It would appear from the following that the above Scriptures are being fulfilled to the very letter at the present time. Says the Portland Transcript of Jan. 23d, 1864, in a leading article on Bible Dishonesty:—

"One of the dark features of the present war, is the immense amount of dishonesty . . . permeating every department of the public service, thieves in the treasury, thieves shaking hands with rebels (traitors) in the Custom House, every where, men defrauding the government, a general grab game, and he who gets the most the best fellow. If by mistake a fraudulent contractor is clapped into jail, a three thousand dollar bribe brings a Senator to his aid, and he is soon at large again. This is a dark picture, and in contemplating it one is forced to ask, is public virtue dead? Is there no honesty."

Dr. Wayland on the times, said, "Where iniquity abounds, the love of many is apt to wax cold, and the Spirit to depart. Such evils threaten us. Prodigious sins are at work in our nation. No one can tell what course it is best things should take." "Human wisdom is vanity. It is powerless at the problem of this crisis." Says the Boston Traveller of Oct. 6th, 1863.

Lord Clarence Paget, (of England,) says "An agonized world waits to hear what this crisis portends." Says the New York Herald of Jan. 16th, 1864, "M. Thiers (of France) thinks that the present policy of France may entail upon Europe a general war; which shall last beyond the time of the present generation." And the Portland Advertiser of Jan. 25th, 1864, on news from Europe, from London Times, says, of the German war, "It must before long sweep in its ever widening vortex every power of the European continent." Says the Herald of Jan. 30th, 1864: "The Mexican question has assumed a new phase in France, . . . and given Napoleon the opportunity to enter into the coming contest, in Europe, with the forces at his command untrammelled, as expressed through their representatives, that he may be ready for the great struggle which it is now almost impossible for Europe to escape. All the powers of Europe are assuming a most formidable aspect, when all Europe shall be convulsed with a general war."

Says the New York Herald of Feb. 6th, 1864, on news from Europe, "The new French loan of twelve millions met with an extraordinary success. The applications within a few days amounted to one hundred and sixty millions, or eight times the amount required." So it appears the treasures of gold and silver are at his command.

Now what do we find in our country? Said Rev. J. E. Rankin, before the united Congregational churches at Lowell, on twelfth page of his discourse, "This war is a judgment of God for our atheism and infidelity. We have legalized it, and set to it the seal of [illegible]." Fourteenth page. "This system of oppression which has caused our war, atheism has culminated." Says O. A. Brownson, "We are drifting away from christianity," and he expects that when we shall have parted with its doctrines we shall abandon its morality, especially in what relates to the sanctity of marriage. Hence the following in the Washington Star, D. C., of Nov. 30th, in an article on the morals of Washington,—"A resolution was introduced, stating that houses of prostitution and gambling cannot be successfully prohibited. The joint committee suggest amendments to license and regulate such houses." One member stated that "prostitution was horribly on the increase." Another member arose and said, "The members of Congress are the best customers of such places." Says another paper, "War sadly demoralizes."

And we should think so by the following advice in a piece called, "The War Cry," in Zion's Herald of Dec. 23d,—"Arise! gird on your armor strong! Grasp sword and bayonet. March onward in Jehovah's strength. Your souls on victory set. Fight till your country's soil shall drink the last fell traitor's gore." Now for the effect. See Boston Journal of July 9th. Carleton, on the battle of Gettysburg, says:

"It rained shot and shell, knocking over the marble slabs in the cemetery, disemboweling horses, tearing up the graves. The air was full of wild, hideous noises. The low buzz of round shot, whizzing of the elongated rifle bolts, screaming and screeching, the sharp stunning explosion of shells overhead and all around; the earth shook with the tremendous concussions of two hundred pieces of artillery, the enemy came with cheers and yells, like Indians sounding a war-whoop; they rushed upon our guns, we blew them from the muzzles, and filled the air with legs, heads, and arms. Still they came with demoniac screams. The rebels rushed up to the rifle pits, men nerved themselves for desperate efforts. It was the fury of tigers. Foes became impaled on each other's bayonets, and fell to the ground together."

This was Thursday's fight. He then gives Friday's:—

"The lines mingled there were a confused mass of men. Swords were swinging in the air. There were pistol shots, musket shots, bursting shells, tornadoes of grape and canister; there were cuts, thrusts, explosions, flashes, clouds of smoke, yells, curses, groans, hurrahs, an infernal uproar, men falling, heads blown off, arms and legs blown into the air,—a horrid, indescribable scene of confusion, carnage, death, . . . horrible to behold." Speaking of another part of the battle he says, "It begins, the infernal din and uproar, three hundred guns firing with the utmost rapidity. You see the attacking forces, solid shot flow through them,—shells make great gaps, men toss their arms wildly and fall headlong. Still on, up to the muzzles of the guns,—they are blown away, mangled, torn, piled in heaps,—they melt away, you cannot burn a straw in a candle flame with greater rapidity, the ground is thick with dead, they lie thick as fallen leaves of autumn."

O! hail, happy day! which ends all the gory scenes of earth, when the blood-stained garments will be changed to robes of righteousness. This tottering, reeling earth dies hard, but prophecy declares such shall be its last hours of life. When the Prince of peace comes, the will of God will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Oh! who would not pray, "Thy kingdom come?"

New Sharon, Me. JOHN TAYLOR.

For the World's Crisis.

STOP!

Stop what? Several things. Let us enumerate some of them: SPEAKING EVIL OF YOUR NEIGHBORS. "But some of my neighbors are bad." Well, suppose they are, will your venom make them any better? How do you suppose it makes them feel to hear of your hard sayings? Does it not kindle their wrath, causing them to retort in terms fully as harsh as your own? And what good can be accomplished in this way? Just none at all. It is evil, and "only evil continually." The result is wrath; and "the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God."—James 1: 20.

Would you have others say hard things of you? No. Then heed the admonition of the Savior: "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Matt. 7: 12.

JESTING. "And why should I stop that?" For several reasons. 1. It does you no good, and the time thus wasted ought to be spent to the glory of God. 2. Jests sometimes make enemies. 3. It is wrong. See Ephesians 5: 3, 4. The christian is expected to be watchful and prayerful; ever striving to let his light so shine before men that they may see his good works, and glorify his Father who is in heaven. Hence, there is no time for him to spend in jesting. Better stop.

FOOLISH TALKING. "And what is foolish talking?" That which does no one any good, but is "void of understanding or sound judgment," as the word is defined. Do you indulge? Well, I intend to be pointed, if you do wince. It is astonishing that sensible persons, or those that profess to be such, should stoop so low as to become "void of understanding or sound judgment," for the sake of engaging in ridiculous nonsense; yet such is the fact, and "foolish talking" is to be heard on every hand. Self seems to be uppermost in the minds of the merry and gay. All wish to excel in producing mirth; and the sharpest witticism makes the sharpest man. Hence professors and non-professors engage alike, and thus reproach is brought upon the cause of Christ. Stop it, and stop it now, for it is wrong. See Eph. 5: 3, 4.

DOING WRONG. "What is wrong?" That which is contrary to the will of God. This may be violated in many instances thoughtlessly; but still it is sin; "for sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John 3: 4. "See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days are evil." Eph. 5: 15, 16.

Sinner, stop doing wrong. "The wages of sin is death." Rom. 6: 23. "Why will ye die?" Pause and think! O, turn to Christ and live. G. W. GREEN.

PHTHISIC.

To the many who have written for that herb, I would say that I have sent all I have away, and as yet cannot find any more. I may have to wait till I can gather it. In the mean time, I will keep a strict account, and those who have sent me money shall be served first; so they need not fear of losing it.

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. R. Wood.

Bro. Grant:—I have been laboring in Nova Scotia since last March, in different sections; and though opposition has been very strong against the plain, simple teachings of God's word, I have been encouraged many times while seeing many who were bound down by tradition break away from the "traditions of the fathers," and are now rejoicing in the "blessed hope" of the soon coming of Christ. The ministers of the more popular churches were very docile, until some of their members began to see the truth, and come out and acknowledge it; when they began—at least some of them—to preach against it.

I went one evening to hear one preach. He ridiculed the idea of the wicked being burned up. He said he read of a river of life that would be there, and he thought that if the wicked were to become ashes, the water of life would mix with their ashes, and it would make lye; and wished to know who wanted to live in a heaven like that, and walk about in lye! After he got through, I thought it duty to ask for the privilege of saying a few words, and was denied. I then asked him if he would meet me in open debate, to which he at length consented, on certain conditions. The meeting was then dismissed, without stating the time, place, or questions. So I wrote him, stating the place of meeting, if agreeable, viz: the Baptist meeting-house, in which he preached every fortnight, giving him at the same time four questions, stating that I would discuss either, or all, as he saw fit; that it would take two or three evenings to discuss them. He agreed to take two, viz: the consciousness of the Spirit, and the punishment of the wicked.

We met, according to appointment, on the 30th of Oct., with a good gathering, for the news had spread far and near, including five or six ministers. The discussion commenced at two o'clock P. M., and lasted three hours, when he refused to meet me any longer. I appealed to them for more time, which was not granted, after which they dismissed the meeting, and cried "Victory!" Wonderful! to run, and then shout "Victory"!

My opponent has since given one lecture, to finish out his side of the story, and this evening gives another. He finds, no doubt, that it is easier to argue the question alone, than to have an opponent, and a weak one at that, for such I consider myself to be. However, they are doing more for the cause of truth than they can do against it, for one of their members, by hearing the lecture, was convinced that he was wrong, and now sees that man is but mortal.

I made a tour up the country, was gone a few weeks, and with Bro. Ingham held a few meetings on Phinney's mountain, and had a good time. Were not there long before I heard that a Baptist minister intended giving a lecture against the "no-soul doctrine," as he called it; and I went to hear, it being about seven miles from where I was laboring. There was a complete jam to see this new doctrine overthrown. The speaker took his stand with two of your tracts in his hand, viz: "The Soul: what is it?" and "Spirit: what is it?" He misrepresented them to the people, and I knew it. He then asked two questions, and wished to know if there were any present who could answer them. I waited patiently until he got through, and then asked the privilege of saying a few words. He called for my name; I told him, and was denied.

I then arose and told the congregation that the speaker had misrepresented some things in the tracts, which was rather too much for the Reverend gentleman to bear. He challenged me at once to come forward and prove my statement, at the same time saying that I had not got a dunce to deal with. I told him that I could prove it if he would give me a chance, and at the same time stepped up to the desk by the side of the speaker. He then took up the books and with an angry air threw them upon the desk again, telling me to show where he had misrepresented them. I took up one of them, to show to the people the statements he had made, but was interrupted with, "Stop! stop! not a word! there are the books, read them!" I again commenced, when he again interrupted me with, "Stop! stop! there are the books, read them!" I asked him if he would sit down and give me a chance to prove my statements, and he answered, "No! I stand on my own platform, and will stand there"!

When I saw that it was impossible for me to state anything in that direction, I asked him if he would allow me to answer the questions he asked, and he denied me the privilege. I asked him if he would meet me and discuss the question, to which he answered, "No!" I asked, Why? He said, "There were enough to believe any new thing, even though it were not truth," and closed.

We read of scoffers in the last days, and when we find them among the preachers, what can we expect of the people?

I returned to Phinney mountain, and with Bro. Ingham labored some time. Amid all the opposition, the Lord blesses his truth. The saints were refreshed, backsliders reclaimed, sinners converted to God's truth, and others have given up former views and are now rejoicing in the blessed hope and soon coming of Christ. I baptized two in the Bay of Fundy, and left them in the hands of the Lord. May he bless them, and keep them from the evils that are in the world, is the prayer of your unworthy Bro.,

Hillsburgh, N. S. Edwin R. Wood.

From Sr. M. A. Cook.

Bro. Grant:—The "Young Pilgrim" has been received here at the poor-house, and those that can read like it much. It and the Crisis are just the food I like them to have, and I will just say, we are not troubled much with preachers, although I have often invited those of different denominations to come and preach to the poor, that the door was open if any one thought it their duty to preach or teach the gospel. But they all stand aloof, and I suppose it is more on account of my belief than any thing else.

Dear brother, I was a Methodist eighteen years, but I always doubted many subjects, until God awakened my slumbering conscience and I was determined to search for truth as for hidden treasures. Thus I came to my Heavenly Father, asked him to lead me in the way of everlasting life and give me a hungering and thirsting after his word. My prayer was answered.

At this time I had never heard an Advent sermon and did not know what they believed. The first thing that was made plain to me, was that Christ would sit upon the throne of David when he comes the second time; I became established on this good foundation. Then the promise made to Abraham and his seed, and one truth after another shone forth to my mind. I did not know that there was another person on this earth that believed or understood it as I did. I then felt for the first time that I was a stranger and pilgrim on the earth, but thanks be to the God of truth, I soon found that I was not alone on my journey, for I have since found many of like faith. But when I came to understand the gospel, I found that I could not be a Methodist. So I came straight out and told them so, and gave them my reasons for changing my mind. I now feel free, and hope ever to remain so.

May these imperfectly written lines cheer you in your labor for the ingathering of the household of faith. Yours in truth,

Verona. Mrs. M. A. Cook.

From Bro. J. C. Bennett.

Bro. Grant:—About one year ago I embraced the Advent doctrine, under the preaching of H. G. McCullock; and by the influences of God's Spirit I was made willing to embrace the present truth, that the same literal Jesus who led his disciples out to the mount of Olives, and ascended up to heaven, should in like manner return to redeem his people. Jesus has purchased our redemption, and it is drawing near.

Since embracing these truths I have been endeavoring to square my life by the Bible. I have taken it as the man of my counsel, and have given up all sectarian creeds and traditions of the fathers, lest I should make the commandments of God of none effect. Feeling so blest by these truths, I am anxious to help to spread them.

I have given up the evil practice of using tobacco, after using it for thirty years. I mean to make a better use of my Lord's money. I hope every smoking brother and sister will do likewise. May God help us all to do every duty.

"The dearest idol I have known,
Whate'er that idol be,
Help me to tear it from thy throne,
And worship only Thee."

Yours, in hope of deliverance,
John C. Bennett.

From Bro. P. Alling.

Bro. Grant:—The results of our late meeting were highly favorable. The kind and forcible manner of presenting the truth by Bro. and Sr. Mansfield seemed, in a great measure, to disarm opposition and to commend the great and precious doctrines of the speedy coming of Christ, the literal resurrection of the dead, etc., to all who heard them, and at the same time calling out large and attentive audiences. The truth seemed to take effect in the hearts of not a few, and I trust will prove the power of God to their salvation. Already some fruits are visible.

The next day after the meeting closed the indications were so favorable that Bro. and Sr. Mansfield conceived it to be duty to change some of their more western appointments, and return next week to continue their labors as long as the interest of the cause may seem to require. I hope all who have access to the throne of grace, will remember the cause in this place, and unite their prayers with ours, that the truth may triumph gloriously, and many precious souls be converted to Christ.

Norwalk, O., March 24th. P. Alling.

From Sr. C. A. Rush.

Bro. Grant:—I have been a reader of the Crisis for the last two years, and think, as many others do, that it is the best paper I have ever read. It is doing me good. I thank God to-day that I ever became a reader of it. I am sorry to say there are but few here who read it,—but few who are interested in the glorious truths it teaches.

I wish you would use your influence to scatter some of your eastern preachers out west. We need some more energetic, earnest, true men to preach through the west. I think much good might be done. Your Sister,

Barry, Ill. C. A. Rush.

From Bro. H. Morrill.

Bro. Grant:—Our number here in Kingston is small. We have a meeting-house, built by one brother mostly, which takes all he gets to pay for it. Our church is poor; so of course we do not have preaching but seldom, as we are not able to give ministers what they ought to have; but we keep up our meetings, and have three services on the Sabbath, one on Wednesday evening, and a church conference once a month. So you see we are trying to keep the light burning, and let the people of the place know we believe Jesus is soon coming. Yours looking for Jesus,

Kingston, N. H. H. Morrill.

From Edwin L. Aunger.

Bro. Grant:—I believe the World's Crisis is the best religious paper in the world. I beg to say I have got hold of a few copies, which, having read, I sent to my friends in England. They say they should like to get a copy every week, for it is the best paper they have ever seen. I beg to send a dollar for a single copy for six months. Shall send them to England weekly. Think I shall be able to get some new subscribers from there.

Bro. N. B. Bennett, Sandy Hook, Conn., writes:—"I joined the M. E. Church three years ago, and since that time I have searched the Scriptures for the doctrine that I heard preached from time to time, and found it not. But the doctrine of the Adventists I find on every page."

Bro. D. S. Clark, Amboy, Ill., writes:—"I have found, in my travels, a brother who has been a preacher with the Christian Church some forty years, and holds the same faith with us. He wishes the Crisis, and would, no doubt, do good with it among his people. Please send to the address of"———, etc.

ERRATA.

Bro. Grant:—In Death and Resurrection, number two, you make me contradict myself, by leaving out the words in the first or second line, "The fallacy of the assumption." It can be remedied in part by reading the words in the third line from the top, "is not penal" is penal, leaving out the word not, as it contradicts the whole tenor of the article. Then again, in the twentieth and twenty-first lines from the top, where it reads, "this personal act," it should read their personal acts.

Again on the thirty-second line from the top, for "frightened," read frittered. Again in forty-eighth line from the top, where it reads, "from the dead," read from the death. Again on the second column, fourth line from the top, where it reads, "as distant from," read as distinct from. C. F. Sweet.

Obituaries.

Willie Hefner.

Died, in Butte, Cal., Feb. 15th, 1864, Willie, second son of Philip and Kate Hefner, aged seven years, six months and nineteen days.

Willie's mind showed signs of early maturity. His sensitive nature and aptness to learn, together with a gentle, affectionate disposition, made him the idol of doting parents, and a favorite with all who knew him. But cruel disease fastened its hold upon him, and medical skill was of no avail. He was sensible to the last. Through his illness he manifested a patient, uncomplaining spirit, not often witnessed in the grown; not a murmuring word escaped his lips. And often, when he saw his mother in tears, he would try to comfort her with the assurance "that he would soon get well." But he is sleeping now. Though it is natural to mourn for the dead, we cannot mourn as those who have no hope. For our Savior said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." May the God of all grace sanctify the affliction to the bereaved parents, and prepare them to meet the beloved when they shall come from the enemy's land.

"We can but yearn, through length of days,
For something lost we fancied ours;
We'll miss thee, darling, when the spring
Has touched the world to flowers;
O, rare pale lips! O, clouded eyes!
O, sweet blue eyes grown dim!
Ah, well! this little lock of hair
Is all that's left of him!
Is all of him that we can keep
For loving kisses, and the thought
Of him and death may teach us more
Than all our life hath taught!

And of death! we question not;
Who asks of heaven 'Why does it rain?'
Angel, we bless thee, for thy kiss
Hath hushed the lips of pain!
No 'Wherefore,' or 'To what good end,'
Shall out of doubt and anguish creep
Into our thoughts. We bow our heads;
'He giveth his beloved sleep.'"

E. B. Wilson.

Adah Tobing.

Died in Livermore, Feb. 10th, 1864, Adah, wife of Joseph Tobing, aged seventy-one years.

The subject of this notice became interested in the christian religion in 1816, and united with the Baptist church. In her last sickness, she was much interested in the doctrine of the resurrection, and requested her companion to read to her the Scriptures relating to the literal resurrection of the dead, and the future condition of the righteous. The writer endeavored to comfort the mourners from a text of Scripture found in John 11: 25.

I hail the glad morning, when Jesus shall reign,
No more of our loved ones by death will be slain;
He'll awake all his people who sleep in the tomb,
And make them immortal forever to bloom.

Frances Adeline Burditt.

On Monday, March 28th, at the age of thirteen years and ten months, Frances A., daughter of James and Mary Burditt of Southboro, Mass., fell asleep.

Four of Bro. and Sr. Burditt's children have been seized by that cruel enemy, death. But they sorrow not even as others that have no hope. They believe that God brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, and now, having the assurance that our Redeemer liveth, they know their little ones shall live also, for God will bring them with him at the appearing of Jesus Christ. Funeral attended by the writer on Wednesday March 30th.

"Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

F. H. Burbank.

Ervin Cates.

Fell asleep at Berlin, N. H., Jan. 31st, 1863, Ervin, youngest son of Andrew and Fanny Cates, aged five years, and four months.

Thus with the ending of the past year death for the fourth time has visited Sr. Cates, and taken away a husband and three sons; but she mourns not as those that have no hope. Words of comfort by the writer, from John 11: 23.

Farewell, dearest brother, and calm be thy rest
In the stillness of that dreamless sleep;
No grief can disturb thee, no danger molest,
In that chamber so silent and deep.

C. N. Buzzell.

Fanny Aims.

Died in Hartford, Feb. 6th, 1864, of lung fever, Sr. Fanny Aims, aged ninety years, seven months, and eighteen days.

The christian religion has been a comfort to her for many years. Often has she said she could trust all in the hands of the Savior, in whom she rests in hope of a resurrection to immortal life. Sermon by the writer, from John 5: 28.

E. M. Haggett.

Lucretia Osborn.

Died in East Windsor, near W. H. Point, Ct., March 22d, 1864, Lucretia Osborn, aged ninety-four years, two months, and thirteen days.

She was formerly a Baptist, but early embraced the Advent doctrine. She was a woman of strong mind and remarkable health. She took a violent cold, and fever setting in, she soon rested from all her labors. Funeral services by W. H. Bancroft.

S. P. Babcock.

Herbert H. Hall.

Died in Biddeford, Me., March 24th, 1864, Herbert H., son of John and —— Hall, aged six months and six days.

A lovely flower "just nipped as it began to blossom in the parents' view." It will bloom to fade no more.

Sermon by the writer, from 2 Kings 4: 26,—"Is it well with the child?" A. W. Sibley.

Philip Wilson.

Died in Utica, Winona Co., Minn., on the 14th day of last February, Bro. Philip Wilson.

He died happy in the Lord, with a strong hope of a blessed immortality, and an endless life, at the second appearing of our great Life Giver. He left a wife and three children to mourn his loss.

Eld. Wm. Sweet.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool March 26th, Queenstown 27th.

The London journals contain nothing important.

The Russians were barricading the principal railroad stations. It is reported that great coolness is existing between Russia and France, the former having acquired the conviction that France is plotting mischief in European Turkey.

It is said that Queen Victoria, in the exercise of the royal prerogative of war or peace making, has firmly assured both Lord Palmerston and Earl Derby that no events shall force her to declare war against her own children and other kin in Germany. Hence it is said all the English Parliamentary debates avoid a declaration in favor of war for Denmark.

DOMESTIC.

Our Conference in Boston.—The following notice of our first meeting is from the Boston Daily Herald, April 6th, 1864:—

"Conference of the Adventists. A general conference of those who believe in the personal and speedy coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the immortality of the righteous alone, and the utter destruction of the wicked, was inaugurated at the Lowell Street chapel, corner of Lowell and Causeway Streets, last evening. The audience was of moderate magnitude, and the hearers were very earnest in their attention to the remarks of Elder Edwin Burnham, who preached the initiatory sermon from Daniel 12: 3,—'And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever.' It is proposed to continue the meetings day and evening during the remainder of the week, and to discuss fully the various theories peculiar to the creed. All preachers are expected to be present during the session."

☞ New York, March 22d. A letter from Japan in the Tribune, reports the burning of 300 houses and 250 warehouses in the city of Oasaca, with a loss of from 500 to 1,000 persons. The fire lasted three days.

Lunar Phenomenon.—On Thursday evening an interesting and curious lunar phenomenon was witnessed by a number of people in Inverness. The moon made her appearance in the midst of a brilliant halo, bearing on her disc a dark shadow in form somewhat like a cross, and accompanied by two exact reflections of herself, one on each side, the three being in a line.—Inverness Courier, Scotland.

Reported Calling out of the Militia.—A Washington dispatch to a New York paper says that the Government intends to call out all the organized militia of the States for sixty days, to occupy certain fortified points, and the militia of the District of Columbia will be called to occupy the forts around Washington, so that the veterans can be put into the field.—Boston Journal.

Items.

☞ A Cincinnati millionaire recently declared a decided preference for country boys for clerks. He said that there were plenty of young men in fine cloth calling for situations, but they did not suit him. He preferred a very different kind of stock, coming from the country in rough clothes, for something could be made out of them.

☞ From present indications there is little doubt that the maple sugar crop of 1864 will vastly exceed that made in previous years. In all probability the crop of maple sugar at the North for the present year will reach 25,000,000 pounds, worth at the low estimate of fifteen cents per pound, $3,750,000.

☞ Liebig, the illustrious chemist, says on the subject of the oidium in vines and the potato disease, that the cause is not in the atmosphere, as many people supposed, but in want of vigor and an exhaustion of the soil, which defect may be remedied by the use of bone powder and ashes.

☞ The King of Bavaria, the news of whose death is announced by the China, was fifty-four years of age. He ascended the throne, in 1848, with the title of Maximilian Joseph, and was a brother of Otho, the late King of Greece. In early life he married a princess of Prussia.

☞ Letters from Europe report that all kinds of titles of nobility are to be conferred by Maximilian on the secessionists who, in large numbers, attend him from Paris to Mexico. Dr. Gwin is to be a duke.

☞ A price current in Richmond papers, with other information, shows that in the Richmond market flour is selling at $150 a barrel; apples at $80 a barrel; butter $5 a pound; beef $1 a pound, etc.

☞ The number of rebels killed at Gettysburg is found to have been not less than seven thousand. Farmers in that vicinity, plowing their fields, are turning up many corpses in places away from the recognized burial spots.

☞ A Confederate dollar is worth, at the present time, just exactly five cents, which makes the pay of a private in the rebel armies fifty-five cents a month.

☞ There are now forty thousand sick in the military hospitals throughout the country; seven thousand are in the hospitals in the department of Washington.

☞ The number of people who visited the Metropolitan Fair at New York on Tuesday was 13,487, and $43,000 were taken at the door for tickets alone.

☞ In England the coffins from over-crowded burial grounds are dug up, dried, and ground, and used as an ingredient in the adulteration of coffee.

☞ Owen Lovejoy, the member of Congress from the Fifth Illinois district, died in Brooklyn at half-past eleven o'clock Friday night.

☞ The shipmasters of Ellsworth, Me., have agreed not to carry any intoxicating liquor into that town as freight.

☞ It is stated that the President has sent for Gen. Fremont to give him an important command.

☞ Nearly two feet of snow fell at Fortress Monroe last week.

Conference Notice.

The annual meeting of the Illinois Advent Christian Conference will be held at Wyanet, Bureau county, Ill., commencing Tuesday evening, May 17th, and holding over Sunday. Elder J. V. Himes and several other preaching brethren will be present to preach the word.

Dear brethren and sisters, come to this feast in the name of our soon coming King. Let us make one grand rally in this glorious cause. We hope all will make a special effort to attend; and come with hearts richly imbued with the spirit of faith and love, to labor in the cause of our blessed Redeemer. What we do to save our fellow-men must be done very soon. Dear brethren in Christ, let us consecrate ourselves anew for this great work.

The meeting will be held in the Mission Tent. Wyanet is on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad. Those coming on the Rock Island Railroad will stop at Pond Creek, where a team will be ready to convey friends to the encampment. Those coming on the Illinois Central Railroad from the north will change cars at Mendota, taking the Burlington for Wyanet. Those coming from the south on the Central, will change at La Salle, taking the Rock Island Road for Pond Creek.

We sincerely hope and expect that all our ministering brethren of this conference will be present in person, or report by letter at this meeting. We trust every church will send delegates. This will be a favorable time for any who wish to unite with the conference. Again we say, come one, come all; as we hope for great good as the result of this meeting.

In behalf of the conference,
N. W. Spencer, President.
C. W. Smith, Secretary.

Notice.

The Lord willing, a conference of Free Sabbath Adventists, organized under the name of "The Church of the First Born," will be held at Portland, Me., commencing Thursday, May 5th, and continuing over the Sabbath and first day. All lovers of truth, whether they see exactly with us or not, are cheerfully invited to attend. Strangers coming into the city will inquire for H. A. Weston, 432 Congress Street. S. C. Hancock.

P. S. The Lord willing, I will preach in Westerly, R. I., at the Quarry meeting-house, Sunday, April 24th, also at Central Hall, East Boston, Thursday evening, April 28th, and over the following Sunday. S. C. Hancock.

Notice.

The Lord willing, I will endeavor to be at the conference to be held at Wyanet, Bureau Co., Ill., May 17th, at the beginning, if possible. Will the brethren at Nevada, Story Co., Ia., make the arrangements for their contemplated grove meeting, to which I have been invited, so that I can go from the conference to the meeting.

N. M. Henry, Bunker Hill, Ill.

P. S. The Bro. from New Britain, Conn., who sent me the greenbacks, by Bro. Herron, has my sincere thanks. They were just what I needed to pay my fare to Iowa. The Lord reward him for his generosity. N. M. Henry.

Notice.

Eld. Edwin Burnham will commence a series of meetings with the Free Evangelical Church of North Attleboro, Mass., on Sunday, April 24th, and continue until May 3d. All in the vicinity who desire to be revived, reclaimed, converted, or who feel ready to unite in a faithful effort to "pull men out of the fire," are earnestly invited to attend. The prayers of all christians are solicited in behalf of the meeting. C. Cunningham.

Wanted.

An 1855 chart, with explanation book. If any one has the above to spare, please send me word, and the terms, as a Bro. who needs it, does not know where to get one. Address Eld. Peter S. W. Deyo, Strawberry Point, Iowa.

Western Grove Meetings.

As the time is nearing for the commencement of these meetings, Wisconsin friends desiring them in their localities, can correspond with me at Baraboo, Wisconsin. W. Sheldon.

Illinois Advent Christian Conference.

The Lord willing, this conference will hold its next annual session at Wyanet, Bureau Co., Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 25th, at 2 o'clock P. M. Wyanet is on the Burlington and Quincy R. R. As this is our annual meeting, all of our ministering brethren are requested to be present, or report by letter. Brn. and Srs., remember this yearly gathering, and make a special effort to attend. Make the meeting a subject of prayer, and come with a determination to work, and then the Lord will meet with and bless us. C. W. Smith, Sec. of Conf.

Wisconsin Grove Meeting, and Quarterly Conference.

Our next quarterly meeting will be held in connection with a grove meeting, on Castle Prairie, Sauk Co., Wis., near the residence of Brn. Thomas and Pierce, to begin June 3rd, and hold over Lord's day. Several ministers will be present.

W. Sheldon.

Notice.

Bro. G. F. Locke, East Weare, N. H., who has the excellent works on tea, coffee, and tobacco, by Dr. Alcott, all of which were advertised to be sold by him, post paid, for 30 cts., wishes to say that the postage is more than he at first supposed; so that he will be obliged to ask 34 cts. for the set. Every one should read these works.—Ed.

Notice.

There will be preaching in City Hall, Bath, Me., Sunday, April 17th. Bro. L. L. Howard is requested, and expected to be there. R. R. York.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—

Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive one third the value of the money sent, in any of our books and tracts they may select. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollars' worth; for twelve dollars, four dollars' worth, etc.

Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

Miles Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

NEBO.—DEUT. 34.

Moses obeyed the Lord's command,
To view from Pisgah's top the land
That lay beyond the Jordan's flood;
Attended by no earthly one,
He stood where beams of glory shone,
Alone with God the meek man stood!

Can Death impart the magic power,
That disembodied souls may soar
And view the scenes of earth and heaven?
Why, then, is Moses called to gaze,
Before he dies, upon the place
To all the tribes of Israel given?

Moses must look before he dies,
For knowledge, wisdom or device
Are not perceived in death's domain:
The dead repose in sea and earth,
Till the last day shall bring them forth
To stand in consciousness again.

There Moses learned the chief design
Of Israel's rest in Palestine;
It typified the world to come,—
The earth to paradise restored,
On which the ransomed of the Lord
Shall find an everlasting home.

Let faithful watchmen now unite,
And shout as from the mountain's height—
"O weary Zion, joy to thee!
Thy Joshua comes, to lead thee o'er
Far, far beyond dread Jordan's shore,
To rest in immortality."

DEATH AND RESURRECTION.—NO. 3.

(This was written for the Harbinger and refused.)

Says our affirmant, shall not the judge of all the earth do right? If it is right to judge men twice, and kill them twice, it is hard to see it. We remark it would be hard indeed to see the justice of executing the same law on the same person or persons, for the same offence, twice; but if the offence be committed by the same individual twice, he having first been found guilty of crime, as an accomplice with others, who having (some one of them), as the testimony fully showed, committed murder, the whole gang being accessory, now, I ask, is it not justice to execute upon the accomplice as really as the one who actually performs the murder, although he be but an accessory to the crime; and if so, when he is dead and the law fully executed, if some one who had the power condescends in kindness to raise him to life again, would not the act be a worthy one, a gracious and kind one? And now suppose this grace of life, bestowed by such a friend, in such a case, were forfeited by this person going, not in a gang with others, not as an accomplice; but with his own individual hands, and putting to death his fellow. Is it hard to see that he is worthy of death the second time, inflicted according to the same law? No, but quite the reverse, as it appears to me.

But it may be objected, that man is not in his resurrection life, and hence the illustration is not a parallel; but man being informed by surrounding facts, and also resurrection, of his having lost his present life, as an accomplice with Adam's sin, and also being informed that God in his grace has "abolished death," over the race, sees the relation he sustains to divine government, and a future life. He also sees that his sins, personally committed against God in this life cannot be a forfeiture of this life; for that was forfeited by his being an accessory to the sin of Adam. Hence he sees, if any life is by his own sins forfeited, it must be the resurrection life. Perhaps "some man will say," yes, the resurrection life is the life forfeited by the personal sins of Adam's race; and so the "wicked and ungodly" never receive it. Well, if a man can lose that life which he never had, and that God never designed he should have, it is hard to see it. But if it be admitted that the resurrection life is the one forfeited and lost by the unpardoned sins of Adam's sons and daughters, then the magnanimous grace and wisdom of God will be seen in his righteous administration, both in abolishing the death entailed on the race, and also in executing the "second death," on all the unholy and rebellious.

I will now give some positive proof from Revelations for the re-living of all men, good and bad. Rom. 5: 18,—"Therefore as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation. Even so (in the same universal manner) by the righteousness of One the free gift came upon all men unto JUSTIFICATION OF LIFE." Very well, says the objector, they may all be justified to life from the death entailed by Adam, and yet never obtain the life justified. In that case, will God be more slack in executing the law pertaining to his grace, than that pertaining to his wrath? As he does now visit death on the holy, and also on the unoffending infant. Will he not be equally prompt in the manifestation of his grace in the world to come, by the execution of the law of justification?

Hear Paul again, nineteenth verse,—"For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, (how could they be made sinners, and their death as a consequence not be penal for that first offence?), so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." How many? Just as many as were made sinners by that first man's offence. What then, says the objector, hinders universal salvation? Nothing hinders the universal salvation of Adam's race from the death penalty that he entailed. Hence we say universal righteousness, universal salvation; that is, if there had been no sin committed by Adam's race after his transgression, Christ's redemption would be not only universal, but also eternal. But as it is, he is the Savior of all men (from the condemnation by Adam), and especially of them that believe," for the believer having sinned he stands exposed to the "second death;" but he believes, repents, and is baptized into Christ for the remission of sins, and so being pardoned, the death to which he was exposed by his own individual sin is not executed, and hence, his is justly called an especial salvation.

The Syriac version of Rom. 5: 18 reads. —"Therefore as on account of one, condemnation was to all men, so on account of the righteousness of one, will the victory unto life be to all men." Not only are they justified to life, but Paul says they will get the victory of life. If so, nothing but the "second death" can remove them from life again.

Paul further says on this subject, 1 Cor. 15: 22,—"For as in Adam all die, EVEN so in Christ shall all be made alive." McKnight renders this passage,—"Therefore as by Adam all die, so also by Christ shall all be made alive." Ye who ask for one positive text for the re-living of all men, is not that positive and to the point? But listen again to the Syriac version, twenty-second verse,—"For as it was by Adam that all men die, so also by the Messiah they all live." Paul then is not against himself, but what he says in writing to the Romans he corroborates in writing to the Corinthians. Prof. Whiting gives in the margin the word by instead of "in."

So we regard the re-living of all men a truth to be proclaimed, not as a doubtful, uncertain thing. But a tithe of the testimony on the point has not yet been considered, and cannot be without extending these numbers to a considerable length. C. F. SWEET.

HELL.

"MEDITATIONS FOR SATURDAY."

From a Catholic Prayer Book.

"Consider that hell has no end. There all kinds of sufferings are found, and for all eternity. Hundreds of years, yea, thousands of years will pass away in these torments, and yet hell will be always as just beginning. Hundreds of thousands, hundreds of millions of years and of centuries will pass, and hell will still be at its commencement.

If at this hour an angel should carry the tidings to one of the damned that God had consented to free him from hell,—when? Hear! when so many millions of centuries had passed away as there are drops of water in the ocean, leaves on the trees, sands in the sea and in the earth. You shudder at this, but still 'tis true. Such tidings would give greater joy to that soul, than you would feel if you were told that that you had become the king of a mighty kingdom. Yes, certainly! for that poor damned sinner would say, It is true that many centuries must first pass away, but at length a day will come in which my sufferings will end.

Alas! all these centuries will pass away, but hell will ever be beginning anew. All these centuries may be multiplied by the sands, and raindrops, and leaves, but hell is still beginning anew.

My christian friend, think well of this, and consider that hell is waiting for you if you sin. Even now its horrid flames are burning beneath your feet, and oh! while you are reading these words, how many souls are falling into it."

My God! what wonder is it that infidelity is running rampant the world over? What wonder is it that the name of the Almighty is blasphemed by nine-tenths of Christendom! What wonder is it that the Bible is considered by the majority as an inexplicable mystery, and by many as "no better than a last year's almanac?" What wonder is it that religion is so hated by the masses of civilized nations? What wonder is it that Tom Paine wrote his famous works against the divine origin of the word of God, or that Voltaire scouted the idea of (such) a God? Verily, will not these two men rise up in judgment against those who endorse and promulgate such a hellish doctrine as the above? Paine and Voltaire were, in one sense of the word, right. There never was such a Bible, nor such a God!

The above doctrine is the "doctrine of devils" in the broadest sense of the word. Its origin is devilish, and its results are devilish. His satanic majesty never got up a deeper plot or a baser deception, from the time he made his first trial upon Eve down to the present moment, than when he made nineteen-twentieths of the human family, civilized and uncivilized, enlightened and barbarous, believe that they had an "immortal soul," and that God Almighty was such a tyrant as to forever broil in the flames of hell those of his unfortunate creatures who failed to get into paradise!

He failed to prove to our first parents that they should not die as he had told them, consequently he set about devising a plan whereby he could make them think that he was right after all. Therefore he told them that only their bodies should die, but the "immortal soul" that God breathed into them, that should never die.

He further told them or their descendants, that God was such an unfeeling monster, if they did not do all he commanded them, he would cast them into liquid fire, to be tormented as long as he had an existence, which would be to all eternity! And what was the result? Why, that man's heart was filled with hatred towards such a being as the Almighty was represented. He departed from the true and living God, and worshiped any thing and every thing in preference to such a being, and finally even denied that there was a God. Fearful judgments fell upon man to undeceive him, but without effect.

That old serpent "the devil" so thoroughly "deceived the nations," that it finally repented the Lord God that he had made man, and he resolved to destroy him from off the face of the earth. There were but eight souls who had not been deceived by him, and who escaped the waters of that terrible flood! But as the earth was once more peopled, Satan saw how well his plan had worked upon those before the deluge, and he determined to try it again on those after the deluge. He has done so, and the results have been almost precisely the same.

He has the proud satisfaction of knowing that the world at large believe that he told the truth in the garden, and that God told a lie; and to make assurance doubly sure, he tells men that they can now hold converse with the spirits of the dead, with good or bad. O, how he shakes his sides with devilish glee as he hears the name of God blasphemed, his word a mock and derision, and his few children despised and persecuted. He gloats over the brilliant idea and unparalleled success of his plan in bringing the professed churches of God to that point where they can go hand in hand with his avowed servants to those gambling assemblies which he cunningly denominates "CHRISTIAN Sanitary Fairs," "Church Festivals," etc. He relishes with keenest zest the readiness with which all classes conclude that he is "not half as black as he is painted;" while his satellites clap their hands for very joy as they see a professed minister of the gospel ascend the rostrum to bring into disrepute before a gaping, laughing multitude a divine ordinance of God.

Yes, having deceived the churches, the arch fiend is now making the most strenuous efforts to "deceive if it were possible the very elect!" Almost all Christendom is actively engaged in spreading his original proclamation, "Thou shalt NOT surely die!" and he thinks by a little strategy he will be able to convince the remainder. And will he succeed? Just as sure as he exists he will do it, unless we do as we are commanded. And what is that? Why, "put on the whole armor of God . . . having (our) loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness, and (our) feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, and above all, taking the shield of faith, whereby we shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked (one), and take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the WORD OF GOD. Praying always, with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit."

By this means, and this means only, will we be able to stand. Let us watch and pray, lest at any time we fall. N. L. WILLARD.

PRAYER.—No. 4.

"Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss."—James 4: 3.

The Savior said at one time, "This people draweth nigh unto me with their lips, but their heart is far from me."

The language of the Savior and of the apostle is applicable to the great mass of religionists. Many there be who ask and receive not. Let us consider for a moment the examples which come under our own observation.

Think of the prayers offered in our weekly meetings. How many blessings are asked of God which, if bestowed, would overwhelm the petitioner with amazement. Why? Because they have been asking the Lord to do for them what they have not the slightest expectation of receiving. They asked to be baptized with the Holy Ghost. What if their prayer was heard, and in answer thereto the glorious outpouring of the Spirit was experienced, with its accompanying results? Would they not be surprised? They ask for an entire purification of the heart, to be made holy, sanctified throughout, soul, body and spirit Supposing the cleansing blood was applied, and they made entirely free from the carnal mind, completely saved; would not the appearance of such a change astonish them? They had asked, it is true, for perfect purity, but they were not expecting an answer now, nor indeed at any specific time in the future. There was indeed no real earnest longing of the soul for this purity; they prayed only as a matter of form; certain set forms of speech have become stereotyped, and every one adopts them, the mass without being impressed with them at all; they are not the fervent utterances of their own soul, and, although they have expressed them hundreds of times, they wonder not that they are unanswered; they have never asked with a fervent expectation of receiving the things for which they pray. If they had been in earnest, if they really felt the need of what they ask God to bestow, if they were resolved on obtaining the specific blessing prayed for, and of being now heard and answered, they would have been long since rejoicing in the actual possession, and witnessed thereof to others.

God has pledged himself to bestow whatever the suppliant desires when he prays, if he will but exercise appropriating faith, for this is the kind implied in the language—"Believe that ye receive," and ye "shall have." Supposing those who pray in the social meetings were united in thus believing when they prayed; what think you would be the result? Would they go away as cold and barren as they came? I tell you nay! The result would be such as that referred to previously; "And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." Such prayers bring present blessings.

Do we realize as we ought what the word of God says in regard to unbelieving prayers? "Without faith it is impossible to please God." Think of that,—"impossible"! No matter how well arranged the sentences, how eloquent the pleadings, or how much in harmony with the divine will are the things asked; if faith does not bear the petition up to the throne, it will never be heard in heaven. Better not pray at all than draw nigh with the lips while the heart is far from being in the petition. We may pray morning, noon and night with the most undeviating faithfulness, but if we believe not when we pray, we are just as destitute of the grace of God as one who has no form of prayer; "for he that cometh to God must believe," and "without faith it is impossible to please" him.

One who habituates himself to daily prayer, will probably be more of a moralist than one who lives in its neglect; but we fear such are in greater danger, from the fact that they feel more safe; they flatter themselves with the delusive hope of being saved because of the regard they have for the outward forms of religious service, while as yet they know not the joys which flow from a present acceptance and salvation. The suppliant who in the exercise of a present faith approaches God, really enjoys communion with him; he is conscious of access within the veil. The language of the beloved disciple is that of his own heart,—"This is the confidence we have in him, that if we ask anything according to his will he heareth us; and if he hear us, we know that we have the petitions desired of him." They are as conscious of receiving answers from heaven as they are of their own existence. But, alas! how many can recall scarcely a time when they received a direct response to a specific request, while others can only remember here and there a special manifestation to their souls.

While we have been reflecting on the "exceeding great and precious promises" given us in the Word,—promises adapted to our every condition and necessity,—and contemplate the illustrations so often presented of the power of prayer, we feel deeply our own lack of faith; it seems as though we had hardly begun to know the blessedness of prayer, the privilege of prayer, the efficacy of prayer; and it is to stir up our own heart to a more lively faith and deeper experience, as well as to direct other minds in the same channel, that we have written upon this subject.

BEARING THE CROSS.

Much is said about bearing the cross. Some seem to think speaking in meeting is the cross they must bear; and when this is done think little more about the cross. Speaking in meeting we apprehend is a very small item in bearing the cross. Men are all naturally in love with this present world. To this world we must be crucified. Crucifixion is a hard death; but few are willing to die such a death. There is no other way of entering the kingdom of God. We must be "crucified unto the world, and the world unto us. "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." 1 John 2: 14.

A believing view of the Lord Jesus Christ will aid us greatly to become crucified to this world; who became poor, was despised of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, endured reproach, resisted temptation, though he suffered being tempted; when he was reviled, resisted not again, murmured not, though wounded, bruised, put to grief, and his soul made an offering for sin; scourged, spit upon, his hands and feet pierced with nails, his soul in agony,—all this he bore, and no lisp of impatience escaped him. Would you be crucified unto the world? then go and learn of him. Contemplate his poverty, life, sufferings, resignation, patience, his loving and forgiving spirit, till the whole mind is humbled within you. Then we can realize this portion of holy writ,—"If so be we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." Rom. 8: 17.

If we would bear our cross, and be crucified unto the world, REMEMBER every trial of our life, spiritual, personal, direct or indirect, is by the appointment and permission of God, who willeth not the death of the sinner, but who is seeking by all these trials to crucify us unto the world, and to fit us for the everlasting kingdom of his dear Son. It is one grand feature of bearing the cross, to bear all the trials of life without a complaint.

All things work together for good to them that love God. Happy the soul who is constantly looking to God for grace to bear every cross. "My grace is sufficient for thee," saith the Redeemer. We should praise God for every trial and cross we bear. "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations," James 1: 2. Most persons count it all sorrow when they fall into divers temptation. We need pruning to become fruitful. Be patient in all things. That is bearing the cross. Then when Christ appears the cross-bearer shall wear the CROWN.

THE MEN FOR THE TIMES.

Give us the men of steel,
And the arm of fearless might,
And the strength of will that is ready still
To battle for the right.

Give us the eye to weep
That honest tear of feeling,
That shuts not down, for the world's dread frown,
The genuine heart revealing.

Give us the mind to feel
The sufferings of another,
And fearless power, in the dying hour,
To help a suffering brother.

Give us the clear, cool brain,
That is never asleep or dozing,
But, sparkling ever with bold endeavor,
Wakes the world from its prosing.

Ah! give us the nerve of steel,
And the hand of fearless might,
And the heart that can love and feel,
And the head that is always right.

For the foeman is now abroad,
And the earth is filled with crimes,
Let it be our prayer to God—
Oh! give us the men for the times.

THE POPULAR CLERGY OF OUR DAY.

NUMBER ONE.

They say the Lord has sent them to preach his gospel, while they are filled to the brim and covered up with the world. They say he has called them to preach peace and good will to man. Instead of that, war, war, is the alpha and omega of their discourses. They profess to take the Bible for their guide, and while that declares that Christ sent his disciples forth without scrip or purse, these must have both. While the Bible declares that he that preaches the gospel shall live of the gospel, they dare not trust in all the gospel they possess for one week's living. Instead of going forth and preaching the gospel, and trusting in that gospel to open the hearts of the people to supply their wants, they must agree on a price beforehand, and after preaching per agreement, have not gospel enough to make the people honest, but are often cheated out of their pay. Some sue the church, and thus obtain their wages. Do they live of the gospel, or of the law?

The Bible says pure and undefiled religion is to visit the fatherless and the widow, and to keep himself unspotted from the world. The ministers of our day, and the people who follow them, do neither of these. The world, the flesh, and the devil are in their very church, hanging in tassels from their pulpits, while the poor and suffering are scattered around them on every hand: And they have divided the world into parts; each one gaining all he can for his party, and stirring up prejudice and envy against others.

The Bible plainly declares that "the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom," while the priests say the fear of the devil is the beginning of wisdom. The Bible says again, the love of God leadeth men to repentance, while the clergy say the fear of torment and fire and brimstone should frighten them to repentance. In short, nearly all their doings prove them to be a company of blind guides, sponging their living out of laboring people by blinding their minds and keeping them from the light of truth. Their preaching is popular, a sort of lullaby, in which their flock delight. They see no danger. All is peace. The notes of warning as sounded by God's true watchmen are quickly denounced by their shepherd, and the slight ripple soon subsides, and they glide on in fancied security till too late! too late! J. L. HERSEY.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

It will be remembered that some time in December last, I made a statement in the Crisis, of my illness caused by an injury of the spine four years ago, and that I felt it duty to ask the prayers of the Lord's children that he might heal me. I wish now to acknowledge, with much gratitude, the receipt of many letters from different brethren, sympathizing with me, and advising such treatment as they thought important; each of which I had before tried, excepting the one from Bro. D. T. Taylor, which I intended to try as soon as practicable if the Lord did not answer prayer any other way.

Second. I wish to acknowledge that on the evening of Dec. 22d, I was paralyzed while in our prayer-meeting, so that I could not get up for about two hours, after which I was led home by Bro. York. The numbness wore off in three days, leaving me with natural feelings, such as I had not enjoyed for four years. I immediately responded to a call abroad to preach, and have since traveled ten weeks, over eight hundred miles, preaching and working constantly, have not had a paralytic shock, nor any numbness in my system, or soreness in my spine, yet the shocks had occurred once a week for several months, and the numbness in my limbs continued.

I am not yet strong, am easily fatigued, and when I labor hard am weary in the back. I have often spoken of this matter with much trembling, lest I be taken down again. Perhaps I am too unbelieving; yet I do believe the Lord has answered the prayers of those who have been praying for me, and laid his helping hand upon me. I praise and adore him for it. I feel something more than grateful. I glory in his holy name. I am satisfied he has done a mighty work in my mortal system. It must be him. Glory to the God of Abraham, Elijah, and Daniel.

If I fall under this difficulty again, or if I do not recover my full strength, I must believe the Lord has done what has been done for me. I could only ask recovery to work in his vineyard. I had no other ambition that I know of. I mean that all my strength shall go to spread his truth and glory. May he aid me by his grace so to do, and finally give me an abundant entrance into his coming kingdom. I. C. WELLCOME.

COMMUNION WITH GOD.

From the Adamic age to the present time, God has held communion with his devoted people. During the patriarchal and prophetic ages, that communion was mainly oral, and either mediately or immediately personal and audible. But "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spoke in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Now to hold communion with God under the christian dispensation, implies a mutual intercourse with him through faith in Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant; the Holy Spirit, by prayer, being the medium and manner of communication. "The Spirit helpeth our infirmities, for we know not what we should pray for as we ought, but the Spirit maketh intercession for us, ... according to the will of God." Rom. 8: 26, 17. Hence, if we would commune with God we must approach him in that faith which is the fruit of the Spirit; enabling us to "believe that he is, and that he is a Rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. 11: 6. Like the branch in the vine, with this exalted assurance, we are prepared for both the condition and the promise, that, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." John 15: 7. Thus the word of a changeless God is the reliance of faith, for all the sacred promises that are yea and amen in Christ.

But it is the will of God that we should ask in order to receive—seek, that we may find; knock, that it may be opened unto us; so, through all the way, the ultimate good of the creature is made subject to a condition; no Scripture promise, extending to immortality, is made absolute. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine"—the true principle, by which we hold communion with God. It is thus the true disciple may ask what he will, and it shall be done unto him; for he abides in God and God's words abide in him—there is no restriction—he may ask what he will. Again, negatively, "if a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and men gather them and cast them into the fire."

Now there are a vast number of nominal christians in the world; but of them all, how few abide in Christ! How few are living victorious over the world, in constant communion with God! How few attain to the standard of the apostles! They point to the altar, but who presents his body a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God? "How is the gold became dim! how is the most fine gold changed!" Is not the virtual negation of these living principles, the rock on which the church has split? May we not here find a solution to the question, Why have not the prayers of God's professed church received a more ready and plenary response?

My brethren, let us who wait the return of a soon coming Lord, feel the evidence that we abide in his love, and when we pray, "Thy kingdom come," that we hold communion with God in Spirit and in truth.

FLESH AND BLOOD.

1 Cor. 15: 50;—"Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." Gal. 5: 18;—"But if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law. Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like; of the which I tell you before, as I have told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

This text is usually perverted in quoting, and made to mean that flesh and blood cannot enter the kingdom of God; that these bodies are raised immaterial, in order to be undying and undecaying, as flesh and blood are; and hence this other quotation in unison with the above. 1 Cor. 15: 44;—"It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body"; and hence the body is made like the spirit. Unspeakable, unexplained, and miraculous this!

Now I understand that the earth will be restored, and that those persons who follow the dictation of the Spirit of God, in doing all that he has commanded, exercising faith in his Son, the medium of restoration, will be heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Rom. 8: 17. There is no salvation by the law, nor by the acts of the flesh; but "by grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God."—Eph. 2: 8. Hence there is no claim by blood relation, but by believing in Jesus Christ; and that in this age is the whole duty of man.

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN.

Beauty of person, like genius, is a dangerous, though brilliant gift. It may adorn or deform. It may contribute fresh charms to womanhood, or it may disfigure the lovely page with the mar-plots of vanity and pride.

That hand is handsomest that does the gracious deeds of charity and christian duty. Those lips are sweetest which utter the words of truth, hope, and affection. That face is loveliest which smiles on virtue.

Who cares whether Florence Nightingale has personal charms or not? She is one of the most lovely of earth's daughters—for she is beautiful in her acts of benevolence and love. "Handsome is that handsome does," expresses in simple phrase a beautiful thought.

The choicest charms that nature lavishes on her masterpiece,

"Are but the transient pageants of an hour;
And earthly pride is like the passing flower,
That springs to fall, and blossom but to die."

But the flowers of pure thought and feeling have an immortal freshness. These bloom only in the beautiful gardens of refined minds and christianized hearts.

We know and admire some of these beautiful women. They do not all have graceful forms or handsome faces, but they are surpassingly lovely nevertheless. The homes that cherish them are blessed. Society is enriched by them. They ennoble womanhood. They are ministering angels by the bedside of pain. They are Charity's almoners to the suffering ones of earth.

Dear ladies, be beautiful in your works. We shall be happy to record your charms for the admiration and love of the good and true. And God's angel amanuensis will enroll your names for immortal honor in that book, the pages of which are eternal.—Ex.

LOUIS HARMS.

Louis Harms is a plain Lutheran clergyman. In 1848 he was installed in the parish of Hermansburg, on the Luneburger Heath in the kingdom of Hanover. He is a man, according to the reports, of simple, direct nature, full of faith and the Holy Ghost. His parish, in which his father had been pastor before him, is made up of simple country people, and among them, as in most other parts of Germany, a dead orthodoxy had for the most part held sway. Under the new pastor and his earnest and faithful labors, the parish soon began to assume a new aspect. The christian life began to quicken, and in a short time the reformation became thorough, to a degree unknown, perhaps, in any other similar population in the world. In Hermansburg there are now no beggars, no rough street loungers, no drunkards, no ragged straggling children, and no paupers. In every house in the village there is family prayer, morning and evening; no one is absent from church except in case of sickness; the services in the week are as well attended as those of the Sabbath; the workmen have prayers in the fields, and throughout the parish the songs heard are not the common country ditties, but sweet sacred melodies, which joyfully express its christian life. During the year there are eleven thousand communicants, which must embrace nearly the whole of the adult population. The people live in great harmony, and are good farmers and good laborers. All this has come of the blessing of God inspiring and giving fruit to the labors of a single man.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

HOOPING COUGH AND SMALL POX.

Four things, or at most five, will make hooping cough not only safe, but short. First, keep the extremities constantly warm. Fail not, night nor day. Secondly, see that the patient breathes pure fresh air night and day. Bad air will overpower good lungs; how much more, lungs oppressed with the poisonous virus which is the exciting cause of hooping-cough. Thirdly, reduce whatever fever in the chest or trunk, by frequent manipulation, or exposure to the air if necessary, (of course, of that chest or trunk.) Resort to water can scarcely ever be needed. Fourthly, make a thorough business of magnetising the whole region of the lungs, (including chest and upper portion of back and sides,) either by hands laid on, or by passes, or by both. This magnetism will strengthen and heal the lungs, and soothe and stop the cough. Not only can you prevent hooping, but even coughing. You who do not believe it, try it and see. And do not fear to let your babes have the disease. I had rather a babe should have it, than any older person; for your healing, curing hands will cover a babe almost over, so that you can do anything you have a mind to with it. With your hands you can keep its extremities warm, reduce any fever, as well magnetise it by simply clasping it; in addition to which, you can cover it sufficiently for protection, and then carry it to the door or window to take the air.

And fifthly, in the case of a grown person, the cure may be greatly aided by friction of the whole surface, to excite the skin to vigorous action, thus relieving the lungs of exertion, and likewise of inflammation or fever.

Small pox is nothing but a fever tending to produce an eruption; treat it like a fever, and never mind the eruption; take care of the fever, and you will take care of the eruption: quench the fever, and there will be no eruption. First, last, and all the time, cool the patient off and keep him cool, and that is all you have to do. Air him all the time, and bathe him as often as the fever rises, if it is every half hour. For he may be so hot, and get hot so often, that you will need to stand him in a tub, and perfectly drench him with cold water, a dozen times a day. Pour and drench him as often as he gets hot. But do not chill him; stop when he is cool, and put him back to bed. But while you never chill him, still let his covering be little or nothing—even let him be perfectly nude. Cool, but never cold, must be your rule. And if you begin soon enough with him in this way, he will never be pitted, nor show a single trace of the disease. Small pox taken in season, and treated appropriately, is absolutely harmless as pancakes. It only needs more and severer treatment than other fevers, in proportion as it is higher and hotter.—JOS. TREAT.—Ex.

CHECKING PERSPIRATION.

If while perspiring, or while something warmer than usual, from exercise or a heated room, there is a sudden exposure in stillness to a still, cold air, or to a raw, damp atmosphere, or to a draft, whether at an open window or door, or street-corner, an inevitable result is a violent and instantaneous closing of the pores of the skin, by which waste and impure matters, which were making their way out of the system, are compelled to seek an exit through some other channel, and break out through some weaker part, not the natural one, and harm to that part is the result. The idea is presented by saying that the cold has settled in that part. To illustrate:

A lady was about getting into a small boat to cross the Delaware; but wishing first to get an orange at the fruit-stand, she ran up the bank of the river, and on her return to the boat found herself much heated, for it was summer, but there was a little wind on the water, and the clothing soon felt cold to her; the next morning she had a severe cold, which settled on her lungs, and within the year she died of consumption.

A stout, strong man was working in a garden in May; feeling a little tired about noon, he sat down in the shade of the house and fell asleep; he waked up chilly; inflammation of the lungs followed, ending, after two years of great suffering, in consumption. On opening his chest, there was such an extensive decay, that the yellow matter was scooped out by the cupful.

A Boston ship-owner, while on the deck of one of his vessels, thought he would "lend a hand" in some emergency; and, pulling off his coat, worked with a will, until he perspired freely, when he sat down to rest a while, enjoying the delicious breeze from the sea. On attempting to rise, he found himself unable, and was so stiff in his joints that he had to be carried home and put to bed, which he did not leave until the end of two years, when he was barely able to hobble down to the wharf on crutches.

A lady, after being unusually busy all day, found herself heated and tired toward sundown of a summer's day. She concluded she would rest herself by taking a drive to town in an open vehicle. The ride made her uncomfortably cool, but she warmed herself up by an hour's shopping, when she turned homeward; it being late in the evening, she found herself more decidedly chilly than before. At midnight she had pneumonia (inflammation of the lungs,) and in three months had the ordinary symptoms of confirmed consumption.
